Following a well established custom, Cathedral authorities have arranged to have preachers of outstanding ability at the people's open air Evensong service every Sunday at four o'clock, and the preacher on the last Sunday in July was Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware. These services are broadcast by radio every Sunday. The Bishop of Washington, who is out of the city on his vacation, usually preaches at these afternoon services during the winter. This service, winter and summer, has become very popular, and attracts hundreds of people, residents in the city and visitors to the Capital.

Old Diocesan Institution.

The Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, one of the older institutions of the Diocese, made a radical change in the procedure of its management during the past year, by the appointment of Rev. Calvert E. Bucks as Superintendent. This is the first time that a clergyman has held this position, and the importance of the office is emphasized by the selection of Mr. Bucks, who is a young and active minister, and who was at that time rector of Christ Church, Washington Parish. The hospital has grown steadily, from its beginning, and is now ranked by the American College of Surgeons as a Class A institution.

During the past year, twenty-four per cent of the 16,765 days of hospital care furnished, were given to free patients, and other service was given to patients able to assume only a small part of the expense involved. To the new Superintendent this is a "glorious achievement", and shows "how well the hospital is realizing the ideal of its founders".

Dispensary patients numbering 17,580, of all creeds and color, 9,867 laboratory examinations and 4,335 operations performed are some of the interesting figures of the report of 1927.

The burden of meeting the cost of this work cannot be met entirely by hospital earnings, and must be taken care of by friends of the hospital and church people. The Board of Lady Managers is composed of committees from the several parishes, and the months of the year are assigned to the parishes for the special care of the home.

The governing bodies of the hospital include a Board of Incorporators and a Board of Governors, with the Bishop of Washington, President, ex-officio of both organizations. A Medical Board, a Medical and Surgical Staff and the Board of Lady Managers are other units of the organization of the hospital. Of the Board of Lady Managers, Mrs. Walter Harrison, of Christ Church, Georgetown, is President.

Conferences During Convention.

Many kinds of conferences will be held during the General Convention of the Church in Washington next October, and one which is perhaps somewhat obscure and unknown, but nevertheless important, is the Conference of Church Workers Among the Deaf. The Treasurer of this conference is Rev. H. Lorraine Tracy, 518 9th Street N. E., Washington, D. C., who is also missionary to the deaf in the Diocese of Washington, Virginia, Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia and West Virginia. St. Barnabas Mission of St. Mark's Church is the Washington headquarters for Mr. Tracy's work, and services for the deaf are held there regularly.

The conference will be held at St. Mark's Church, 32d and A Streets, S. E., Washington, D. C., from October 19th through October 21st. The program, which has already been published, includes business sessions, conferences, services in St. Mark's Church, especially celebrations of the Holy Communion, piigrimage to Washington Cathedral, social hours, including luncheons and dinners, and a closing evening service and conference sermon, to which the public is especially invited.

Deaf Christians.

Church work among the deaf was started in New York in 1852 by Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D. In 1859 he established missions in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington, and from these centers it has extended into nearly every Diocese in America. At the present time there are several thousand communicants, hundreds of mission stations, fourteen priests, two deacons and a large number of lay helpers. There are three churches, provided exclusively for the deaf, one in New York, one in Philadelphia and one in Chicago.

The importance of the work is seen by the fact that there are 89,000 deaf people in the United States, the number in the Province of Washington alone being approximately 13,000. The Church, through its mission to the deaf, endeavors to provide these silent people with opportunities for religious worship and instruction, intellectual and social enjoyment and pastoral care. Though mission stations are established the work will always be primarily a mission to the individual. Although officially under the Protestant Episcopal Church, it serves all, irrespective of condition, race or denomination, and is usually recognized for its liberal ness. The services of the Book of principles and broad scope of useful-Common Prayer are always used by the missionaries and their beauty makes as strong an appeal to those who "hear with the eye" as those who are known as "hearing people".

The support of this work is undertaken largely by the Church, with what little assistance the deaf are able to give. Ephphatha Sundays are suggested as appropriate days for offerings for this work, as upon these days the Gospels tell of miracles of healing the deaf by our Saviour. These days are the twelfth Sunday after Trinity and the third Sunday in Advent.

Periodical.

The official organ of the Conference of Church Workers Among the Deaf is entitled, 'The Silent Missionary", and is published monthly by Rev. Oliver J. Whildin, missionary, 605 Wilson Avenue, Roland Park, Baltimore, Md.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Camps at St. Simon's.

Two successful and worth-while camps were conducted in June and July by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Georgia on St. Simon's Island, Ga. The first, for young people, was held from June 18th to 29th, with a regular attendance of seventy-three, exclusive of week-end visitors. On the "Bishop's Day" there was an attendance of eighty-five. At that time the Bishop of the Diocese baptized and confirmed one of the young people at a most impressive out-of-door service, the congregation looking out over the "marshes of Glynn". The daily program consisted of an early morning "watch-word" service, breakfast, classes, athletics, dinner, rest, recreation and swimming, supper, night program and "good night" service. All of the classes were held out of doors when the weather permitted. The Rev. W. A. Jonnard was director of the young people's camp, and the other members of the faculty and their subjects were Rev. D. C. Wright, D. D., "The Bible"; Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, "The Life of Christ"; Rev. Robb White, Jr., "Personal Religion", for boys, and Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, "Personal Religion" for girls. Rev. Royal K. Tucker, "The Prayer Book", assisted by the Rev. David E. Holt, chaplain of the Sewanee Military Academy.

The second camp was the adult teacher training institute under the direction of the Rev. D. C. Wright, D. D., vice-chairman of the department, the registration was thirty-seven, exclusive of residents on the island and those who rented cottages for the two weeks and who attended the classes. Morning classes in credit giving courses were held from 9 to 1, and in the afternoon there was recreation and surf-bathing. Each evening there was a program, sometimes serious and sometimes entertaining. Besides the director the faculty was composed of Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, who repeated his course on "The Life of Christ"; Rev. W. W. Memminger, of the Diocese of Atlanta, who took the place of the Rev. J. A. Schaad, who was ill and unable to fill his engagement. Mr. Memminger's subject was "Church Teachings: the Creed and the Catechism"; and Mrs. J. W. Griffeth taught "The Church School Curriculum". Recreational features were in charge of Miss Buford Aiken.

During the institute the Rev. Harry S. Cobey held a two days' conference on Christian social service, Mr. Cobey being chairman of the Diocesan department. This was the third annual institute for teacher training, the other two having been held in Savannah two successive Octobers.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Holiday House.

Four different centers in the Diocese of Michigan were busy with the activities of widely differing groups during the early summer. The Girls' Friendly Society Holiday House at Pine Lake has been a blessing to the girls of two generations. It is becoming more and more an all-the-year round rendezvous for clergy and leadership conferences of all kinds, but its principal work is done in June, July and August, when its accommodation for fifty or more is taxed by a constant succession of girls, mostly coming for a week or two of marvelous recuperation, wherein swimming, tennis, fishing and hikes have their part with quiet evening hours and chapel services in the rebuilding of many lives.

Camp Frisbie.

Twenty miles further north in the same lake district lies Camp Frisbie. Here in the first week of the summer vacation from school is held the Older Boys' Conference. For a week some sixty or seventy boys of high school age are gathered with experienced leaders to consider vocational matters, and following this there is a much larger influx of younger boys from many different parishes to share in all the joys and privileges of a summer camp under the best leadership.

Conferences.

Then at Hillsdale, a hundred miles west of Detroit, there gathers at the end of June a group of some two hundred of the choicest spirits of the Diocese, for ten days of study and recreation under nationally known leaders. This year the conference preacher was Bishop Warren L. Rogers, and among the faculty were Dr. Arthur Haire-Forster, of Western Theological Seminary; Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., student chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. Adelaide T. Case, of Columbia University Teachers' College, and many others.

Away in the north, at Black Lake, where the cool winds blow over vast tracts of State forests, a new conference was launched this year for the special benefit of those unable to make the 300-mile trip to the conferences in the southern parts of the Diocese. From July 2-8 was held a leadership conference for adolescents; July 8-15, a Girls' Camp, and July 15-22, a Boys' Camp. These were organized by the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, the staff including Mr. Ernest E. Piper, the Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Edinger, Miss Ethel Elliott, Miss L. M. Oram and Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas.

Mariners' Inn.

Mariners' Inn, a 100-bed dormitory for men, is being made ready for opening in September by the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, the Rev. Harry J. Pearson, director of the mission, announced recently.

The dormitory will be located on the three upper floors of the old Central Hotel at the southeast corner of Jefferson and Woodward Avenues. The rooms now are being remodeled and showers are being installed. This is the second important development in the last few years of the large-scale relief work being done at old Mariners' Church. About two years ago Taylor Hall was established, a place where men can come for a pleasant evening and have a bite to eat, and opportunities to read and write; and, finally, the staff of the mission has been able to give considerable assistance to thousands in unraveling knotty situations of one kind and another, and providing needed aid.

When Taylor Hall was opened, it was planned to have a dormitory, but suitable space was not available. Then the building where Mariners' Inn will be housed came into the possession of the Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, following litigation, and recently Mr. Pearson obtained permission to establish the dormitory here.

As the building had been leased by the Diocese to a drug company, the Mission is leasing the three upper floors from the concern for five years.

The undertaking is necessitating a capital investment of $5,000. The beds and bedding, costing $1,500, have been donated by Fred Wardell.

Most of the beds in the dormitory will cost the men thirty cents a night until the capital investment has been liquidated, after which the nightly charge will be twenty-five cents. A number of the beds will be reserved for men who are unable to pay anything.

INDIANA.

Rt. Rev. Jos. M. Francis, D. D., Bishop.

Widow of Late Bishop White Dies in Goshen Hospital.

Mrs. Marie Louise Holbrook White, seventy, widow of the late John Hazen White, Bishop of the Diocese of Northern Indiana, died in Goshen Hospital at 4 o'clock, Thursday afternoon, of injuries suffered in an automobile accident at Dunlap, Ind., five miles west of Goshen, Wednesday morning.

At her bedside when she died wrre members of her family and a few intimate friends who had been summoned to the Goshen Hospital after Mrs. White had been fatally injured.

The handicap of her advanced age and the severe shock she suffered in the crash when the White car turned over in a ditch to avoid a collision with an approaching machine, were described as the principal contributing factors to her death.

Friends Mourn Passing.

A great host of friends in church and social circles who had been intimately acquainted with Mrs. White for a score of years, and had admired her activities and her accomplishments, Friday mourned her passing.

From the time of the accident shortly before noon, Wednesday, in which Mrs. White's son, the Rev. Russell H. White, and her daughter, Miss Mary May White, of New York, were also injured, hospital attaches held out little hope for her recovery. Mrs. White was the more severely injured of the three.

During the twenty-eight hours in which she lived after the accident, Mrs.

COLLECT FOR TENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Let Thy merciful ears, O Lord, be open to the prayers of Thy humble servants, and, that they may obtain their petitions; make them to ask such things as shall please Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"B-U-T."

Lord, I would follow, BUT—
First, I would see what means that wondrous call
That peals so sweetly through Life's rainbow hall,
That thrills my heart with quivering golden chords,
And fills my soul with joys seraphical.

Lord, I would follow, BUT—
First, I would see the end of this high road
That stretches straight before me, fair and broad;
So clear the way I cannot go astray,
It surely leads me equally to God.

Who answers Christ's insistent call
Must give himself, his life, his all,
Without one backward look,
Who sets his hand unto the plow,
And glances back with anxious brow,
His calling hath mistook.
Christ claims him wholly for His own;
He must be Christ's and Christ's alone.
—John Oxenham.

Making the Dumb Articulate.

One of the Koptic manuscripts relates a story of our Lord which is in such harmony with His character as it is presented in the Canonical Gospels that it is not difficult to believe that it might have happened. The story is that one day He met a man who was cruelly beating a heavily laden ass, which in attempting to climb a hill had fallen down and seemed unable to rise. Our Lord asked the man if he did not see that the load was too heavy and that the animal was in distress. Quick to defend himself, the man asserted that the ass was his own property. On being appealed to, the disciples of our Lord declared that they knew the man and knew the ass to be his. Then, according to the story, our Lord said to the disciples: "Do you not see how she bleeds, and do you not hear how she laments and cries?" But the disciples said: "Nay, Lord, we do not hear that she laments and groans." Then was Jesus sad and said: "Woe will come to those who hear not how she cries to her Heavenly Creator—but thrice woe unto him of whom she complains in his distress." And He healed the ass. Then He said to the man: "Go and smite no more thy beast, that thou mayest not thyself be in misery."

Does not this appealing story reveal the fundamental cause of all man's cruelty to defenceless animals?—lack of imagination due to a deficiency in love. "Do you not see how she bleeds, and do you not hear how she laments and cries?" asked Jesus. But no—neither the owner of the creature nor the disciples had thought of the beast suffering pain, for their imagination was not quickened to hear the anguished cry of the dumb. And since imagination is always present where love is strong, and since love is an absolute quality which should govern man's attitude not only to His Heavenly Father and his brothers and sisters, but to all flesh and to all life, animal as well as human, Jesus sadly shows that woe must come to those who do not hear the cries with which suffering beasts protest against the abuse of man's authority. The righteous man is merciful to his beast, and he who is not merciful is not righteous. Blessed are the merciful for mercy is a quality of character that is handmaiden to the love of God.

It is extraordinary that in the brief account of our Lord's life preserved for us in the Gospels so many of our Lord's references to animals should have been recorded. Birds, foxes, sheep, wolves, the camels, the oxen, asses, serpents, doves, calves, hens, chickens—these are all repeatedly mentioned in such a natural way that it is evident Jesus had studied their ways. When a man is interested in animals, and when his heart is warm with sympathy for the joys and sorrows of their existence, stories of them will be continually on his lips, and he will frequently use their experiences as illustrations of great principles of life. So it was with Jesus. When He saw an injured or dead sparrow, He thought of the Creator's care and love. "Not one of them falls to the ground outside the help of your Father." For when one loves God he will love all creation, too, and he will perceive that God's concern reaches over all. It is also true that when one loves all creation he must love creation's Creator and our tender treatment of God's lesser children will inevitably bring to us Coleridge's experience:

"He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small,
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

We cannot begin too soon to awaken within the child an interest in his little sisters (as St. Francis of Assisi called the birds), and an affection for all living things. To have a knowledge of the habits of the wild free creatures of forest and lake is to recognize and appreciate the joy which each day brings to them and to desire that they should have all the happiness which God intended them to have. With this knowledge of animal life will be born a humaneness and consideration without which some of the noblest qualities of human character cannot come to perfect fruition. Therefore, both from the point of view of the child and of society, it is vastly more important than we sometimes realize that the child should be taught to regard sympathetically the rights of every animal. "Thoughtless and unfeeling conduct," says Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, "which rapidly develops into downright cruelty, is exercised first and most largely toward the brute creation, because of its helplessness and the larger opportunity. It may begin very early. An innocent baby will, in his exuberant happiness, squeeze a poor kitten nearly to death and try to put his fingers into its eyes; but the baby's innocence is no reason for allowing him a pastime which gives pain to a living creature. The kitten has rights which even a baby can be taught to respect; and the baby has the right to an early training which will make him, by and by, a benevolent and humane member of society, and not a selfish and thoughtless one."—Canadian Churchman.

The Last Beatitude.

All through St. John's Gospel, the narrative is made to lead up to some pregnant utterance by our Lord, which brings out the deepest meaning of the story. The miracle of the Five Thousand leads up to the words, "I am the Bread of Life". The healing of the blind man is followed by, "I am the Light of the World"; the raising of Lazarus by, "I am the Resurrection and the Life". In the same way the appearances after the Resurrection are so recorded as to lead up to the words, "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed".

These emphatic sayings in St. John all have the same character. They proceed from Christ, and they make everything centre in His Person, who is Himself the Light of the World, the Bread of Life, the Resurrection and the Life, and the one object of the faith which brings blessedness. Further, they are spiritual. They are comments on some particular external event, and they interpret that event as symbolic of some universal spiritual truth. The single particular occurrence, in being what it is, points beyond itself to something which is always and everywhere true. It is a parable or allegory of what Jesus Christ is doing, now and always, for the human race.—Dean Inge.

The Revealer.

"One of the darkest notes of our time is the seeming futility of a material system. One of the severest burdens men bear today is 'the heavy and the weary weight of all this unintelligible world'. Life interpreted in purely secular terms looks meaningless and devoid of purpose. On just this point the gospel strikes its clearest note. It brings a vision of relief. It declares that a universe which has a person like Christ in it cannot be through and through clanking matter. A love stronger than death triumphed in Him. Gentleness, tenderness, forgiveness, sacrifice, peace beyond understanding, and joy in the face of pain, defeat and death were controlling forces of his life. They are traits of the spirit, not masses of matter in motion. Here as nowhere else another world has broken in on this material system. Some one has come who could not possibly be a product of a universe of atoms and physical energies. I do not care for the moment whether we call Him a 'mutation' or a 'miracle'; for it is enough for me that some one came into the course of history and revealed in a personal life spiritual realities of a most extraordinary type.

"We are confronted all the time with the blunder and sin and chaos and confusion of human life. We are only too familiar with man and failure. Every newspaper in its headlines shouts at us with a megaphone that miserable thing that man can become, and everywhere we can see the black splotches of his spilled ink. Sometimes we can hardly stand the world as it files by us in its mad rush for stupid and sordid ends. Once more we need a vision of relief. And Christ brings it to us. We see in him what life can become when it is interpenetrated with inspiration, consecration, enthusiasm and love. He reveals man as truly and completely as He reveals God."—Dr. Rufus Jones.

Would You Choose?

Gene Scott Wright.

Life is hard, and life is wearing—Life has given you many a blow;
Are you anxious for your fairing, are you willing now to go?
On the long road you have traveled many a milestone marks the way—
On the breast of storm-swept waters you have tossed for many a day.

Now in smoother waters gliding while still daylight hues prevail,
Are you anxious for the harbor, longing
now to strike your sail?
Or would you prefer to linger, still enjoy the late sunshine,
Drifting with the quiet current, companioned by a peace divine?

Better leave it with the Master, who has brought you to this day;
Choose not—you are blind and simple;
He can see and guard your way.
Trust Him for each hour's adventure;
Faith assures a happy end.
Naught can baffle, naught can conquer, one who owns Him as a Friend.

A True Shepherd.

About the middle of the eighteenth century, John Frederick Oberlin, Bachelor of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy of a great university, masterful student and courageous leader, declared that "he did not wish to labor in some comfortable pastoral charge"; where he could be at ease; but "the question is, where can I be most useful"?

God answered his prayer, and at the age of twenty-seven, this man, who might have had a powerful church in a great center, entered upon his life task, under the most forbidding conditions, in the Ban-de-la-Roche, among the "blue Alsatian mountains". It was a region with six months' winter; at times as cold as the shores of the Baltic, a wind like ice coming down from the mountain tops; the sick and the dying were to be visited in remote, wild, solitary places among the forests.

This little parish, set high in the rugged Vosges, consisted of not over one hundred families at the time Oberlin came to it. The region had for centuries been the football of war, its fields had been harried, its manhood drained for martial conflict.

In all this time it had been a battle for sheer existence. In the short summer season the people gathered barely enoughe food to sustain their impoverished life through the long winter, only to renew the struggle when the snows melted. With no trades and without industries other than the rudest agriculture, and with no intelligent cultivation of the soil for this, their roads mere by-paths, their streams without bridges, their food scanty and coarse, what could be looked for but hopeless and hapless lives?

The people were taxed far beyond their power to pay. Their poverty was beyond description. They were practically slaves. They had no schools and were igonrant to a degree. Physical misery and moral degradation were wedded.

Note the picture of this same parish a half-century later, near the close of this historic pastorate. The hills and valleys of the Ban-de-la-Roche had become fertile and fruitful. Everywhere there were evidences of a prosperous agriculture. Every acre was well tilled. Each homestead had its orchards and flower gardens. Splendid mountain roads and substantial bridges gave access to the great world beyond the hills. Schools flourished, schools in which the pedagogy of Pestalozzi and Froebel was antedated; schools in which were taught nature study, agriculture, civics, aethestics. A local improvement society concerned itself with developing the beauty about home and farmstead. An agricultural club flourished. A well-ordered system of irrigation had been installed. Peace and plenty reigned supreme. Thrift marked the labor and savings, intelligence directed the industry of all. Simple, but charming, houses covered a beautiful family life. Religion served to bind men and women to their fellows and their God.

The recognized genius in all this transformation was Pastor Oberlin. It was that his patient persistence and magnetic enthusiasm had finally overcome the inertia of indifference and active opposition. In the closing years of his life, the King of France conferred upon him the medal of the Legion of Honor, for his many efforts which had resulted in making the district flourishing and happy. The National Agricultural Society decreed him a gold medal for "prodigies accomplished in silence in this almost unknown corner of the Vosges, in a district before his arrival almost savage", and into which he had brought "the best methods of agriculture and the purest lights of civilization".—From "The Country Church and The Rural Problem".

THE SUNSHINE SPEAKS.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

I am the breath of the sun in the sky;
I am of the color of the gold men love;
I am come from the heart of the God above;
I bring a message to men hurrying by;

I teach of justice, and mercy, and peace;
I wrap me about the earth all the while
With a golden veil made of God's glad smile;
I tell the world the joy of sin's release;

I am sad when I see men's wrong-doing;
For the God from whose heart I came so longs
To hear His earth-children sing happy songs
Conceived of the promise of love's wooing:
God might have made the earth without light;
God might have given us darkness and night.

With Our Minds.

The common utterance of the thoughtless that it does not matter what you believe, so long as you live a good life, is utterly silly. No one would tell a child that it did not matter whether he believed that fire would burn him, or that he would be killed if he fell from the twentieth story of a building. A wise parent begins at once to establish certain truths in his child's mind to guard his child's physical safety. Why should a man be careless or indifferent about the truths which guard the more important life of the spirit? It does make a difference what we believe in every department of life. Being intelligent, we must not count on happening to be good; we must find out the laws of the spiritual world.

For all these reasons I urge upon you to discover what such words as these mean: the Sovereignty of God; God's Transcendence; God's Immanence; the Incarnation; the Atonement; the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; the Beloved Community; the Forgiveness of Sins; Immortality; the Infinite Love of God. You will study what men of old thought about these doctrines; you will consult your earnest and wise neighbors; and then you will make up your minds what you believe. You are not to be a parrot, saying over what you have heard another say: you are to be a living soul, listening first to men, and then listening to the still small Voice, and so reaching what will be for you a firm conviction of the truth. It may be that God will reveal to you what He has never revealed to any man before. In any case, the faith will be yours, and you will possess it with joy.

So I say, study the faith of the Church. Stand in reverence before it. Make it, so far as you honestly can, your own. Always remember that an inseparable part of our duty to God is to love Him with our minds.—The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D.

Happiness.

Happiness goes out from the heart before it comes in. It never by any chance stays at home.

You can harvest it for the common good, but you cannot store it for your individual use.

You can lend it, but you cannot borrow it.

You can earn it, but you cannot buy it.

You can spend it, but you cannot accumulate it.

A man must contribute to the stock of human joys before he can participate in its profits.

To seek happiness without giving it is a futile quest, and all our longings for it, if we have not learned to give it to others, are as empty bottles in the wine-cellar of the soul.

Happiness never really was any good in this world but to give away.

From Saul to Paul.

Put Saul's "breathing out threatenings and slaughter" against Christ's flock side by side with Saul when he was halted in his mad career as persecutor by the risen Christ, and what a distance yawns between them! Can two such opposites be one and the same person? With God nothing is impossible. If He can make His sun to melt the beds of ice and snow on the mountain tops and turn them into streams of living water to refresh and fructify the earth below, He can do a much greater thing and change a misguided zealot who breathes out threatenings and slaughter against His people into a powerful witness for the very Christ whom he once rejected and despised. When Saul was thus transformed into Paul, one of the greatest eras in the history of the world was made to dawn; for the zealous and fiery Saul was changed into the most zealous and wonderful preacher of the Cross and the resurrection the world has ever known. One of the strongest evidences of the truth of Christianity is the great Apostle Paul. To this day he stands out as the Church's chief witness and interpreter of the truth as it centers in the person and work of the world's Redeemer. When we read about the miracles which were wrought by Him, who in Himself was the outstanding miracle of the ages, let us not fail to give this miracle which changed a Saul into a Paul its proper place as the greatest of them all which Jesus wrought. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" is now his supreme desire to have answered. Hitherto he had done what the Jewish Council had commanded and felt that he was doing God's will. The death of Stephen met with his full consent and approval. From now on he counts not his own life too precious to do and to dare that Christ may be made known and glorified. Wherever He is known and welcomed this same change is sure to take place.—Lutheran.

A PRAYER.

E. G.

Over the gray horizon
Peeps a brilliant sun—
Far to the West night sinketh,
In the East the day is begun.
I drop to my knees in prayer,
And this is what I pray—
That I may live a clean life,
O God, and show some one
The Way.

Give me strength to stand,
A courage that will not fail,
And I pray my lips may touch
And drink from the Holy Grail.
Give to me understanding,
And keep my thoughts so sweet
That if my Christ I should see,
I'd stand ready Him
To meet.

THE JUNIORS' DEPARTMENT.

W Wonderful Day at Capernaum.

Miriam and James wakened early on the Sabbath. It was a most lovely day. The sun was shining from a perfectly blue sky; across the sea the hills could be clearly seen, range behind range, until they melted away in a purple haze, and the lake lay so calm and still with scarcely a ripple upon it, that it seemed as if the sea itself was taking a Sabbath rest. The only sounds which broke the stillness were the lowing of the oxen and the baa-ing of the lambs on the hillside, and from time to time the scream of the sea-birds swinging and darting over the water.

The children set off with their parents, and as they passed along they talked of all that had happened the previous day.

"Father told me last night that he is a disciple, too," said Miriam.

"How splendid! I am so glad! I wonder is mother a disciple as well?"

"Of course, I don't know for certain," said Miriam, nodding her head wisely. "I believe she is a disciple, for I heard her talking with father last night about the Master. Mother didn't say much, but I heard her tell father that she had been talking to the mother of the Lord Jesus yesterday morning; they seem to be great friends. She said that the lady had told her wonderful things which she would never forget. Oh, yes, James, I think you will find that mother is a disciple."

The synagogue was very full of people, most of whom were quite poor people, for the richer people lived in another part of the town where there was another synagogue. Inside, it was just the same as the one in Nazareth, except that there seemed to be more beggars and crippled and blind people standing round the door or crouching against the wall at the back.

Miriam and James hunted for their friends and soon they saw James and John sitting with Zebedee, their father. Then they noticed the mother of the Lord Jesus, and they guessed that the lady sitting with her was Salome, the mother of James and John. Peter and Andrew sat side by side. Peter looked very downcast and Miriam guessed that his wife's mother was not so well. There was no sign of the Lord Jesus, and Miriam began to wonder if He had gone away again. Then, much to her surprise, she saw Him at the back of the synagogue among the very poor people.

The service began and went on in the usual way, and as it was drawing to its close suddenly a strange moaning cry, as if some one was in pain, startled all the congregation. Everybody turned round to see what it was, and James heard a man near him say:

"That's mad Jonathan in one of his fits. He shouldn't be allowed to come to a place like this."

Some of the people tried to carry him out, but he began to fight and to scream, rolling his eyes in such a terrible way that some of the women cried out in terror. The whole place was in confusion, when suddenly the children heard a voice they knew. It rang through the building, although it was not loud, but it was so firm and calm that every sound was hushed except the wails of the madman. It was the Lord Jesus speaking:

"Be not afraid, good people. All is well. Let me come to that poor fellow."

The people made way for Him and He stood over mad Jonathan as he lay rolling about and moaning on the floor. He stood over him and spoke to him in a voice which sounded like a king giving a command. Then there was a dead silence in the synagogue, and every one saw mad Jonathan leap to his feet, all the terrible glare had passed out of his eyes, and his face looked tender and kind. He gazed for a moment into the face of the Lord Jesus, and then dropped on his knees at His feet. The silence was broken by the voice of the man James had heard a moment before:

"Now that's a wonderful thing! Jonathan is cured of his madness. I wonder how that happened. Who is the man who has done this? There's Jonathan's wife, look!" he said to the man sitting by him.

A woman was pushing her way through the people, and when she reached the man who had been healed of his madness, she knelt down by his side at the feet of the Lord Jesus. The tears were streaming down her face, and the man who had been mad put his arms round his wife and kissed her. The Lord Jesus laid His hands on their heads as if He was blessing them, and as they looked up into His face with eyes full of gratitude, He smiled down at them in the wonderful way the children knew so well and walked quietly out of the synagogue.

The people streamed out after Him.

"I shall not forget that sight so long as I live," said one man to his wife. "There was mad Jonathan in one of his worst fits and all that that Man did was just to speak to him, and he was cured. Why, there is Jonathan walking along with his wife, and carrying their child! I tell you this is a wonderful thing which has happened, and we have not heard the end of it. No, I wouldn't have missed that sight for a very great deal."

"Well, I am going to tell blind Lydia all about this," replied his wife. "If this man can heal a madman by talking to him, He might be able to do something for her."

Everybody seemed to be in a state of great excitement outside the synagogue, and the noise was getting greater and greater as they all tried to speak at once.

"Does any one know who the man is?" asked one of the crowd.

"I believe His name is Jesus, but He is a stranger to the town," answered another. "It's a mystery to me how He healed Jonathan. Poor fellow! he has been ill for years past and recently he has been getting rapidly worse. But this Jesus spoke to him, and I saw the madness disappear from his eyes at once."

Miriam turned to her brother.

"Oh, James, let us go and tell the Lord Jesus, and see if He can help Peter. I am sure He can."

"Come on, Miriam," said James; "let's hurry, for there is no time to be lost."

They guessed where they would find the Lord Jesus, and sure enough, there He was down by the seaside, walking up and down slowly by the water's edge. He saw the children approaching and called out in welcome:

"Well, little friends, and what do you want?"

"Master," said Miriam, "Peter's wife's mother is ill. The rabbi says she is dying and Peter loves her very much. Please come and help him."

"Do you really think I can help, Miriam?" He said, as He looked at her very earnestly. She nodded her head two or three times.

"Master, James and I know you can; we are quite certain that you can make her well."

The Lord Jesus looked down at her and smiled in His wonderful way, and said:

"I was waiting for some one to ask Me to help poor Peter in his trouble, for I can only help people who ask Me and trust Me. Let us go to him." And taking each of the children by the hand, He set off for Peter's house.

Many of the neighbors were standing about in the street as the Lord Jesus and the two children drew near Peter's house, and when they saw Him go in they came crowding round the door. Meanwhile, the children followed on behind the Master as He walked into the sick-room.

On the bed lay the dying woman, gasping for breath and moaning weakly. Leaning over her was the children's mother, bathing the poor sufferer's burning head with cold water. Peter and his wife were looking on with drawn, anxious faces, but as the Lord Jesus appeared Peter started with surprise. The Lord looked at him a little sadly and spoke quietly to him:

"I want my disciples and my friends to tell Me all their troubles and sorrows. Why didn't you ask Me to help you, Peter?"

Without waiting for a reply, He walked over to the bed and took the hands of the sick woman in both of His own. Immediately, the terrible moaning ceased, and the lines of pain vanished from her face. Suddenly she opened her eyes. Her gaze wandered round the room, dwelling for a moment on each face, and last of all she looked up into the face of the Lord Jesus. He looked steadily at her and then said something so softly that no one else in the room could catch the words. Then to every one's surprise, she sat up in bed and smiled happily at them all.

"You must give her something to eat and then let her go to sleep, for she is quite well now, Peter," said the Lord.

Miriam and James fell down on their knees before the Lord Jesus. He lifted up His hand and blessed them, saying: "Joy be with you, my children," and passed down the street and away.—From "The Master and His Friends", by H. A. Wilson.

Story of Ali Hafed.

In a beautiful valley near the banks of a stream there lived a man named Ali Hafed. The home in which he lived with his wife and children was a comfortable and happy one, for the small farm yielded enough for their needs. One day a stranger came and asked to spend the night. Ali welcomed him. As they talked the stranger, who had traveled much and was a man of great learning, told of the jewels he had seen. He told about the diamonds, told how diamonds had been found in places where a river came down over white sands between mountains.

After the traveler had gone, Ali was so possessed by the thought of the fortune so easily to be made by finding diamonds that he could think only of that. He sold his farm, left his wife and children with relatives and friends, and went away to distant lands.

Months grew into years, and Ali continued to look for diamonds, but found none. Finally his family was reduced to beggary and had to live with whomever might take them, for Ali never came back.

One day a traveler came to the home, which was occupied by another, and asked to spend the night. As he talked, he said to the man, "You are not the man who lived here when I was this way before."

"No," answered the owner, "poor Ali sold his home to me and went far away to find some diamonds."

They talked more and the traveler said, "What are those beautiful stones which I see on your mantel"?

"Some childre nfound them in the bed of the river and brought them here," was the reply.

Taking his magnifying glass, he said, "Why, these are diamonds, the very jewels which Ali went away to find. They were here at his very doors."

THIS LOVELY WORLD.

I love the sky above my head;
I love the trees so tall;
I love the pretty little uowers
Almost the best of all.

I love the wind that fans my cheek;
I love the raindrops, too;
I love the little laughing brook
That runs so fast; don't you?

I love the stars tnat wink at me;
I love the great big moon;
I love the little flying clouds
That disappears so soon.

I love Jack Frost in winter time;
I love the snowflakes whirled;
I love—I love just everything
In all this lovely world.

TAPS.

Day is done,
Gone the sun,
From the lake,
From the hills,
From the sky,
All is well,
Safely rest,
God is nigh.

Good-night,
We muts part;
God keeps watch
O'er us all,
Through the night.
We shall meet,
In the morn,
Good-night.

Few men suspect how much mere talk fritters away spiritual energy—that which should be spent in action, spends itself in words. Hence he who restrains that love of talk lays up a fund of spiritual strength.—F. W. Robertson.

Men confess everything but their own besetting sins. They steer quite clear of these. Whoever heard a man say, "O Lord, I am as proud as Satan—humble me"; or, "O Lord, I am so mean and stingy that it is only with great pain that I can unclose my fists—make me generous"?—H. W. Beecher.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doc trinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL IN THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER.

By Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D.

Bishop E. Cecil Seaman, of North Texas, writes:

Bishop Beckwith's Course, "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer", presents the doctrine and worship of the Holy Catholic Church as interpreted and applied by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

The chief value of the course lies in the fact that it presents the Church's message in the Church's own words, and the student is led, subject by subject, and step by step, through the only authoritative, official and binding expression the Church gives us, which expression is in the Book of Common Prayer.

One of the great values of the Course is its consideration of the child as of first importance. The Course teaches the child and the child learns the subject, and in such a way as to make the Church's teaching an integral part of the child's intellectual, moral, and spiritual life.

Grade III is an analysis of each and every part of the Book of Common Prayer, a faithful study of this Grade illuminates the Church's standards of doctrine and worship.

As one trained for Confirmation in early youth by the author of this course, I have never found the Book of Common Prayer inadequate as a guide for private or public devotions. I have never found any of its teachings at variance with the simple, practical teaching of the New Testament, and I have found it always a source of strength in the development of my faith in the Blessed Trinity and my confidence in the teaching of the Church.

Without a thorough knowledge of the Contents of Grade III of "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer" I cannot imagine myself teaching with any degree of satisfaction to myself or to my class any of the following subjects:

God with Man,
God's Great Family,
Church Worship and Membership,
The Long Life of the Church,
The Church and Her Mission, or any kindred subjects.

Rev. Wilmer S. Poynor, Rector of St. John's Church, Florence, S. C., writes:

I have had the privilege of reviewing "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer" by the late Bishop of Alabama, the Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., and I consider it an outstanding contribution to the literature now being offered for instruction in our Church Schools.

I would like to see a copy of Grade III in every home of our Church. I have strongly urged the parents in St. John's Parish to buy a copy and make a study of it.

I have not seen a copy of Grade IV., but do unhesitatingly commend the courses leading up to it.

... READ ... "THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part, "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes, "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo De War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes, "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work".

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part, " . . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past.'

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes, "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

Deaths

GEORGE R. MAPP.

Entered into life eternal at Sarah Leigh Hospital, July 23, 1928, GEORGE R. MAPP, of Machipongo, Northampton County, Va., son oft he late George R. and Ellen B. Mapp, aged fifty-eight years. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lucie D. R. Mapp, and four children: George R., Jr., Jennie, John Rogers, and Ellen Mapp. His remains were interred at Old Hungars Churchyard. He has been a faithful and consistent member of Hungars for many years, and will be sadly missed.

J. W. N.

MRS. ANNA MASON DAVIS.

Entered into life eternal, July 21, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. F. Marbury, Washington, D. C., ANNA MASON DAVIS, aged eighty-six years, widow of Captain Samuel Boyer Davis, and youngest daughter of Captain Murray Mason and Clara Forsyth. She was laid to rest in Ivy Hill Cemetery, Alexandria, Va., and no other place could have been found so beautifully suited to her personality and old-fashioned dignity. She had been an invalid for nearly six years and was almost totally blind, but this did not dampen or subdue her spirit; her constant cheerfulness and patience were unending, and she was a continual help and support, not only to her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, but to a wide circle of friends who never asked advice in vain. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. Clara F. Marbury of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. C. C. Dunn of Huntington, W. Va.; two sons, A. B. Davis, Washington, D. C., and M. M. Davis, Newport News, Va.; five grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

JOHN DUPUY WATKINS.

Entered into rest in the forenoon of July 17, 1928, just four days after his seventy-fourth birthday, at his home in the City of Petersburg, Va., JOHN DUPUY WATKINS, son of W. L. Watkins and Maria S. Hall, his wife, daughter of John Hall and Harriett Stringfellow Hall, of Fredericksburg, Va.

His funeral services were held in historic "Old Blandford Church" amidst a crowd of devoted friends and relatives, Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector of St. Paul's P. E. Church, of which Mr. Watkins had for many years been a member and an active and efficient vestryman, officiating.

Sprung from the best Old Virginia stock —the Watkins, the Stringellows, the Halls and the Dupuys—he belonged to the old school and measured up to the traditions of the old Virginia gentleman. Genial, human and cheerful, he had to a high degree the faculty of making friends and holding them.

With a simple childlike faith and trust in Christ and Him crucified, he entered, unafraid and with the blessed assurance of a hearty welcome, into the presence of his Lord and Master.

Practically blind for many years before his death, he saw, as it were, "through a glass darkly, but now face to face", during which time eyes were furnished him, so to speak, by his stepmother, Mrs. Eliza S. Watkins, daughter of the Rev. Horace Stringfellow, rector of St. Paul's P. E. Church at the time when it stood upon Sycamore Street, between whom and himself there existed the most beautiful devotion, each striving with the other to promote their mutual happiness and welfare, and both hoping and praying to be alive at the coming of the Lord, so that they might go together to meet Him in the air, and thus escape the separation which they both dreaded.

Though severely handicapped by his affliction, which he bore uncomplainingly and with Christian fortitude and cheerfulness, Mr. Watkins, by his natural ability and vigorous intellect, was enabled to measure up fully to the performance of his civic duties.

Mr. Watkins left surviving him as his nearest kin his stepmother, Mrs. Eliza S. Watkins, and four nephews and nieces, children of a deceased sister, Mrs. Sallie Watkins Wood, viz.: Mrs. Lizzie Leigh James, Mrs. Sallie Watkins Marks, Mr. Milton L. Wood and Mr. George M. Wood, all of Montgomery, Ala.

"I am well content,
For what is sent, is sent,
And God knows best.
Fold up the tent,
And speed the parting guest!

The night draws on, though night and day are one,
On this long quest.
This house was only lent
For my apprenticement—
What is, is best."

His genial presence will be missed by his many friends, and especially by the writer of these lines, who knew him well and loved him.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

White was in a semi-conscious condition most of the time. Bishop Campbell Gray, of the Episcopal Diocese, and Mrs. Gray, were constant attendants at her bedside until the end.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

The diocese has been saddened by the sudden death of Miss Grace Nelson Helfenstein, the only daughter of the Bishop-Coadjutor and Mrs. Helfenstein. She died of heart attack while bathing in the sea on July 16, at Pidgeon Cove, Mass., where the family had gone for the summer. Her death was first attributed by the press to drowning, but this proved erroneous.

The funeral was held very quietly in Baltimore, at the Bishop's Residence, and the interment in the family lot at Frederick, Md. The beauty and profusion of the flowers was a tribute to the love and esteem in which she was held by every one. She herself loved flowers dearly.

Miss Helfenstein was marked by her keen intellect and by her radiant love of life. She was just beginning to find expression for her literary talent at the time of her death. Among her close friends were many of the clergy who have been graduated from the Virginia Seminary in recent years, for she was accustomed to spend much time with her uncle, the Rev. Thomas K. Nelson, on the Seminary Hill. To those who knew her intimately, her early death is one assurance of immortality; the life of such beautiful, radiant spirits cannot cease.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Josiah R. Ellis has charge of the Monumental Church during the month of August. For the time being his address is 401 East Cary Street, Richmond, Va.

The Very Rev. Herbert L. Johnson, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, was married on Monday, July 2d, to Miss Marguerite M. Beale, of Savannah, Georgia. The ceremony was performed by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., assisted by the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit. Dean and Mrs. Johnson are spending their honeymoon in Quebec.

Central University, Indianapolis, Indiana, has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. Howard Gibson England, of the Diocese of East Carolina. Dr. England has A. B. and Ph. B. from George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

ORDINATIONS.

On July 5th Bishop Page ordained to the Diaconate Mr. John Adams Alford, at Christ Church, East Texas. The candidate was presented by the Rev. C. E. Edinger, rector of the parish. The ordination was performed by Bishop Page for Bishop Colmore, of Porto Rica, Page for Bishop Colmore, of Porto Rico, in whose Diocese Mr. Alford will begin his work.

At the Niobrara Convocation, Good Shepherd Chapel, Standing Rock Agency, on Sunday morning, July 15th, Chester Red Kettle and Wallace Zephier, Dakota Indians, were ordained to the deaconate by the Rt. Rev. H. L. Burleson.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Harry Robinson, of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, died at St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital, Pontiac, Michigan, on Friday, July 20th, as the result of injuries in an automobile accident on June 18th. A memorial celebration of Holy Communion was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Monday, July 23d. The body lay in state for an hour before the service, a guard of honor being provided by Damascus Commandery, of which Mr.

Robinson was a member. Burial took place at London, Ontario, the rites of the Church being performed at St. James Church, where Mr. Robinson attended as a boy. Mr. Robinson was fifty-four years of age, and is survived by a sister, Mrs. Don D. Williams, of Mt. Clemens.

The Rev. D. P. Griffiths, rector of St. James Church, Jermyn, and St. Paul's, Peckville, died on Sunday morning, July 29, 1928, and was buried on Wednesday, August 1st, in Jermyn cemetery.

The Rev. Mr. Griffiths was sick for some months with heart trouble, so that his demise was not unexpected.

He was known as the Welsh Bard of the Episcopal Church. For special occasions, folks would write to Mr. Griffiths for a poem. His poem on "The Red Cross Nurses" was very popular during and after the war, and published in many papers.

Mr. Griffiths had the missionary instinct. A few miles from Jermyn is the town of Winton. It is almost one hundred years old, but never had a church of any kind. Mr. Griffiths commenced to visit all the families, and baptize the children. In 1927 St. Ann's Chapel was erected. This work was the joy of his latter days, for the chapel was filled with people at every service.

His broad outlook, wide sympathies and warm loving heart gained for him open doors and hearts among all classes and faiths.

Daddy's Daughter.

"I wish, daddy, that I'd been a little boy instead of a little girl," pouted Mildred, looking up from the plate which she was wiping.

"You do?" laughed daddy. "Now, mother and I think it's pretty nice to have a happy, helpful little girl about the house."

"I'm happy most of the time," Mildred decided. "But you see, daddy, I don't like to do what girls do; I like to do what boys like to do."

Daddy didn't laugh that time. He only smiled as he remembered how eagerly his little daughter had watched him down at the store one morning when he was mending a clock. There was a secret back of that kind smile which Mildred never found out until one rainy Saturday more than two weeks later.

"I can't go out all day long," she sighed. "It's too rainy even to play sailor boy in the pond."

"Quite true," agreed father. "But, daughter, suppose you make your bed and help mother with the dishes. Then I shall need you at the store."

How big Mildred's eyes grew then! She had been needed at home ever so many times, but never had she been needed at the store until that rainy Saturday morning, and the store is such an interesting place.

In spite of the rain, Mildred sang as she spread her bed. She even tried harder than usual to make it look just like a frosted cake, for secrets are such fun. She knew daddy was having one down at the store, and of course as soon as she found it out it wouldn't be a secret any longer. She liked to keep wondering what the secret could be.

"Perhaps some lady is coming in to buy her little girl a ring for her birthday, and daddy wants me to keep the little girl out of the way till it's picked out, or perhaps he's going to let me watch out so that the little things won't get lost. I hope it's the watch."

But when Mildred's home tasks were done she was glad to run down to the store to learn the secret.

"Hello, daughter!" daddy greeted as she stepped up to the counter.

There was no lady and no little girl there, except of course herself.

"Hello, daddy!" Mildred answered. "What's the secret?"

"Secret? Who said anything about a secret?"

"Nobody," laughed Mildred, "but I know there is one."

Then that blessed daddy came around the counter, took his little girl by the hand and led her out into the back shop. There the very first minute Mildred saw a little table with tools and an alarm clock on it.

"Why, Daddy, how can you work at such a little table?" Mildred asked.

Daddy smiled. "I couldn't," he said, "but how about you?"

Mildred drew up a low chair and in much less than a minute was seated before the table, clock and tools.

"I just fit," she smiled. "Daddy, what do you want me to do?"

"That's your clock, daughter. You may do whatever you want with it."

"It doesn't go," Mildred noted. "I'll fix it."

And she set to work with a will. Outside the rain was falling, but she didn't mind at all. Mildred was doing boy's work, and she was the happiest girl in town, though really I'm afraid that poor clock never did "go" again.—Selected.

What Moses Learned.

These sayings are taken from the ancient Egyptian books called "Instructions", in which rules were laid down for the guidance of the young. These rules were probably taught Moses and helped make him a great man.

"Spend no day in idleness.

"Speak truth, do what is right; for it is great, it is enduring."

"Be kind to the widow and orphan and feed the starving animals of the desert."

"Never forget to be respectful and do not sit down while another stands who is older than you."

"Never forget what thy mother hath done for thee."

"How good it is when a son obeys his father."

Zeno the Wise.

Minna McEuen Meyer.

"Good night, Zeno. Lie down on your mat. The children are all asleep and it's time for good doggies to go to sleep, too."

Zeno wagged his tail and Mr. White patted the dog's head. Then Mr. White climbed the stairs and Zeno lay down on his mat in front of the open fireplace.

It was chilly outside for a cold wind was blowing from the sea, but Zeno felt very comfortable in the living room of the great orphanage, for the fire had not been entirely covered and now and then bright little flames shot up through the ashes. When this happened the dog would open his eves to watch the flickering light, and then as the flame died down and it became dark he would go to sleep again.

Suddenly there came a loud crack. Zeno sat straight up on his haunches. A bright spark shot out from the fireplace and landed right in the box of shavings and kindling wood that one of the boys had brought in from the carpenter shop. Pretty soon there was a sputting noise and then a very bright flame, much brighter than those Zeno had been watching. The kindling wood was all burning with a very sharp crackling noise, and it was sending out many sparks. One of these sparks landed on some cushions and they began to burn, but instead of sending out bright flames they sent up black smoke. The smoke began to fill the room, and Zeno felt very queer. Something was wrong, he felt very sure of that.

Now all this time Mr. White, who with Zeno's help took care of that great Near East Relief Orphanage with its thirteen hundred children, was sound asleep, as were all the children. And they slept right on, although the smoke had formed a great dark cloud in the room and the red flames were burning a hole in the floor of the living room.

Then as if in a dream Mr. White felt something cold pressing hard against his cheek. He opened his eyes. There was Zeno standing over him and the cold thing that had pressed against his cheek was Zeno's nose.

In a moment Mr. White smelled the smoke and heh urried out of bed and ran downstairs to put the fire.

None of the children knew anything about the fire until the next morning, when Mr. White told them and praised Zeno for being such a wise and faithful dog. The boys cheered and shouted, "Hurrah for Zeno"! while Zeno frisked and barked to show how happy he was that the children had been kept from harm.

"MY MOTHER."

"My mother is the best of all
The bunch around our shack;
She knows just how a feller feels
More than the whole blamed pack.
If I am sick, or blue, or bad,
No matter what's the plight;
Why, mother stays right by me
Till everything is right.

"Oh, yes, I love my dad you bet
And he's my pal and chum;
But does not seem to understand
When all these troubles come
Just what to do or what to say
Nor how to mend a tear.
I guess it's cause he has some Bigger trouble of his own to bear.

"Now, sir, she's not like mother,
She's always tired I guess;
Or else she's always fussin' 'round
About a beau, or dress.
And so there's no use askin' her
For one thing or another;
You bet I'd hate to be the boy
That has her for a mother.

"Of course I have a brother,
And he's big enough 'tis true;
But no use askin' him for help,
For he has troubles too.
So when I'm sick o rblue or bad,
And all the world's awry,
My mother's all the friend I've got
That will help, or even try."

WITH GOD.

To talk with God no breath is lost;
Talk on!
To walk with God no strength is lost,
Walk on!
To toil with God no time is lost;
Toil on!
Little is much, if God is in it;
Man's busiest day not worth God's minute;
Much is little everywhere,
If God the business does not share.
So work with God—then nothing's lost;
Who works with Him does best and most.
—Old English Verse.

"I can forgive, but I cannot forget," is only another way of saying, "I will not forgive". A forgiveness ought to be like a cancelled note, torn in two and burned up, so that it never can be shown against a man. There is an ugly kind of forgiveness in this world—a kind of hedgehog forgiveness, shot out like quills.—H. W. Beecher.

It's easy to kill every fly if you spray FLIT

No more hard work chasing, swatting, killing flies—if you use Flit. Flit is the easy way to rid the house in a few moments of disease-bearing flies and mosquitoes. Flit searches out the cracks where roaches, bed bugs and ants hide and breed, destroying their eggs. Fatal to insects, harmless to you. Will not stain.

Do not confuse Flit with ordinary insecticides. Greater killing power insures satisfaction with Flit. One of the largest corporations in the world guarantees Flit to kill insects, or money back. Buy Flit and a Flit sprayer today.

"The word of God, which liveth and abideth forever"
1 PETER 1:23

THE BIBLE

"This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's Paradise. Here Paradise is restored, heaven opened, and the gates of hell disclosed. Christ is its grand object, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently and prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, a Paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life and will be openedin the judgment and will be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and will condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents."—The Bible Champion.

VENTILATION.

Probably the best time to consider ventilation for Church or Sunday School is when it is least needed. During the warm months nature takes care of the problem. Doors and windows are left open, and even gentle breezes change the air in a large gathering so rapidly as to keep every one's lungs filled with fresh air. When "Jack Frost" arrives, the problem of ventilation becomes important and then often it is too late to do anything about it. Then is a poor time to endeavor to change the heating system of alter the windows. Now it can be done without discomfort to any one.

There have been many good pastors that looked down from their pulpits to see an inattentive congregation, with some even dozing, and thought that their efforts were unappreciated. In most cases it is due to lack of fresh air. Active Christian workers, who are vigilantly fighting against liquor, tobacco, and other poisons, subject in their Sunday Schools large groups of children to the poisons of air that has been breathed many times. It has been argued that an hour or two in a poorly ventilated room can do no harm, and apparently that is so. But colds and other diseases spread more easily, and what is of real importance, people cannot give the same degree of attention or worship when their minds are dulled by bad air.

Church Equipment Service is designed to help the readers of this publication. This is a case where little help can be given except by some one in your church who will study conditions. In every community there is some onew ho understands proper ventilation. All questions as to Church Equipment will be gladly answered by this department. ## Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"If seeking the Truth seems easy, we may be sure we have lost our way."

Civilization is a contract between the great dead, the living and the unborn. —Edmund Burke.

The contemplation of Jesus will not make you a man. They say you must live with a person to know them. Then, to know Christ, you must associate yourself with Jesus in service and sacrament.—Selected.

"The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:
As thus 'Come little ones', and then again
'It is as hard to come as for a Camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye'."

—King Richard II.

Though world on world in myriad myriads roll
Round us, each with different powers,
And other forms of life than ours,
What know we greater than the soul?
On God and Godlike men we build our trust.

—Tennyson.

Ah, Lord, Thou knowest us altogether,
Each heart's sore sickness, whatever it be,
Touch Thou our hands! Let the fever leave us—
And so shall we minister unto Thee!

—Edith Cherry.

Don't give up in the face of difficulty. Don't surrender though the odds seem overwhelming. Dare something. Make the venture of faith though toward the seemingly impossible.

"It is impossible to shirk any responsibility that rightfully belongs to us. We may deny that it is ours, may refuse the duty or the blame that attaches to it, but the responsibility we cannot escape."

STARVATION

Some writers tell us the clearest conception we can form of the mystery of the Trinity is by study of ourselves, of the different elements that make the human being, each doing its separate part, yet all in one. We have the body with its five senses, itself a universe of living and busy things, some too small to be seen under the strongest microscope, born, doing their work of harm or good and dying within an hour, while the body lives; others dormant and ready to wake to life and begin to destroy as the body dies. Within the body are what we call the mind, with which we think and apply our knowledge, the emotions, passions, conscience, imagination, all interwoven, acting and reacting on each other. Somewhere among them, in intimate contact with all of them, yet distinct from all, is that most profound and elusive of mysteries we call the soul, which we feel and know, not knowing whence or how nor when it came to us. We comprehend that it is our gift from the Almighty Creator, our special possession. It is the ray of heavenly light invisible to mortal sight, intangible to mortal touch, which all the weight and power of the earth cannot rend, reaching from us beyond the furthest stars, far beyond the limits of our thought or dreams to divinity, infinity, eternity.

We know the body must die and decay and that with us must go all it contains, all that gives it direction and purpose and action, except that one element of light and life that will continue to live. Yet it is that element and part, destined for immortality, that very many of us neglect and starve.

We feed and pamper our bodies carefully. Some of us give time and labor to storing our minds, doing what we call "cultivating" them, with result of producing nothing, or trash, or poison, or good fruit, as may be. Some of us make pets of our emotions, seek gratification and delight for them in the beauties and appeals of the arts and of nature. Others of us exalt our passion and appetites. The one pure, vital, glowing emanation of the power and goodness of the Almighty Creator bestowed upon us we leave to hunger and be killed.

"The Lord is in His Holy Temple" is invitation and exhortation to us to feed our souls with humility, to let them soar upward through the serene atmosphere of solemn reverence. "Dearly beloved brethren, the Scripture moveth us in sundry places to acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness" is presentation of opportunity to give our souls the sustenance of sincere penitence, of faithful confession, of petition for continuing mercy, of high resolve and aspiration for better, cleaner, more useful and fruitful life.

Some of us deny our souls even glimpse or crumb of the food they crave by turning our backs on church and church service, indulging indolence or inclination for amusements. Some hear the words and absorb nothing, comprehend nothing, of their meaning or purpose, gather from them no food for the soul, suppress with burdens of trivial or base or selfish meanderings of the mind its longing to ascend and to gather from the illimitable heights and realms above our knowledge and reason purity and inspiration. When the sermon begins many of us in the pews imprison our souls, surround them with crowds of idle or sordid or shameful thoughts, speculations, memories, attentive to everything but the message of love or hope or mercy or instruction the man in the pulpit is trying to give us. When we try honestly to feed and nourish our souls, to stimulate rather than restrain their upward flights, no sermon is dull or uninteresting. Always there is the text: and every text has its meaning. We in the pews forget the text. Instead of trying to gather and assimilate the teachings, we drift to shallow, frequently foolish, criticism of such small things as gesture or intonation or pronunciation, forbid our souls from tasting what is offered them from the Word of God by the servant of God seeking to expound the Word.

So we go through the festival and fasting seasons of the church, through all the affectionate and wisely planned inducements and persuasions that great and kindly mother offers us to realize and recognize and feed our souls. So we go through our daily lives, year after year, scheming, laboring, devising, to provide for the parts of us that must die, neglecting, chilling, starving, the one part that must live.

We may read in many books of the men and women who have nourished their souls, filled them with the invisible, ineffable glory from on high and made the light they gathered shine for the gladdening of mankind. Their deeds and words, wafted along the years and generations, live like gracious fragrance from far-away gardens to purify, revive, ennoble. We have such living among us—everywhere—most of them unknown beyond the narrow or wide circles in which they move, through which their influence is felt, giving outward and visible evidence of inward and spiritual grace, the results of their living and doing to be told by new voices in the hosts of the redeemed. Yet multitudes, reading and knowing of the enriched souls that have gone beyond after yielding blessing so abundantly, seeing about them the strong souls which win honor and power for religion and piety, cleanse public sentiment and keep alive high ideals, continue to starve their own souls. More obdurate than the prodigal of the parable, lacking even his instinct for self preservation, they turn their backs on a Father's proffered and waiting welcome and feed on husks.

For one soul the times of darkness and sorrow and fear that come upon the strongest, greatest, boldest, of us all are illumined by the clear and steady light, leading onward and upward. For the other soul which has coldly excluded the light, the darkness is impenetrable. The Valley of the Shadow through which all must go for the inevitable journey from the known to the unknown, from the present and familiar to the tremendous mystery is as we will make it, as we nourish or starve our souls, a joyous road with the everlasting rod and staff to comfort and sustain, or a lonely, fearful, desolate going into black, bleak night.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

PART II.

Subject and Purpose of the Divisions of the Bible.

First—The Old Testament, or Covenant.

Subject.—The revelation of redemption by type, promise, prophecy and psalm (Heb. 1:1; Luke 24:44).

Purpose.—To reveal the Person and Work of the coming Redeemer (Rom. 15:4; 1 Cor. 10:11; Heb. 8:5; 9:10, 11, 12, 24; 10:1).

All the Old Testament types of persons, events, institutions and forms of worship pointed to the Anti-type, our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the sum and fulfillment of them all (Heb. 9:1-11; 10:1-14).

In Him also all the promises have been or will be fulfilled (2 Cor. 1:20).

In the experience of God's people, individually and nationally, as recorded in the poetical books, we read the experience of Jesus Christ, first and above all (Ps. 45:6, 7; Heb. 1:8, 9; Ps. 8:4-8; Heb. 2:6-8).

Christ and His work are the main themes of the great prophetic portion of the Old Testament (Luke 24:26, 27; 1 Peter 1:10, 11).

1. The Law, or Pentateuch—Genesis to Deuteronomy.

Subject.—The revelation of the beginning of God's works and ways, both in creation and redemption. "He made known His ways unto Moses" (Ps. 103:7).

In Genesis God tells us of His ways in redeeming a ruined earth, and also of His ways in redemption, with seven men, Adam, Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph.

In Exodus He speaks of His ways with Israel in separating them unto Himself as a nation.

In Leviticus He draws aside the veil and reveals His ways in the sanctuary in the midst of His people in Israel.

In Numbers He tells us of His ways with Israel in the wilderness.

In Deuteronomy we learn His ways in reviewing the past and giving instructions for the future of His people.

What a revelation of God's counsels are given in this handful of books, which outline the whole plan of the Bible, as well as the whole plan of redemption!

Purpose.—To declare to us, from the beginning, the end of God's purpose and work of redemption. Every act of God has eternal significance, and through a revelation of the beginning of His works and ways in redemption He has typified or foreshadowed for us every step in the plan for the fulfillment of His wonderful redemptive purpose (Eccl. 3:14; Isa. 46:9, 10; Acts 15:18; Rev. 22:3-5).

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted bythe Reverend Frank Cox

WANTED—a faith and a presentation of the faith that is simple, practical, and convincing. There is hardly anything so lacking among us as a workable knowledge of our faith. Our people as a rule are regrettably ignorant of the simplest fundamentals of the Church's teaching. We know that Our Lord appealed to the common folk, and that the early Church was successful in her efforts to train even the slaves in a definite understanding of her teachings, but today there is ignorance where once there was knowledge.

We have seen how our young people can come through the Church Schools minus a definite knowledge of even the authors of the books of the Bible, and how men may come so far as the seminary and still be hazy on many of its simplest teachings. It would be a rash person indeed who could approach the average congregation and expect much information as to Christ's atoning work, and the man who would mention the deeper life in Christ, Spirit-filled and Spirit-led, would be speaking in terms resembling the traditional Greek.

Our young people's societies could do an excellent work in remedying this situation, but hazy discussions concerning socialism, and the like in place of real study of some Scripture truth or character will not affect the change.

Much of the fault lies at the door of our teachers and ministers. Some of them have been so occupied with following new theories in Scripture and in teaching method that they have had little time to give to the impartation of knowledge. In place of the definite catechetical methods that have succeeded in the past, they have substituted argumentative discussions by minds poorly furnished with fundamental facts.

Now the Gospel of Christ is news, not views, and the Church of Christ is a training school, not a debating club. As long as we minister to the conceit of men's minds by encouraging them to think that their fruitless discussions are going to add to the deposit of the faith, we shall never have a group of sincere learners.

The first remedy I should propose is that we become convinced that the Christian faith has something from which even twentieth century minds can learn. We must possess that settled conviction of the supremacy of Christian truth. We can then teach it serene in the conviction that it will serve the coming generation as it has served the past.

We must teach it more simply, rather determining to follow the example of our Lord in His simplicity, than the schools in their verbosity. We must be more anxious to be understood than to make a reputation.

We must emphasize the truths that the Apostles preached —sin and salvation, Christ's death for sinners, and holiness of life imparted through His Power. We must speak them with burning conviction, for a world gone mad after self is not going to listen to half-hearted advocates of the Gospel. Above all, let us press for a definite decision. We are not addressing a company of savants on a point of ancient lore, but are speaking to men and women about the burning questions that affect their whole future. We are there to gain a verdict for our Master. Let us never teach or preach these truths without leaving the impression that to reject them means a loss that nothing else can repair.

THE HEAVENLY VISION IN THE BOOK OF PSALMS

By Canon G. Osborne Troop

INTRODUCTION.

NEITHER this article, nor any other that I may subsequently write, pretends to be an actual study of the Book of Psalms as a whole. Rather would I, by the grace of God, make selections here and there throughout the Book, which reveal beforehand the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shining ever in the Face of Jesus Christ. I have for a number of years been greatly helped by Professor Moulton's able presentation of the Psalms in two small volumes of his larger work, entitled "The Modern Reader's Bible". Professor Moulton, by special permission of the university presses of Oxford and Cambridge, uses as the basis of his text the Revised Version; but he so presents the text, in clear literary form without chapters and verses, as to leave the ordinary reader in no doubt whatever that he is reading a beautiful Book of Hebrew Poems. The work is done most reverently, with nothing to disturb the mind of the most sensitive Christian reader. The result is only an added charm to the old familiar words as read in the Bible or Prayer Book.

The revisers of the Old Testament did their work in a very conservative way. Among other slight but singularly helpful changes in the translation they introduce the word "peoples" in the plural, where the Authorized Version gives the word in the singular only. At first thought this may seem a trifling distinction; but we shall see that it throws fresh light, for example, upon the Psalms, and lends fresh intelligence to our reading of them. We are so familiar with the Psalms that we are tempted to forget that they constitute the Hymn Book of the Hebrew People. Speaking generally, when the word "people" occurs it means the chosen People of God, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. When we meet with the word in the plural, it stands for all the other "peoples" of mankind.

The importance of this distinction is strikingly illustrated in the Revised Version of Psalm 67. That Psalm is a heart-moving cry for the outpouring of God's blessing upon Israel, that as a result, all the ends of the earth may be partakers of His salvation. Let me paraphrase it in a simple way:

"God be merciful unto us, Hebrews, and bless us,
And cause His Face to shine upon us;
That Thy way be known upon earth,
Thy saving health among all nations.
Let all the peoples praise Thee, O God,
Let all the peoples praise Thee.

"O let the nations be glad,
And sing for joy:
For Thou shalt judge the peoples with equity
And govern the nations upon earth.
Let the peoples praise Thee, O God,
Let all the people praise Thee.

"The earth hath yielded her increase:
God, even our own God shall bless us.
God shall bless us (the Hebrew people)
And all the ends of the earth shall fear Him."

This Psalm, thus understood in its missionary aspect, is in complete harmony with the words of St. Paul in the eleventh chapter of his Letter to the Romans, where he assures us that the conversion and restoration of Israel shall be as "Life from the dead" to the degenerate world. With this St. Peter also agrees, when speaking to Jews just after Pentecost, he says, as recorded in The Acts, chapter 4, verse 19, Revised Version:

"Repent ye (Jews) and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that He may send the Christ, who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus: Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of His holy prophets which have been since the world began."

These wonderful words of St. Peter are full of interest to us in particular, since God has conferred upon our England the peculiar honor of the mandate for the Holy Land and City. Neither the Jews, nor England, nor the other nations of mankind, begin to realize the solemnity of the trust thus committed to the British Empire, supported—let us not forget—by the United States. England is (unconsciously) holding Palestine in trust, while God is working His purposes out for the conversion and restoration of the people of Israel as His missionaries to mankind. When Israel is in right relations with God, then, and not till then, will the "peoples" comes into right relation with Him.

May I reassure some of my readers by adding, that I am not a believer in the Anglo-Israel Theory, but a very humble student of the fascinating Word of God?

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade—

O THOU KING of Kings and Lord of Lords, who dwellest in the light which no man can approach, whom no man hath seen or can see, but who are nevertheless not far from every one of us, vouchsafe to listen to the supplications of Thy poor needy creatures. Whom have we in heaven but Thee, and there is none upon earth that we desire but Thee. O Lord, we know not how to pray as we ought; let Thy spirit help our infirmities, and intercede within us with groanings not to be uttered. O Lord, Thou madest us, and not we ourselves; we are Thy people and the sheep of Thy pasture. O Lord, the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. We are wise to do evil, but to do good, we have no knowledge, out of our hearts proceed all manner of evil things, and Thou art of purer eyes than to behold our iniquity. But Thou hast not dealt with us according to our iniquities, but hath been very gracious to us. O, put Thy fear into our hearts, that we may not any more sin against Thee. Take away our hearts of stone and give us hearts of flesh that we may love Thee for all Thy goodness to us. Lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us and put gladness into our hearts, far more than when corn and wine aboundeth. Write Thy love upon our hearts, and make us to delight to do Thy will. Give us grace to walk worthy of the high vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness, and meekness, and long suffering, forbearing one another in love. May we abound more and more in love to all men and, as we have opportunity, do good to all men. Make us to be zealously affected in every good work; and whatever we do, may do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men. May we serve the Lord in joyfulness and gladness of heart all our days, ever going on our way rejoicing. Teach us, O Lord, in whatever state we are in, therewith to be content. And when we walk through the valley of the shadow of death, be Thou with us that we may fear no evil: then may we joyfully give thanks unto Thee for giving us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

And may all who are now sitting in the region and shadow of death come to the glorious light of Thy gospel. Let the sorrowful sighing of the prisoners come before Thee; and according to the greatness of Thy power, preserve Thou those who are appointed to die. Look with compassion on a world that is lying in wickedness. Do good in Thy pleasure unto Zion. Build Thou the walls of Jerusalem, and let peace be within her walls and prosterity within her palaces. From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, let Thy name be great among the heathen; and in every place, let incense be offered unto Thee, and a peace offering. For all these blessings on ourselves, and our fellow creatures, we would further pray in the perfect and comprehensive words of Him who taught us when we pray to say: Our Father, who art in heaven, etc.

Isn't it strange that Princes and Kings,
And clowns that caper in sawdust rings,
And common folks like you and me,
Are builders for Eternity?
To each is given a bag of tools,
A shapeless mass and a book of rules;
And each must make, ere life is flown,
A stumbling block or a stepping stone.

THE WHOLE CHURCH IN ACTION

By Arnold N. Hoath

THE other day seventy laymen of a church in one of our eastern dioceses went forth in pairs to make a thorough canvass of every church family in their parish. Money was not the object of their calling, and finances were not mentioned. Nor were the visits merely social, in an endeavor to create a feeling of good-will. As the intention of this visitation was to arouse and stimulate interest in the Church, the visitors with directness and definiteness discussed the Church services and the various Church activities and informed their hosts of the work which the Church was trying to do or was desirous of doing. This particular church has an amazing record of advancement and of giving. But it is not surprising is it, that a church which enlists the hearty support of the laymen in this Scriptural fashion should be making remarkable progress and should be a church where the men delight to attend?

Throughout the Episcopal Communion there is a more or less general unrest among the laymen of the Church. It is felt that the Church is not making the headway that she should, nor taking advantage of all the opportunities that beckon her. It is recognized that the ethics of Twentieth Century civilization is having a greater influence upon the Church than the ethics of the Church are having upon Twentieth Century civilization. A materialistic generation is not being captured by the Kingdom of God, and there are many who feel that only a complete recognition of the place which the laymen should occupy in church work will enable us to face with confidence a situation that is yearly growing more discouraging. Men who have realized the seriousness of our shortcomings and who have caught a vision of the glorious possibilities that crowd around us are no longer satisfied to look upon the raising of funds and the attendance at men's clubs where supper, smoking and an address on the poetry of R. W. Service comprise the agenda, as the sole contribution the Church may expect from them. They realize that unless the whole membership, men, women and clergy, share in the spiritual work of the church, in the ministry of evangelism, and the promulgation of the Gospel, the ineffectiveness which characterizes so much that the church attempts to do will continue.

We are not now discussing the recent pronouncement of the Bishop of Manchester (whose outstanding attainments as theologian are acknowledged by all parties within the church) that if a layman with reverent intention to consecrate the bread and wine should pronounce the words of consecration, such consecration is legal and valid, although irregular; nor are we now suggesting that pulpits of churches with a resident clergyman should be occupied occasionally by laymen, although nothing is more painfully obvious than that ordination does not in itself endow one with the prophetic spirit, nor grant to the ordained the gift of lucid discourse. The point we wish to make is that if the Church is to go forward, every member must do the work which if not done by him will be poorly done by others or not done at all. Too long have we acted as though our Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world", was addressed not to the Church but to an order within the Church. We must return to the primitive custom of every Christian being an active missionary as the Christians in Korea are today, if the Church is to make appreciable progress in winning the world for Christ.

If only the officers had gone over the top during the war, and if the private soldiers had remained behind giving only their "moral" support to the officers (whatever "moral" support is) would there have been a tremendous victory? Yet in the Church we expect the Bishops and other clergy to do all the fighting while the laymen cheer them on with their presence at the church services and with their offerings towards the expenses of the campaign. Fighting alone, the clergy are too few for their stupendous task. With all the energy and devotion of which they are capable they are unequal to the struggle. If the battle is to go in favor of the Lord of Hosts the laymen must come up from the protected rear and take their places on the firing-line. For who ever heard of a military campaign in which the generals who directed the course of the battle did not remain behind while the private soldiers and lesser officers did the actual fighting? It is a common-sense principle that the Church seems to have forgotten.

Is it not a remarkable thing that when our Lord organized His Apostolic Group He gathered about Him laymen with varied experiences in their rough-and-tumble of strenuous living? When He wished to organize His work, He who loved His Church chose no ecclesiastic, or recognized officer of the Jewish Church. Since the time of our Lord, what has history taught us of the times of great Church revivals? The lay-preacher of the first Christian century made Asia Christian. The lay-monks of the Roman Church were responsible for the Reformation victory. The Weslayan revival was a lay revival. John Calvin was a layman. The Wycliffe and Lollard Movements were lay-movements.

In modern times it was a layman, Robert Raikes, who introduced the Sunday School. It was another layman, Williams, who thought of the Y. M. C. A. Booth organized the Salvation Army. The Modern Missionary Movement was inaugurated in 1806 by five laymen. And so one might continue. When the laymen come up to the firing-line, something is bound to happen.

But what can laymen do today to increase the effectiveness of the Church's work? In his pastoral charge of a few weeks ago the Canadian Archbishop of Huron suggested the formation in every parish of a band of pastoral helpers in which all members should be trained to serve by turns and whose duty would be to visit the whole membership of the Church, and especially those distressed in mind, body or estate. Were this done, he claimed the pastoral services of the clergy would be immensely supported, the clergy would be relieved of what is often an impossible task, i. e., attending to all the pastoral demands of a large congregation and also at the same time giving proper attention to the ministry of the Word, the people would be trained in the work of ministering, the Church would be enormously strengthened, and become what our Lord intended it to be—a brotherhood where the people would be trained in the practice of brotherly love. Schoad in "Evangelism in the Church" relates that in one church fifty-four laymen, working in groups, secured 1,194 members in three weeks. Leon C. Palmer in "The Ministry of Laymen" tells of a Brotherhood of St. Andrew Chapter in North Carolina who brought to their rector in one year (1914) one hundred and thirteen candidates for Confirmation, sixty-two of whom had not been baptized. The Bishops' Crusade made large use of the laymen. Of the contribution which the laymen made to this momentous movement Bishop Darst writes: "The Bishops' Crucade has not only shown the need for Lay Evangelism, but has revealed also the very significant fact that we have splendid laymen who are willing and anxious to give themselves to such service. It was discovered also that in those dioceses where Lay Evangelism has been emphasized for several years a large number of laymen were both ready and qualified to serve as National Crusaders, and these lay Crusaders made a distinct contribution to the movement.

"All of this goes to prove the truth of the statement that we have in the laymen of the Episcopal Church a source of power and the Church must harness this power to the purposes of God."

"The Church must harness this power to the purposes of God." Yes. For if she does not she will not be able to take full advantage of the glorious opportunities awaiting her. The work of the Kingdom of God requires that the whole Church should get into action.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by the Rev. J. W. Ware, of Orange, Va.:

> "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am; that they may behold My Glory, which Thou hast given me, for Thou lovest Me before the foundation of the world" (St. John 17:24).

Jesus said, "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee. And he departed and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him" (St. Mark 5:19 and 20).

Go, and do thou, likewise.

PLANS FOR THE WILLIAMSBURG RESTORATION

THE restoration of Williamsburg, capital of colonial Virginia, backed by the millions of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will move forward cautiously and with accuracy as its goal and keynote, that the ancient city may become truly a historic shrine.

The project, which will preserve in all its former glory the city which figured so prominently in the early history of America, has received world-wide comment, comment which has been all but universally enthusiastic. Here and there, however, have arisen the questioning voices of those who would know how such a restoration might be accomplished.

To these voices, which he deems both just and reasonable, the Rev. Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, director of the restoration, and in whose mind the project first took form today made reply.

"In the first place," said Dr. Goodwin, "we believe that there are few who realize how much of the Williamsburg of colonial days remains undisturbed today. Many who come here and see the map of the city drawn by a French army engineer in 1786 are greatly surprised to see how closely it resembles a map drawn but a few weeks ago, and their surprise increases as they begin to pick out the many public buildings and private homes which appear upon both maps. Of course some of the buildings have been changed in the course of their long service, but the evidence of their original design are unmistakable. Many have remained untouched.

Missing Buildings To Be Replaced.

"Yet," continued Dr. Goodwin, "there are many buildings which are missing, some of them, including the royal governor's palace and the House of Burgesses, destroyed more than a century ago. These must be replaced, and to this end we have instituted a research program which will continue until all possible sources of information have been exhausted.

"This program was planned in consultation with Dr. Putnam, of the library of congress, and Dr. Jameson, curator of colonial records in the library of congress. Donald Millar, of New York, architect and archeologist, has been employed for research work in England. Miss Mary F. Goodwin, of Norfolk, historiographer of the Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia, is giving her full time to research work in the libraries of Virginia. Henry Stevens, Son & Stiles, experienced investigators of London, England, have also been retained for work in England. Dr. Thomas J. Wertenbaker, professor of American history at Princeton university, is doing special work of historical research. Further assistance is being given by W. G. Stanlard, secretary of the Virginia Historical Society; Dr. McIlwaine, Virginia State Librarian; Dr. E. G. Swem, librarian of the College of William and Mary; and by historians and authorities upon historical research throughout the country.

"The French military records known to contain frequent reference to the Virginia peninsula, where French troops under Rochambeau and Lafayette fought several engagements, will be searched under the direction of the curator of archives of the French government. To this phase of the work Jules Jusserand, former French ambassador to America, is lending his interest and influence.

"In addition," Dr. Goodwin said, "there are a great number of books, pamphlets and papers embodying and condensing a vast amount of research work, already at our disposal." (It is also known that Dr. Goodwin himself had spent five years in research prior to presenting his plan to Rockefeller.)

"Then," said Dr. Goodwin, "there are those to whom the actual work of the restoration is entrusted. They have been selected only after a most careful investigation as to their qualification for such work.

"The firm of Perry, Shaw & Hepburn, 177 State Street, Boston, authorities on colonial architecture, are the architects in charge. They are empowered to call in consulting architects and archeologists. For instance, in connection with the restoration of the 'Christopher Wren' or main building of the College of William and Mary, oldest academic building and only example of Christopher Wren architecture standing in America, the architects submitted tentative plans to the following group: Charles A. Platt, of New York, authority on Christopher Wren architecture; Charles Coolidge, of Boston; Lawrence Kocher, member of the committee on historical buildings of the American Institute of Architecture; and Ralph Adams Cramm, of Boston. The final plans will be subject to the approval of a committee of the board of trustees of the college, of which committee Dr. James H. Dillard is the chairman and Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, president of the college, is vice-chairman.

House of Burgesses.

"In the restoration of the House of Burgesses," continued Dr. Goodwin, "the plans will be submitted to a committee authorized by the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, which association deeded over the site of the old capitol to the restoration corporation. This committee will be composed of W. G. Stanard, secretary of the Virginia Historical Society; Dr. Samuel Yonge, who supervised the excavations at Jamestown Island; Dr. J. Stewart Bryan, publisher, of Richmond; Dr. E. G. Swem, librarian of the College of William and Mary; Morgan P. Robinson, curator of the archives of the State of Virginia; and Dr. Douglas Freeman, editor, of Richmond.

"Other phases of the work will be handled by equally competent firms and will be subject to the approval of the architects in charge and other well qualified committees. The general contract for the entire building program has been awarded to the engineering firm of Todd & Brown, of New York, successors to Todd, Robertson & Todd, builders and owners of the Greybar building in New York City. The landscape work is in the hands of Arthur A. Shurtleff, of Boston, one of the best known landscape engineers and architects in America. Sanitary engineering and investigation will be done by the firm of Metcalf & Eddy. The zoning expert is John R. Fox, of New York. A complete survey of Williamsburg and surrounding country is being conducted by J. Temple Waddill, of Richmond. The tree surgery is in the hands of Underwood Brothers, of Richmond. The heating problem and that of undergrounding all light, power and telephone wires in the city are in charge of French & Hubbard.

"Then," Dr. Goodwin said, "there is the most important subject of antiques. It is proposed to museum several of the old homes of the city which will be open to the public, as well as to museum portions of the 'Christopher Wren' building, the governors' palace, and the House of Burgesses. The program on the selection of antiques has been placed in the hands of a committee composed of W. G. Perry, Chairman; R. T. H. Halsey, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and one of those instrumental in the creation of the American Wing, also the author of "The Homes of Our Ancestors"; L. G. Myers, of New York, private collector of antiques; John R. Todd, of Camden, S. C., private collector of antiques; and W. A. R. Goodwin, ex-officio. This committee will provide the place museumed with antiques of the period and design characteristic of the Williamsburg of the day to which it is to be restored.

"There are many other things which are being done," Dr. Goodwin explained, "to make this restoration as complete and accurate as possible. I feel that it is only necessary to say that these things will be handled in a similar way and by those best qualified to consider them. In the end we will have a shrine of which Virginia and the nation may well be proud and for which they may be sincerely grateful to John D. Rockefeller, Jr."—Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

CONSOLATION.

By B. A. M. Schapiro.

There are times when my heart is heavy,
And my soul is weighed down with fear;
Then it is that the Word of promise
Clears each doubt, gives rest, dries each tear.

Those pages, so precious with treasures
Of our Father's great mercy and love,
Seem more than the sands of the sea-shore,
Or the stars in the heavens above.

Shutting out all the claims of the worldly,
In the quietest nook of my room,
To God's Word I give prayerful attention
And I find it dispels all my gloom.

With sweet memories of His consolation
Comes the feeling of gladness and joy,
And the peace passing knowledge sustains me
As I seek His good will to employ.

And still this is not all to charm me;
Tho 'tis much in a life fraught with thrall,
The deep secret of earnest heart-longing
Is to know and love Him above all.

Now the man out of whom the devils were departed, besought Jesus that he might be with Him. But Jesus sent him away saying, "Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee" (St. Luke 8: 38 and 39).

ELEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O God, who declarest Thy almighty power chiefly in showing mercy and pity; mercifully grant unto us such a measure of Thy grace, that we, running the way of Thy commandments, may obtain gracious promises, and be made partakers of Thy heavenly treasure; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE grace sufficient to enable us to run the way of His commandments is a large measure, indeed, larger for some than for others; but "He giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not" (James 1:5). That simple and strong metaphor of Ps. 81:11 expresses most forcibly God's willingness to give. "I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt. Open thy mouth wide and I shall fill it." There is no limit of the gift save in the capacity of the seeker. An act so slight as the opening of the mouth, gives Him the opportunity He wishes and needs in order that He may bestow His inestimable benefits, the promises so abundant, and the treasures of heaven, not of earth; but often our wish for blessings of earth makes us open our mouth wide for them, as the child opens its mouth for sweets, and for much that is injurious to health.

We read in Joshua 5:12 that "the manna ceased on the morrow after that they had eaten of the old corn of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year." In what form shall we receive the heavenly treasure after passing Jordan? We know not, nor can imagine; for Isaiah and Paul both tell us by the Spirit: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

One longs to know more that treasure of which the type is the "old corn of the land", flowing with milk and honey, into which Joshua had just led Israel over Jordan, of which Isaiah (quoted by Paul) said: "Since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside Thee, what He hath prepared for him that waiteth for Him" (Is. 64:4). But Paul goes on to say in the next verse of 1 Cor. 2:10: "God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Then let us pray earnestly for such a measure of grace as may make us partakers of the heavenly treasure in the life to come, and even also that revelation of it here by His Spirit, which searcheth all things even the deep things of God."

THE Epistle for the Eleventh Sunday after Trinity is 1 Cor. 1:11, and is Paul's testimony as a witness for the Resurrection of Jesus. He testifies to five appearances of the Lord to others, and then of His being "seen of me also, as of one born out of due time".

The first appearance of Jesus to Paul was near Damascus (Acts 9:3-6), and converted him from a persecutor to the greatest missionary of the world. Three times after that he appeared to this devoted servant. 1. At Jerusalem, when the Lord bade him "Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles" (Acts 22:21). 2. At Corinth, where the Lord told him, "Be not afraid; but speak and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city" (Acts 19:9-10); and 3. In Jerusalem again, when in prison, "The Lord stood by him and said: Be of good cheer, Paul; for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou also bear witness at Rome" (Acts 23:11).

It seems to me that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, no testimony to the Resurrection of Jesus by the many other witnesses, is stronger (or even as strong as) this of Paul. There were nine appearances of Jesus between His Resurrection and Ascension; these with the Ascension appearance make ten up to His departure from earth. There were five after this, four to Paul and one to John in Patmos. Paul speaks here of five of the ten, beginning with that to Peter. These five we may presume he thought the most important. He leaves out the two appearances to women, perhaps on account of a man's natural readiness to undervalue woman's testimony, as that of those apt to be guided more by feeling than by judgment.

The other three appearances, omitted by Paul, are, viz.: The appearance to the two at Emmaus; to the Apostles without Thomas, and to the seven at the Sea of Tiberias. As five of these witnesses were of the twelve, and very noted ones, it is hard to say why Paul left out this miracle at the Sea of Tiberias, especially as it gives us more details than any other of the ten, also our Lord's last miracle. The great force of Paul's testimony is derived from the fact that he was a most unwilling witness, and the further fact that to him Jesus appeared four times; while to none of the others did He appear more than thrice, so far as appears in the New Testament record.

Paul's evidence has the element that makes Thomas' so forcible, only in a much higher degree, the unwillingness to believe.

The evidence of all the other witnesses of the Resurrection is open to this objection, that they were willing witnesses; for the Resurrection gave back to them a dear friend, and a Messiah who had promised them rich rewards on earth, as they thought. The great strength of their testimony does not appear till after His Ascension, when all their hopes of earthly glory were finally dissipated, under bitter and cruel persecution, and even unto death, they stood by their words, and never for a moment ceased to declare the truth about their crucified, and risen, and ascended Lord. But the witness of Paul differs from that of all the rest, in this, that from the very first, after Jesus appeared to him near Damascus, he testified to facts which brought on him much persecution and obloquy. He who had been a member of the Sanhedrin, highly honored by the Jewish hierarchy, became an outcast, hated by all his former associates with a deadly hatred. No one is so hated as a renegade; and such was Paul in the eyes of the Jews. Peter and John were comparatively insignificant in their eyes. Compare the action of the great council, the Sanhedrin, towards Peter and John, and toward Paul; both persecuted, but Paul much more fiercely than the poor fishermen of Galilee. Their loss in the esteem of the world was small compared with that of Saul of Tarsus, "brought up at the feet af Gamaliel" (Acts 22:3), a Pharisee of the Pharisees, a member of the great council. Compare the treatment of the fishermen, Peter and John, by this Council, with that of Paul, and we can realize better what Paul had lost by becoming one of the hated sect of Nazarenes. Though the Council is "minded to slay them" (Peter and the other Apostles), yet Gamaliel can turn them from their purpose, and they dismiss them after beating them, it would seem almost contemptuously, commanding them not to speak in the name of Jesus (Acts 5).

But the same Council with Paul before them seem wrought up to madness, and Lysias, the chief captain, has to rescue Paul by force, fearing lest he should be "torn in pieces by them" (Acts 23:10). Surely we have strong reason to believe "in the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting", resting on such evidence as this.

And later on in this fifteenth chapter, so often set before us at funerals, Paul in most forcible language declares the importance of Christ's Resurrection as an historic fact: "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain" (v. 14). It is the keystone of the arch; when that falls, all falls. But oh! the comfort of that outburst of the Apostle, with which the service begins: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept" (v. 20). "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—"Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (vs. 55 and 57).

THE Gospel for this Eleventh Sunday after Trinity is St. Luke 18:9-14, and is the most familiar perhaps of all the parables, and one of the shortest. It is addressed unto "certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others". The prayers are in strong contrast. The Pharisee gives thanks and asks for nothing; the publican offers no thanks and asks for only one thing. In a different frame of mind the Pharisees's thanksgiving would be eminently proper; that I am not an extortioner, nor unjust, nor an adulterer, are surely good causes for thanksgiving to God, if I recognize the source of the mercy by which I have been preserved from such sins, and can feel that by His grace I have been innocent of such transgression in thought, word, and deed; but who can come into His presence and not feel that at least in thought he has come short of such perfection? Had the Pharisee stopped his thanksgiving there, we might have been charitable enough to suppose that he was humbly thanking God for the grace given him to lead so upright a life; but his contemptuous reference to "this publican" shows how entirely he exalted himself, while "this publican" had humbled himself. No device of Satan is more effective than that by which he induces a man to compare his life with one less favored in his environment, like "this publican", forgetting that God judges us as much by our opportunities as by our conduct, and "that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than" for a Capernaum, or a Chorazin, or a Bethsaida (Matt. 11:20-24).

The attitude of the Pharisee is that of the sinner who feels not his burden of sin; "'Tis all of self and none of Thee"; the publican's is "None of self and all of Thee"

"My sins, my sins, my Saviour,
They take such hold on me;
I am not able to look up,
Save only, Christ, to Thee;
In Thee is full salvation,
In Thee abundant grace;
My shadow and my sunshine;
The brightness of Thy face"
(Ps. 40:15).

The faith of the little child is the faith most pleasing to God, and the Psalmist gives us an example of humility that of the weaned child: "Lord, I am not high-minded; I have no proud looks. I do not exercise myself in great matters that are too high for me; but I refrain my soul and keep it low, like as a child, that is weaned from his mother; yea, my soul is even as a weaned child" (Ps. 131:1-3). James Montgomery's paraphrase is beautiful too:

"Lord, forever at Thy side
Let my place and portion be:
Strip me of the robe of pride;
Clothe me with humility.

"Meekly may my soul receive
All the Spirit hath revealed;
Thou hast spoken, I believe,
Though the oracle be sealed.

"Humble as a little child,
Weaned from his mother's breast,
By no subtleties beguiled,
On thy faithful word I rest."

A YOUTH'S IMPRESSIONS OF THE SEMINARY

By Reverend James R. Winchester

EARLY and first impressions are the most lasting as well as most vivid. Such is the uppermost thought in my mind today, as the dear old Seminary in Virginia comes into vision with all of its hallowed associations. 'Twas in the spring of 1867 that I entered the Episcopal High School, being one of four boys as boarding pupils. Landing in Alexandria by boat from Washington, stopping a few hours at the old Mansion House for dinner and awaiting a conveyance to take me to my destination, I concluded to engage the services of a small Ethiopian to guide me to the Seminary Hill. He consented for the financial consideration of thirty-five cents. After a healthy walk of three miles I found myself at the Seminary, and there met a theological student coming out of Aspinwall Hall. He had known my uncle, Rev. Dr. Samuel Ridout, a beloved alumnus of the Seminary and then a clergyman in Virginia, under whose advice my mother had consented to my going to the High School, just after a severe illness of typhoid-pneumonia. My first impression as I reached the Hill, was "what a beautiful grove of spreading oaks and what restful looking brick buildings nestled amid the quiet". This was very natural, for I had come through rural scenes, where the desolation of war had left the forest trees in a sad plight. Undergrowth marked much of our weary sight that afternoon. Today I seem to be in the midst of that wonderful grove, and, like David, I hear a "sound in the going of the trees", which bestirs my very soul. There was a grandeur in that Seminary grove which ever lives as a trysting place for the High School boy and Seminary student. The spiritual walks with Christian comrades and romantic memories cluster under the shades of those spreading oaks. 1. My first real impression, outside the material things of nature and man's design, was that of the Christian man who met me. He was giant-like as he approached me, being about six feet in height, with a kindly face and gracious manner, Mr. Edmund W. Hubbard of the middle class. He gave me the first lesson of what a "big brother" ought to be, and to this day I think of the Seminary students as "The Big Brothers" of the High School boys. It was the picture of real Christian example and precept Mr. Hubbard (of blessed memory) gave the wandering youth. 1866-67 was the first year after "the War Between the States" (as we all should speak of that awful calamity upon the fairest land on earth) when the Seminary and High School opened their doors for the admission of regular classes. And things were uncomfortable and crude, as many would now conclude; but never were finer men gathered for preparation for the Holy Ministry. That year marked the first graduating class of "post war days" to be ordained. The memory is indeed inspiring. The class was composed of William A. Alrich, Thomas U. Dudley, Horace E. Hayden, Walter Q. Hullihen and Nicholas H. Lewis. The stature of Alrich was suggestive of the lines, "Alexander in corpore parvus erat". It could be well added, however, "in mente magnus erat". It is said Mr. Alrich stood in a pulpit, higher than his body, with a stool to give better outlook, that he said in ringing voice, "there were giants in those days". And so to my mind there were giants in that class. Dudley was the Valedictorian of the class, and in my college and after life experience I have never heard an address that so impressed me. He gave a sentimental picture of the Hill, with the splendid hospitality, deep Christian life and fine opportunities for the students. And as a boy I see the open doors of the professors and residents. Mrs. Harriet Cazenove, Mr. Cassius F. Lee and Bishop Johns, homes all giving me, a boy, a welcome that has abided with me as ideal. Hayden stands as the man of courtesy, not only providing for the music in the chapel, but extending the hand of fellowship to all worshippers. Then Hullihen, for many years the rector at Staunton, Va., the longest lived member of the class, was the handsome and clear cut scholar, too, whom I associate with the "39 Articles", for he took my Sunday-school class one day when our teacher was absent, and he impressed those articles upon us, showing how little we knew of the real meaning. I thank him for the hour he gave us, though it was a moment of suspense to the boys, who thought him rather stern. The last member of that wonderful class was Lewis. He had upon him the signs of a short life, and he was the first to lay down his working tools after a very brief ministry. But some men in a short ministry can accomplish more than years of conspicuous service. Last winter in New Mexico I found Mr. Hunter Lewis, a zealous missionary, whose whole life is spent in doing good. When traveling he may be seen knitting little baby caps for the poor children scattered here and there in his vast field of labor. Hunter Lewis is an alumnus of our beloved Seminary also. He is the nephew of that member of the senior class, and tears come into his voice as he speaks of his uncle. Therefore, my impression of the class of 1867 is an ideal of what a Theological class should be. I doubt whether we have had a more extraordinary Bishop in our Church than Thomas U. Dudley, who by his evangelical magnetism, brought thinking men and women to Christ and left an influence in the House of Bishops for practical judgment that can never die. I can see through the vista of years that senior class in their final examination room. They were deeply interested in each other and showed a responsibility on their faces that I have never forgotten. In the middle class was George W. Peterkin, afterwards Bishop of West Virginia. He was our instructor in the High School that year. We loved to have the hour come when we could go with him into "The Gallic Wars". He entered into our sympathies and to the day of his death I loved him. William Boone was in the class of that middle year, and had his eye set upon China, apparently looking far away. Was it any wonder he followed his illustrious father as Bishop in the Celestial Empire? Of that class, the Rev. Benjamin Reed, of St. Louis, now retired, is the sole survivor. The junior class had in it the close pals of the High School boys. Clifton Penick was loved by us, and we, during my second session, when our High School had developed into large numbers, voluntarily attended his prayer meeting held in our behalf. No doubt he was most helpful in bringing a number of the boys to confirmation that year, for we had a real revival of religion in our school. William Dame was as one of the very boys among us. Robert A. Gibson, afterwards Bishop of Virginia, entered the Seminary after my going to the High School; but I cherish his certificate given me at the end of the session for distinction in Bible work. Such is the picture of my impressions of the Seminary in the high points of the students of those days.

the Church Militant. That courage was associated with humility. As those men went into the chapel for services I never saw any genuflexions; but I did see a marked earnestness on their faces. The sermons were learned discussions of the deep truths of religion. I have two of Dr. Sparrow's sermons given me by my old friend, Mr. Cassius F. Lee. And it seems to me an impossibility for one brain to work out such discourses, so like Canon Liddon's wonderful productions. As a boy I dared not show any impatience under the long preaching, and the professors stand out as real prophets of God in my mind today. When I became a student in the Seminary, Dr. Sparrow had just died, but we had Drs. Packard and Walker, with Dr. McIlhenney, and later Dr. Kinlock Nelson, added to the faculty. The same preaching went on as in my High School days. Evangelism was then my impression on going to the Seminary Hill, and it continues to this day. As the students of those early post war times took notes and carried out the lessons given by the learned Evangelical teachers, so I took notes in my course and thank God for the opportunity I had under those wise men.

I have just read from beginning to end "The Memoirs of Bishop Meade" by my beloved Bishop, who confirmed me, the Rt. Rev. John Johns. This volume was given me by my Sunday-school teacher, Miss Julia Johns, and bears on the fly leaf, "April 7, 1876—In Memoriam". How it brings back the day I was pall-bearer for him who directed my course to the ministry and gave me the financial scholarship enabling me to go through the Seminary curriculum. At this time of perplexing thought and trying problems confronting the Church, every clergyman would find great help in these pages of Bishop Johns, commemorating one of the most wonderful lives in our American Church. Bishop Meade was truly to my mind "the father of the Seminary". It is said that "brick and mortar do not make institutions, but men make them". And so Bishop Meade as a clerical and Francis Scott Key as a layman might have each a monument in front of Aspinwall, to perpetuate their labor of love for the Seminary. A granite cross, symbolic of the Sacrifice of Calvary, exemplified in the great Bishop, and a flag staff bearing the Stars and Stripes, every day exemplifying the Christian patriotism of the author of "The Star Spangled Banner", and "Lord, with glowing heart I praise Thee", of the true patriot would be worth our consideration. This was my thought when I delivered the Centennial address of the Virginia Educational Society, organized in 1818. How appropriate to have these two monuments in front of Aspinwall, saluting the Capital of our country! For the Cross and flag are the "outward and visible signs" of the true American Christian. They would perpetuate the work of Evangelical men, who have left undying influences in our history. The Seminary stands in my heart with walls of salvation and gates of praise. Yes, in the grove of the hill I love, I hear the sound of going, the voice of God, speaking to the conscience that my duty is loyalty to the Church that saved our country. Every student of the Seminary should feel that to whom much is given of him shall much be required. It becomes us, the Alumni, to stand by those men of God, Dr. Berryman Greene and his co-workers. I can never believe any of them can be unfaithful to the traditions of our heritage. I think of the Seminary as holding to the faith once delivered to the saints. May my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth should I preach any other Gospel than that I received from my Alma Mater. These early impressions are strongly sustained by the slogan of the Lutheran Church of this year, "A Changeless Christ for a Changing World". Would that all Christians adopted this slogan and preached it! "The impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture", as the great Gladstone chose to call the Holy Bible, "gives us that "Changeless Christ" as the way out of sin in this changing world. And there can be no substitute for our glorious Saviour in the solution for sin. I have been a Mason for fifty years, and have attained the highest Masonic honors, as the thirty-third in the Scottish Rite and the Red Cross of Constantine in the York Rite. I have read the sacred books of Masonic Philosophy, and have enjoyed the wanderings as a Noble over the playground of the Shrine as well as the mysterious groping in the Grotto as "a prophet", but I have found no solution for sin anywhere, except in Jesus of Nazareth as given in the Rose Crois. A very earnest Mason came to me after he had attained the high point of his aspiration and said, "Can you receive such a sinner as me into the Church?" He saw in the Church, the Body of Christ, the only sure refuge. He was seeking what poor human nature must have for real satisfaction, "The Changeless Christ in a Changing World".

Michael Pupin, author of "The New Reformation", in his autobiography, "From Immigrant to Inventor", strikingly says (page 220), "We do not know of any natural process by which eternal things have been evolved. Their existence is the best philosophic proof that back of all this changeable, visible world there is the unchangeable, the Eternal Divinity." In view of such investigation, we may well rest upon the inspired words of Henry Lyte,

> "Change and decay in all around I see;
> O Thou who changest not, abide with me".

The impressions of my Seminary, thank God, have established this position in my life. As students of our benignant mother we are betrayers of her trust if we fail to present sin and the only remedy for it to men of today. "An open Bible, free grace and faith in Christ Jesus" for all souls, is what I got from boyhood at the Seminary, and it is my message today, as I follow in the steps of the first Bishop sent out from this Seminary, the Rt. Rev. Leonidas Polk, who was followed later in Arkansas by another Alexandria Alumnus, the ninth Bishop, Rt. Rev. Henry Clay. They had no other message than "A Changeless Christ for a Changing World". It is said, "Life is a correspondence with our environment". That being true, how thankful we should be for the blessed healthful environment of the Seminary, its physical, intellectual and spiritual. I can ask for nothing better than that the sound in the "going of the trees" may refresh my own soul in death.

The Great Commission

FROM HANKOW.

Bishop Gilman confirmed fifty-eight Chinese in May and June, twenty-four men and thirty-four women, in Wuchang, Hankow and Ichang.

The Bishop writes: "One of the most baffling problems at the present time is the matter of how to press forward in the evangelistic work. In every center, we have a splendid nucleus of Christians, old and young, who greatly appreciate the life of the Church and are true to our Lord in all phases of life. But propaganda, much of it of a dangerous character, has made people of all classes very wary of anything that could be called by that name.

"Through the work of past years we have built up a splendid set of Chinese clergy, who are able to preach and who are able to organize evangelistic campaigns, but these things are not sufficient for the present emergency. Some of the clergy are greatly agitated in their souls because they feel that they are blocked in doing effective work. What is needed most at the present time is the discovery of some new or old method of approach to non-Christian which will make them ready and eager to receive from us the life-giving message of the Gospel. . . .

"One feels a great urgency in the matter of evangelism because of the increase of evils all about us. The power of opium is growing daily. Concubinage is certainly not decreasing. Misappropriation of funds is threatening the very life of the people. Hopelessness is taking hold of the minds of the people. In the face of all this evil, our work must not tarry. But to do our work we must reach the heart and win the allegiance of each soul, and to accomplish this in a larger measure, we must pray, meditate, and produce methods which will accomplish it."

The clergy of the Diocese of Hankow some time ago appealed for an opportunity to learn something about first-aid, vaccination, etc., so they could help those to whom they ministered in the country. As a result, the Church General Hospital early in the summer provided a Public Health Institute which lasted a week. Each day began with Holy Communion in the hospital chapel. The lectures included such subjects as bacteriology, skin diseases, personal hygiene, practical and school nursing, public health. Eleven clergymen, deacons and catechists were present from seven districts.

In spite of the broken periods of study during the past year, three Chinese women were graduated from the Bible Training School. At the closing exercises in St. Phoebe's School, Hankow, the little chapel was crowded with friends and fellow workers, with twelve clergymen besides the bishop and archdeacon in the chancel. Because of the irregular school year, these graduates are to have one year of practical work in some parish before they can exchange their certificates for the diplomas which indicate that they are graduate Bible women.

The Chinese priest at St. John's Church, Hankow, the Rev. Milton Ling, writes: "During the most critical time of the political unrest under the threatening persecutions last summer, we made special effort to stand more closely and firmly together by organizing a musical club to cheer up our hearts and to make ourselves joyful, whereas otherwise we might be weeping and feeling downcast. From this club we started a preaching band holding evangelistic meetings in the cool, open-air of the compound, when the weather was too hot to have any meetings at all within doors. After preaching the Gospel, games, story-telling and music followed. The audience increased from fifty to over two hundred."

Church School classes here, entirely voluntary, drew almost the whole body of pupils from the primary school, about two hundred and fifty; fifty-seven had a perfect attendance throughout the term.

RELIGION AS A HOBBY.

Dear Friend:

Have you considered that some men and women take to religion as other men and women take to golf or other sports? It is a something that varies the monotony of toil, business, or study. The Church and the Club serve the same purpose, and have about the same interests and enthusiasm.

Their conversational interests are bounded by the Church or the Club, and in either they find their social center where good fellowship and communal interests are fostered and held up as the one thing desirable. Even the game itself is ofttimes of secondary importance.

Both Church and Club have their unwritten laws for the good behaviour of their members; they must not be too pious in the one, nor too bad in the other, and are expected to pay their subscriptions with more or less promptitude. In the game itself, there is a measure of sacrifice, an abstention from eating, drinking, and living, that the player may be fitted for the play.

To the few it becomes the objective of their ambition and physical resources; to the many it is the sport of the hour, the thrill of the moment, and the gathering of kindred spirits. All such are paid in the currency of the flesh, and are satisfied with their investments. It is born of the flesh, and remains through all time, just S E L F. Surely Christianity is something greater than this.

Christianity is not an appendage to life. It is life itself. "For me to live is Christ!" He is "the Way, the Truth, the Life".

He is the Way, without which there is no going.
He is the Truth, without which there is no knowing.
He is the Life, without which there is no living.

Christianity as a hobby exists for itself alone. Christianity as a life has in it an element of self-sacrifice; it lives for others.

The need of the heathen world contains no appeal to a religion that has no heart and is not centered in God but in itself. There is no propagating power in a formulae. God is the Giver of life, and it is life alone that begets life.

Christianity as a hobby, has no living testimony. It is deaf, dumb, and blind. It hears not the groan of creation; it has no voice to express the mind of God; it has no vision to discover either a lost world or a lost soul. To make religion a hobby is to lose consciousness of God, and the purpose of God. Real religion is to know God and do exploits; to storm the ramparts of hell and pull down the strongholds of the devil—the weapons of our warfare being not carnal, but mighty in God.

This Mission has no appeal, but to living souls, to help it fight darkness and death in North East India. Are you ALIVE unto God? Then pray the prayer of faith that overcometh the world.

Yours in the only life worth living,

PROBLEMS OF THE PRAYER LIFE: By James O. Buswell, Jr., D. D., President of Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill. Cloth. Pp. 127. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 843-845 North Wells Street, Chicago, Ill. Price, 75 cents net.

We are grateful that Dr. Buswell has denominated his book as treating the prayer life. By far too many regard prayer as a formal exercise, the benefit of which consists mainly in the conscientious regularity with which it is exercised; then in some emergency to really pray with unction. There is a vast difference between saying prayers and praying. When the little miss, in her nighty, appeared to bid the family the usual farewell, she said: "Good night, everybody; I'm going to talk with God." How much it meant to her is indifferent to us. But it means much to the grown-ups, with whom prayer is a listless program. We pray because we have been accustomed to it; because we fear we should meet some calamity if it is omitted: because we know we should. But that is immeasurably below the position of privilege which our Lord has accorded us.

Prayer is to be a life, "the Christian's native air". And that life makes prayer an incessant, vitalizing part of our daily career. There is not, at least should not be, any moment when prayer would be uncomfortable to us, inconsistent with what we are doing, saying or thinking. True, we have to bargain in business, to apply ourselves to our desk or counter, work-bench or the office; yet, never in the long day need we allow any break in the current that holds us to the heart of our dear Lord.

Dr. Buswell has analyzed with keen perception the motives and methods of the prayer life in a way that discloses to us his own familiarity with the problems he treats. We honor writers who reflect for us the inner workers of their own hearts. It may cost much to do this. But the confidence engendered by this expression of personal experience is worth the price. And our author has paid it ungrudgingly.

This book should be at the bedside, for the sincere appreciation of its teachings as we compose ourselves for rest or awake ere the beginning of the day. By all means, let it be taken thoughtfully in paragraphs.

PROPHETIC PICTURES OF CHRIST: By James H. Todd. Cloth. Pp. 136. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 843-845 North Wells Street, Chicago, Ill. Price, $1.00.

This book makes us feel that Dr. Pierson is again with us. Clear insight, penetrating analysis and reverent association of the Old Testament to our Lord Jesus mark the whole trend of the treatise.

Modernism, essentially repudiates prophecy. We cannot tell why. But few of those who espouse that school of thought make any point of this vital study. One reason why we may vigorously uphold such a contribution as this is that when a Jew becomes a Christian, he immediately and whole-heartedly sees our Lord in the Holy Scriptures, and strengthens his faith in the Son of God by his knowledge of what "the law, the psalms and prophets" say concerning Him.

Mr. Todd daringly enters the realm of types and makes much, that has been guardedly considered by even conscientious teachers, bright with prophetic illumination. On general principles, we hold as types only those things which reflect the person and work of our Lord. Joseph, for instance, supplies parallels, but is not distinctly a type. But the tabernacle with its furniture, is. The manna and the divinely provided water are a type because mentioned specifically (1 Cor. 10:3, 4). The simile is easily applied to our Lord and His Church, where the type may be questioned. But this is superficial to the matter at hand. This book shows where we may find traces of intention on the part of the Holy Spirit to anticipate the person and office of our Lord Jesus in many and varied conditions and situations of the Old Testament life and promisings. Twenty-four succinct, applicative and soul-satisfying pictures are herein portrayed with fidelity to truth and a devout desire to honor our blessed Lord.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE MODERN STATE: By Charles C. Marshall. Dodd, Meade & Co., New York. Price, $2.50.

This distinguished layman of our Church has written a timely book reviewing the Roman claims to supremacy and showing how they conflict with the rights of the peoples among whom that Church exists. He has gone as far as one possibly could to be fair in his presentation of the topic, and whenever possible proves his point by reference to authorities that Rome herself recognizes. He shows that in the "Twilight Zone" mentioned by Cardinal Gibbons there are ample opportunities for conflict between the Roman Church and the modern state. He proves the claims of Rome to be absolutely at variance with the fundamental principles of the constitution that guarantees us our liberties, and shows that Rome demands far more than the equality of religious opportunity that she now enjoys here. He clinches his argument by citing modern incidents, such as the recent occurrences in Mexico, to prove that her claims are neither forgotten nor held in abeyance, but that they are today fruitful sources of trouble. This book provides a conclusive answer to Governor Smith's letter in the Atlantic Monthly. In place of his generalities, it gives incidents and documents to prove that his statements are directly contradicted by his Church's highest authorities.

Incidentally the author brings out how little tolerance Rome would have for others had she control, although at present she is making a great cry of intolerance against those who decry her political activities. The book will be excellent reading for those in our midst who have been looking toward Rome. It should provide a good autidote for the Roman fever.

EVEN PSYCHOLOGICAL PORTRAITS: By Mabel Lee Cooper. Cloth. Pp. 181. The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price, $2.00.

This is a handbook for parents and teachers, appealingly presenting problems of childhood and youth not readily comprehended by those to whom the custody of young life is committed.

We shrink from associating psychology with our Christian faith and the work of the Holy Spirit. But one is not irritated by this study. The author urges that we shall take different views of our children as the years advance in their lives. Too many of us, who have brought up a family (and we sometimes wonder if it was not in spite of, rather than because of us that they turned out so well), have been guilty of setting a fixed mold for the management of our youngsters. In the earlier years expecting too much; later, treating them as mere children.

The author knows her subject. We bow respectfully before a woman who has filled as many and varied offices as the title page indicates. The treatment is clear and concise; the illustrations, apt and worth remembering. She has drawn from many sources in her training and her teaching career. The Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., in his brief introduction, declares that the book is rendering a real service in making people think.

That we may comprehend the scope of this contribution to the study of the culturing of the young, we observe that her periods of life embrace, Infancy, Early Childhood, Middle Childhood, Later Childhood, Early Adolescence, Middle Adolescence and Later Adolescence. Those who would look back upon a well-spent career of family education; or as teachers in the Sunday School would reffect with satisfaction upon a service among young people that is worthy of remembrance, will do well to "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" this volume.

WHO PAYS THE PIPER . . .

Reply to Bishop Huntington.

Mr. Editor:

Bishop Huntington, in his open eltter, makes a palpable hit when he questions the validity of reports based only upon such cursory examinations as can be made by traveling commissions.

But I am afraid (perhaps he would agree with me) that the answer to his main question ("Are our . . . churches to be conducted from 281 Fourth Avenue or from the field") must be sought for in the old adage which tells us that he who pays the piper calls the tune. If the piper shirk that responsibility, his paying agent is likely to usurp the prerogative of calling it. People sometimes think that they detect a note of cynicism in this and, as the adage is sometimes employed, they are right. But to condemn it utterly is to suggest that a man should never concern himself as to how its money is spent. In this case, the payer is the American Church: the disbursing agent is "281".

("281" is less disambiguous than it was before 1919, but I follow Bishop Huntington in giving it primary reference to the Department of Missions.)

The American Church must accept some measure of responsibility for the direction of work which it supports. If what ought to be a mere clearing house assume an undue share in that direction, is this not due to the lethargy of the Church at large and as represented in the General Convention and (ad interim) by the House of Bishops?

There is one simple and obvious matter to which attention ought to be given. "Native" dioceses ought not to be set up by us, or to be described as self-supporting when, in point of fact, a large part of the money which supports them is paid by the American Church through "281". This means that these dioceses cannot be held answerable to the American Church, but are largely subject to the now unchecked purse-string power of "281".

Bishop Huntington speaks of the opinion of "three out of four of the bishops". Ought not this to be two out of three? If Bishops Suffragan are to be counted, why not other clergy as well? Apart from the power to confirm and ordain under the direction of their diocesans, suffragans are, like other priests, "ecclesiastical subjects" in their dioceses. It might also be well to mention the fact that the Bishop who stands alone has had the longest and most varied experience of the three and has also shown a consistent desire to be loyal to the standards of the Church.

It may be said, on behalf of the commission's finding, that they had before them a considerable history of relevant experience in other fields. Schools in Japan, for instance, long ago submitted to Government registration with the result that none of them now makes the teaching of religion a part of its curriculum. It seems to be thought necessary, in order to raise money for them, to give a somewhat exaggerated idea of their usefulness as evangelistic agencies.

But all this, while it lends some support to the commission's finding, so far as it opposes registration of schools, did not necessitate a journey to the Far East. Bishop Huntington is abundantly justified in questioning the usefulness of the three days' sojourn in his field, and in his dislike of any appearance of quasi-ecclesiastical jurisdiction being exercised by "281".

APPEAL FROM THE FIELD.

Mr. Editor:

I have recently taken charge of three more missions at San Marcial, Magdalena and Socorro. This brings my rural work to fifteen missions.

At Socorro I have charge of Epiphany Church. It is an adobe church, built about thirty years ago, when Bishop Kendrick was Bishop of New Mexico.

Socorro is a place of some importance. It is the seat of the New Mexico School of Mines, with about one hundred and fifty students. Among the students this session, are four communicants. The high-school enrollment is one hundred and fifteen; the grammar school, two hundred and thirty.

The church is badly in need of repairs. At present it has been abandoned and services are held in a little Mexican Methodist Church. It will take five hundred ($500) dollars to repair the church. I have undertaken to raise $360 of the five hundred in this way:

The ladies of the guild are making a bed quilt. There are to be thirty-six squares. Each square is to contain from one to ten names, at the rate of one dollar a name. Any Guild or Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary or individual giving ten dollars will have the whole square. When we have raised $360 the Bishop will give one hundred dollars. The other forty dollars will be given by the communicants of the Church. There are seventeen now, since the Bishop confirmed six on April 13.

CONVINCING.

Mr. Editor:

That article on the retreat to Rome (July 28 and August 4) is so fine, so clear and convincing, I want to send it to a friend, and want a copy to keep, as I send my paper regularly to a friend as soon as I read it.

You are surely doing a noble work in trying to banish error and false doctrine from our beloved Church. My prayers are with you.

JEFFERSON DAVIS MEMORIAL.

Mr. Editor:

Having been a life-long admirer of the famous statesman, Jefferson Davis, and believing him to be, as indeed a majority of Americans do, one of the outstanding men of our country, I am deeply interested in any movement to perpetrate his memory through an appropriate and suitable memorial.

The fact that I have not seen or read in the papers any mention of any attempt having been made to start a movement toward the erection of a Jefferson Davis Memorial College, prompts me to write to ask if such a memorial has not been considered and if not your idea as to the practicability of it. I note such a memorial has been erected in memory of other famous statesmen and it occurs to me that no more fitting tribute could be paid by the American people to one of its most famous statesmen, than a Jefferson Davis Memorial College erected in one of the Southern States.

INSPIRATION.

Mr. Editor:

I shall avail myself of this opportunity to say what I so often feel, that your paper is to me a wonderful inspiration, and often just a paragraph from "Thoughts For the Thoughtful", committed to memory and repeated during a trying day, prove support and comfort. I have organized a little Sunday School among these mountain children and find your Young Folks' Department indispensable. A paper like yours is a wonderful source of spreading the Gospel and cheering the lonely. It is like a pebble thrown in water, ever widening, for I am sure no one could destroy a copy of The Southern Church, it must continue to travel and serve. Pardon my taking so much of your time.

Church Intelligence

From "Life and Light", a Red-hot Paper: Sidney, Nebraska.

Do you know what is being done, or is likely to be done at the next General Convention of the Episcopal Church? You should know; and to that end, we commend to you the best Church paper —The Southern Churchman, published in Richmond, Virginia. It is published weekly and is distinctly worth the subscription price, $3.00 a year; $2.00 to parsons. It has educational articles; not jelly-fish platitudes; and keeps you posted on the doings of infidel modernists, and Anglo- (half-breed) Catholics. Try it for six months, at least.

The Gospel Catechist.

Under this title we are planning to study month by month, the definite Teachings of Christ and His Apostles: Degeneration, Redemption, Atonement, Regeneration, Eternal Life, "Election of Grace". There are eternal unknowable mysteries connected with the human race, and the Creator's dealings with it. It is vain to ask Why, or How, seeking an answer in the human intellect; the only and most sublime solution is—"Even so, Father, for so it was well pleasing in Thy sight" (Luke 10: 21). What is a Catechist? One who instructs by question and answer. We begin with the Creation of Man. Q. Where do we get our information of the creation of Man? A. Only from the Bible, especially Genesis 1:26, 27; 2:7. Q. What do we learn from this account? A. (1). That man was specially created, and was not an evolution from some lower animal. (2). That man was created a compound or complex Being, possessing an earthly or material body, indwelt by a spiritual entity, called the Soul, in turn vivified by a special inbreathing by his Creator, by which man "became a Living Soul" or Being. (3). That man was created in a state of holiness, righteousness, intelligence, and free will, being thus created in the "image" of his Creator. Q. Why did God breathe into man the "breath of Life"? A. Because man was to be superintendent over the earth, and so needed a rational or intelligent mind, which the special inbreathing gave him. Q. Was man created mortal or immortal? A. He was im-mortal so long as he was in harmony with his Creator through obedience, but subject to death —physical, mental, and spiritual, if disobedient (Genesis 2:16, 17). Q. What restriction did God place on Adam? A. The test of obedience which He places on all intelligent created Beings, and through which their spiritual life is retained, through harmonious unity with God. Q. What was Adam's essential nature? A. He was a psycho-physical or earth-Being. Wholly on the Earth Plane or non-spiritual. So referred to by St. Paul—"The first man, Adam, became a living Soul; the first man is of the earth; earthy" (Epis. 1 Cor. 15:45, 47).

(In our next (May) issue we will have a brief study of the so-called evolution of man from the brute creation.)

Bishop Burton's Resignation as Bishop of Lexington.

On the sixteenth of July, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Burton, Bishop of Lexington, informed the Standing Committee of that Diocese, that, in due time, he purposed to send to the Presiding Bishop his resignation of his jurisdiction, to be acted upon by the House of Bishops at the General Convention. The reason he assigned is, in the language of the Church's Constitution, "advanced age", and he is in his seventy-sixth year; the fifty-second of his ministry; and the thirty-third of his episcopate. This action, Bishop Burton said, had been determined upon after long and prayerful deliberation, and was taken with a deep sense of the manifold blessings of the Divine Head of the Church upon him personally throughout his ministry, and with a grateful realization of the precious friendships he had enjoyed and the cooperation that had been given him by fellow workers.

The Standing Committee, meeting July 27, in acknowledging this communication from Bishop Burton, wrote:

"There was a feeling in the hearts of us all of great regret that you felt it necessary to take this action; and we felt that we could not give adequate expression to all that was in our hearts, but neither could we allow the occasion to pass without saying something of the love and respect that all of us feel for you, both as chief pastor and as our friend.

We do not wish to use language that is extravagant, but in simple sincerity we feel that we must bear our testimony to the unwavering fidelity and personal sacrifice with which you have administered the affairs of this Diocese, and the generous consideration and courtesy and friendship which you have shown to each and all of us.

We, as members of the flock of which you are chief pastor under Christ, desire to say that you have led us as a true shepherd during all these years in which you have followed so faithfully in the blessed steps of Christ's most holy life."

Simultaneosly with his letter to the Presiding Bishop conveying his resignation, Bishop Burton addressed a letter to the clergy of the diocese, to their vestries or church committees, and to their congregations, announcing his action. A supplementary letter was addressed to the Cathedral Clergy and Congregation, to which letter a loving and grateful response was made by the clergy and all the organizations of the parish.

The Lexington newspapers have printed the foregoing correspondence and have added editorial comment, the Lexington Leader saying, among other things: "While no one could wish to deny Bishop Burton the relief which he craves, every one who knows him and has followed his career will feel a pang of regret that circumstances have led him to take this action. . . . He has stood as a lighthouse for more than a generation, supporting and renewing the faith of multitudes by his example and by his firm faith and lofty character. His life has been like the clear flame of a lamp in the night. His spirit has inspired all who have come under his influence. He and his devoted wife have done justly, loved mercy, and walked humbly with God, holding fast the traditions of the Church, rooted and grounded in love."

Virginia Seminary Investments.

In the last four years the Seminary has sent twenty men into the missionary field, not counting several who are working in the domestic mission field of the Far West, such as Eastern Oregon. Besides this some five or six men who applied for foreign missionary service could not be accepted because of inadequate physique or on account of disturbed conditions in China. More Virginia Seminary students have gone into the mission fields in the past ten years than in any other decade in its history.

Ecclesiastical Changes in England.

The Rt. Rev. William Temple, Bishop of Manchester, has been named as the new Archbishop of York, succeeding the Hon. and Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang. Bishop Temple is forty-six years of age, and son of the late Archbishop Temple of Canterbury. He has labor leanings and was largely responsible for the institution of the Church Assembly during the war.

Bishop Temple's successor at Manchester is Dr. Guy Warman, Bishop of Clemsford, and Bishop of Truro from 1919 to 1923. He was principal of St. Aidan's Theological College for nine years. He has written several books on New Testament theology and the Reformation.

The Bishop of Salisbury, the Right Rev. St. Clair Donaldson, has been selected to fill the vacancy in the Church's representation in the House of Lords, which is caused by Temple's appointment to York. Dr. Temple as Bishop of Manchaster had the right to sit in the Upper Chamber as the vacancy occurs.

Outside of the two Archbishops and the Bishops of London, Durham and Winchester, however, the Bishops who sit in the House of Lords are chosen by seniority, so the Bishop of Salisbury assumes the former Bishop of Manchester's position in the Lords, while the new Bishop of Manchester goes to the bottom of the waiting list of Bishops, more than a dozen in number, who may sit whenever there is a vacancy. Only the five Churchmen mentioned have their own seats.

Eastward Position in the Creed.

Several correspondents have asked us, "Why turn to the East in the Creeds"? and I have not seen the explanation given which we were taught. This is the teaching we received: A distinction was drawn between turning to the East in the Creed and the Eastward position in a celebration. Old-fashioned Evangelicals who would not accept the latter, practiced the former. The reason, as we were told, is that in early days devil and pagan worship were towards the West. When the convert to Christianity was baptized, he began the service facing the West, and then renounced or turned his back upon the Devils and false Gods, reciting the Apostles' Creed as he did so. In India, while the Jew worshipped towards Jerusalem, the Christian worshipped towards the East, and this was a recognized mark of distinction between the two. And so turning to the East when reciting the Creeds is a reminder of one's baptism in which the promise was made to turn one's back upon all evil; in fact linked up with the thought of baptism, this act is full of significance and evangelical teaching.—F. H. B., In Canadian Churchman.

Church Army Notes.

Captain Mountford reports encouraging news from the Church Army Headquarters in New York.

There were twelve candidates for the work during the month of July; these were given a try-out in mid-August.

Ten caravans and jitneys have been active throughout the summer in rural missionary work.

Two evangelists in Northwest Colorado report five mission stations opened.

Nine men commence twelve weeks' work in Eastern Oregon on September 1.

A new caravan has been constructed for the Diocese of Eastern Carolina.

Captain Mountford expects to be present, with three or four colleagues, at the General Convention. The headquarters there will be at 706 Twentieth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Throughout the summer and extending through September lunch-hour addresses are being given, four days each week, on Wall Street, and the crowds attending the meetings have shown keen interest. This piece of work is being done under the auspices of the Men's Committee of Trinity Church, New York.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Dr. Cumming Lauds Ennion G. Williams

The reappointment of Dr. Ennion G. Williams as State Health Commissioner is highly pleasing to Dr. Hugh Cumming, Surgeon-General of the United States, according to a letter received yesterday by Governor Harry F. Byrd. The letter says:

"I have just learned of your reappointment of my long-time friend, Dr. Ennion G. Williams, to the position of Commissioner of Health of your State, which position he has filled so ably and with such benefit to the people of Virginia not only, but of the United States. Not only as a friend of Dr. Williams personally, but as a Virginian and as the head of the Public Health Service of this country, I am sure I am voicing the opinion of all the State health officers as well as the medical officers of the Public Health Service, in congratulating you upon your decision. Ennion Williams' high personal character and professional attainments combined with a breadth of vision unusual in public health matters, have for many years placed him in the forefront of the public health work of this country."

Rixy Station.

The first confirmation in St. Mary's Church, Rixey Station, held last month, was an occasion of great rejoicing. The beautiful new church was filled with worshippers and a class of seventeen, more than half of whom were adults, was confirmed by Bishop Tucker. Everyone was greatly encouraged at the progress of the work which was begun only two years ago.

The occasion was saddened by the death early in the morning of the day of confirmation of Admiral P. M. Rixey, who donated the land, was a general contributor to the building fund of the church. He left a bequest of $20,000 to St. Mary's Church, more especially to secure the church against debt.

The rector of the parish, the Rev. John G. Sadtler, is spending the month of August at New Russia, N. Y., in the Adirondack Mountains.

At Leesburg.

During the absence of the rector, on vacation, St. James' Church, Leesburg, the pulpit was filled last Sunday morning, July 29, by the Rev. Wm. H. Burkhardt, D. D., a former rector. His sermon was most forceful, and highly appreciated by a large and attentive congregation. The night service was held on the Courthouse lawn at which service the Rev. Wm. Page Dame was in charge, preaching a most helpful sermon to a congregation of some one thousand hearers. The open-air union services have proven a great spiritual awakening and uplift to the town and community, having been started some summers ago by the Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., and each July and August sees increased interest in these services. We have had as many as 1,500 people at these open-air services.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Christ Church, Roanoke, Consecrated.

A service of unusual impressiveness was conducted by Bishop Jett at Christ Church, Roanoke, Virginia, on the morning of Sunday, August 5, the occasion being the consecration of the handsome building, the last of the debt for which was recently paid by the congregation. In the chancel were th Rt. Rv. Robrt Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia; the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia; the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector of Christ Church; the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector of St. George's, Fredericksburg and temporarily supplying at St. John's, Roanoke; the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., of Trinity Church, Staunton; the Rev. Herbert H. Young, of Bluefield, Dean of Associate Missions; the Rev. Lynne H. Meade, of St. Peter's, Huntington, W. Va., and the Rev. A. C. Bussingham, of St. Peter's, Roanoke.

Mr. D W. Reed, representing the Trustees of Christ Church, read the Instrument of Donation. Bishop Jett had the Service of Consecration and Mr. C. Edwin Michael, acting for the Bishop, read the Sentence of Consecration. Various-parts of the service were taken by the clergymen present. Mr. Michael, in a brief address, sketched interestingly the history of the new building, which originated in a meeting of the congregation in March, 1913; the congregation at that time worshipping in the old church at Church Avenue and Commerce Street. The new church and parish house were used for the first time at Easter, 1918. Mr. Michael emphasized the fact that while engaged in the heavy expense of construction the Christ Church congregation did not fail in its obligations to the Diocese and General Church in any particular; Christ Church having contributed, since the organization of the new diocese on December 19, 1919, more than $50,000 to the Nation-Wide Campaign (or Field Department).

Mr. Michael made a touching reference to the fact that this was Mr. Mead's last service as rector of Christ Church, since his resignation was to take effect on Monday. Mr. Michael spoke of the splendid work that Mr. Mead has done in the fifteen years that he has served Christ Church, his constant interest in the public affairs of Roanoke, his popularity in the city at large and the deep affection that is felt for him by his congregation. On behalf of the people of Christ Church he expressed the sincere hope that Mr. Mead may soon recover his health and strength, the loss of which is compelling him at this time to retire from active work.

Bishop Tucker preached the sermon, taking as his text Ezra 2:11-16; prefacing the sermon with an affectionate reference to his long association with Mr. Mead in the Diocese of Southern Virginia before the formation of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia.

Bishop Jett celebrated the Holy Communion, being assisted by Bishop Tucker and the other clergymen.

It is the plan of Mr. and Mrs. Mead to spend about a month in Lexington, Va., and after that to be for a considerable time at the home of Mrs. W. C. Rierson, near Altavista, Va.

Founders' Day at St. Peter's-in-the-Mountain.

An annual event of special importance at St. Peter's-in-the-Mountains, a mission near Callaway in Franklin County, is the celebration of "Founders' Day". This took place this year on Sunday, July 8. The service was conducted by the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs of Rocky Mount, and Judge G. E. Cassell, of East Radford, gave a splendid address centered around the lives of various characters in the Old Testament. "Founders' Day" is also a sort of home-coming day for those persons raised in the community and now living elsewhere. After the service there was a community picnic, and it was estimated that there were present at least four hundred and fifty people, many of them coming from Roanoke, Rocky Mount, Bent Mountain and other more distant points.

Miss Caryetta L. Davis is the missionary in charge at St. Peter's, being ably assisted by Miss Mary F. Montgomery, and also during the school session by Miss Susan R. Saunders.

Miss Ora Harrison, missionary-in-charge at St. John's-in-the-Mountains, Endicott, in Franklin County, spent two weeks during July as the guest of Miss

WHEN JESUS CAME TO BIRMINGHAM.

When Jesus came to Golgotha
They hanged Him to a tree;
They drove great nails through hands and feet,
And made a Calvary.

They crowned Him with a crown of thorns,
Red were His wounds and deep,
For these were crude and cruel days
And human life was cheap.

When Jesus came to Birmingham
They simply passed Him by;
They did not hurt a hair of Him;
They only let Him die.

For men had grown more tender;
They did not give Him pain.
They only just passed down the street
And left Him in the rain.

And still He cried, "Forgive them,
They know not what they do";
And still it rained the wintry rain
And drenched Him through and through.

The crowd went home and left Him,
With not a soul to see
And Jesus crouched against the wall
And wept for Calvary.

For The Southern Churchman.

A Layman at Church.

Louis Deschamps.

A few early comers have taken their places quietly, and seem to be lost in thought. The organ softly pervades the church with waves of tremulous harmony. Shafts of light stream dimly through stained glass windows, casting a beautiful glow of splendor over all. People are entering, bowing the head reverently as they take their seats. Strange, how one touch of worship makes the whole world kin. We feel the common tie of religion, the most mystic and deepest of fraternal bonds. Who prays beside me cannot be a stranger. The artificial differences of wealth and social conditions disappear in God's presence. In the realm of the imagination, where all things are possible, the mind pictures the congregation as representative of a still larger assembly, even of all nations, united in the love of the same God, sympathetic in the understanding of life's verities, charitable from the consciousness of a common, universal soul hunger. The beauty and inspiration of a church service depends more upon the spiritual condition of the laymen than upon the formalities of the ritual. It is the reverent approach, the prayerful thoughts that prepare the mind for God's message.

The music of an old hymn peals forth in rich tones. Familiar words evoke thoughts of tender memory. It is a very old and venerable hymn. Lips that are now dust have sung these same words. What is more sacred, or more vitally interesting, than a way of life that has stood the test of ages? The lives of our forefathers were just as mysterious as our own, and were strengthened, comforted, and transformed by the spiritual power of that same hymn. They also doubted, suffered, and often failed —yet their religion was kept sacredly above the mere rational. It was supreme and holy in the spirit of reverence expressed by the sentiment of the hymn. And in the last hour it did not fail them. Surely the things of the spirit are beyond the limitations of time and can never be ruled obsolete. Knowledge grows and changes but faith is enriched never surpassed.

Now the Scripture lesson is being read. Perhaps the preacher wonders if we laymen are really listening. Sometimes we are in the mood for piety, again we sit attentively, but preoccupied with remote thoughts. It seems that our greatest privilege and duty must await the pleasure of our most trivial human moods. We are but imperfect mediums of divine power, like ants tugging at a precious stone. Yet we know that God is within us, and this knowledge changes futility to faith and hope. Although a pious mood may come upon us now and then, true piety and enjoyment of religion must be attained voluntarily, persistently, and wholeheartedly. But we must be humble in piety, because self-righteousness and hypocrisy proclaim false piety.

The musical program of the service takes time formerly given to the sermon, which is thought to be such a strain on the layman's patience, that it must be preceded by soothing music. A long, good sermon is a generous helping of spiritual food, but modern opinion would have the sermon as a kind of spiritual medicine, rather than food, and it must be administered in small, and if possible, tasteless doses. Music is not to be disdained, but it is much more available than good sermons, sermons that take up the layman's thoughts where his spiritual inexperience leaves them, and guides the mind in the labyrinth of real, human problems of daily life.

The sermon is being preached. If preachers could see into the thoughts of the congregation, it would be like observing a large switchboard of a telephone exchange, where little lights appear and disappear over a large space. Reaction to the sermon appears in a similar way in the layman's mind. Whenever a thought from the sermon makes connection with his own experience, a light of understanding and appreciation is the result. The sermon is on the general subject of repentance. We laymen are interested from the fact that the preacher would have us know that he, too, has puzzled over problems of repentance. He speaks from God, not as God. His spiritual experience has been more definite than ours, therefore we listen as fellow travelers to one who has gone a little farther along the way. Good sermons leave good thoughts in even a layman's commercial mind. We cannot repent by leaving our sins conveniently outside the church door, while we confess them formally within. Repentance is too often self-delusion, like travelers who hide contraband during the examination by custom-house officers, only to return to their hiding place and recover the forbidden pleasures. During a few moments of prayerful contrition, remorse, and shame, we repent of our sins, only to find that the love of them is still in our heart. We wonder why constant failure is the fate of our good intentions, and devout resolutions to repent of some especially tenacious sin. It is easy to attribute our failures to weakness. Yet God's Word promises that no temptation is beyond our power to bear. Remorse and shame are only the forerunners of true repentance. It is a change of desires, a change of mind —not a mere promise to combat treasured desires. As long as we love a sin, no amount of self-control can bring about real repentance. What a flood of light such a sermon throws upon the layman's own problems!

And now the service is being brought to a close. The inspiration of a real spiritual experience is like the stirring strains of the great old hymn, "How Firm a Foundation", that lingers in the mind. The magic effect of it all will soon lose its poignancy, submerged in the currents of everyday affairs. But it is not in vain, because the day brings its time of prayer as well as its time of work and pleasure, and sermons help prayers. Moreover as life's tide begins to ebb and the shadows lengthen, what we heard in church and learned in prayer will emerge from the kaleidoscopic view of our life as the welcome rays of the Light as we pass out to sea.

Christmas Cheer In Alaska.

"It is very absurd to talk of having Christmas in the Klondike," grumbled Schofield. "All the essentials are wanting."

"What do you consider the essentials of Christmas?" inquired the Parson.

"Why, everything that this camp lacks. Children in the first place. Imagine a Christmas without children!"

"And stores at which to buy gifts," added his wife.

"And wax candles, and spangles and candy and toys for the tree," said Kitty.

"And choir boys to sing carols," and the eyes of the English nurse were full of dreams of Old England.

"And sleigh-bells, and dancing and fun," chimed in Viva ecstatically.

"And eggs for the Christmas pudding and cake." It was a very faint voice thats aid this. and all turned their heads with loving smiles towards the bed of the invalid.

"To my mind." contended the Parson "there is absolutely nothing wanting in this Christmas that is essential to its good cheer. Haven't we all received the richest Christmas gift that our hearts could possibly desire—the perfect health we enjoy in this splendid winter, is Christmas gift enough for anybody. And we are not so impoverished but we can do something out of the ordinary for the poor fellows in St. Mary's Hospital, and for others in the camp. And by all means let us have the Clan together for a Christmas feast."

"Goodness! Where will we put them?" exclaimed Mrs. Schofield and Viva together.

"That is our greatest problem," admitted the Parson, "but I think it can be solved. Schofield, can't we get the use of the long building of the Mounted Police?"

"Captain Considine and his wife are preparing a feast for the members of the force and will probably have use for it," was the reply.

"No, I think not," the Parson persisted. "So many of the police are away that their dining-room will give them all the space they need for their tree and feast. Schofield is the house committee," he announced. "Sandy will look after the stoves, while Viva and I will be the program committee."

"But how will we get the Clan together?" asked Viva.

"The plan will be something like this," he answered: "I shall strike up the creeks tomorrow to rally the Clan. I shall go to Sandy's claim first and bring Carter down to Dawson with me; I think I shall go up to Miller's cabin on Upper Bonanza and invite him; he is in such a state of anxiety about his wife and child, a little diversion will do him good. I will rely on you, Viva, to pet him up and put some life in him. Then I shall visit the T'ree Yons, Shorty and Pete, and Dutch Schmidst, although I cannot invite them to the Christmas Tree."

"Of course, you will bring Scotty and the College Boys," said Kitty.

"Oh, yes, I'll notify them as I go by and come down with them, or probably send them down ahead of me. I shall hardly get back to Dawson until the morning of Christmas Day. Old Sandy, here, will have to take charge of things and get everything ready by Christmas Eve."

"How about the caribou meat?"

"Set your mind at rest on that subject," answered Long Sandy; "the thin-chested College Boy has stopped stampeding, and is getting fat as a porcupine hauling in and gorging himself on the caribou Lassie shot. Two hundred fat caribou have been added to the bill of fare of the Klondikers."

"My dear child," said the Parson, going to Viva and patting her shoulder, "you have done more than all the doctors or all the preachers in the Klondike to give health and courage to the people of this big camp. You will never know until the Day of Judgment just how much good you have accomplished with that little gun of yours."

"The good Lord deliver me from ever having to slaughter so many of His innocent creatures again," said the girl. "Their big liquid eyes haunt me still in my dreams."

The little Doctor drew his watch with a significant gesture toward the bed.

"All right, Doctor, we are over-staying our limit. Good-night, my dear lady," said the Parson, going to the bed and taking the thin hand of the invalid: "I will send Fatty Lee down tomorrow, and if you are able to whisper him a little advice on the subject of dried-apple-and-caribou mince pie, and the best way to make Christmas pudding with evaporated eggs, it'll save the boy very many blunders; he will have to be our chief cook in your absence. But don't let your mind worry one bit about this Christmas; we are going to have the time of our lives, and bring something of the Christmas spirit into the Klondike."

Outside the door he and Sandy, with Schofield, had a little conference. "Your idea is a great one," said the old miner. "The whole camp has the dumps and needs cheering up; many of them are making their fortunes, and the pay-streaks on all the creeks are yielding surprisingly, but all cheer seems to be absent from the camp; half the boys in the hospital are dying of home-sickness."

The chief difficulty about preparing the caribou roasts, the Christmas pudding, mince pies and cakes, was the lack of stove room. Fatty Lee had brought over the Klondike stove from the College Boys' cabin and installed it in the long barracks room. The Lieutenant had given his stove, and the stove at Snuggle-Up Cabin was requisitioned; but these were all some distance apart and required much running to and fro. All the stoves were small, requiring the division of the Christmas pudding into several small ones. The bunks in the barracks were temporarily removed and a long table installed, and here the members of the Clan assembled.

Before the dinner the young missionary, Miss Castle, the Lieutenant, Lank Bill and Miller were formally voted into the Clan. When the Constitution was read and the clause requiring a motto apiece from new members, there was embarrassment.

"I know nothing about rules," said Lanky Bill, "except just to keep a-digging." He was applauded and Schofield wrote the motto. Miller who sat next to him, with the vision of his beloved ones and his distance from them sore upon him, gave as his "Quit when you have enough."

"Be merciful," whispered Miss Castle.

The missionary stood up, blushing to the roots of his hair. "The motto that is nearest to my heart just now," he said, "is this: 'It is not good for man to be alone.' I wish to announce the best news in the world to me: Miss Castle has just accepted me as her future husband."

The applause and congratulations, which lasted for several minutes, put the Lieutenant rather in the background. But Scotty, calling the noisy ones to order, said, "Now, Lieutenant," and he arose as if responding to a toast. "I propose this," he said, "as the motto has just suggested itself—'Keep Christmas Always With You'."

Wonderful were the viands and wonderful the appetites that demolished them. The dried-apple-and-caribou mince pies were voted superior to anything ever tasted before; the plum pudding, for which a few raisins and prunes had been found and lime juice and evaporated eggs, with some powdered cinnamon begged from the storekeeper, but minus the burning brandy, was pronounced a wondrous success. The juicy caribou roasts and the Christmas cake without frosting were equally successful. Evaporated potatoes and the inevitable "Klondike strawberries", were served in tin platters. There was genuine sourdough bread made by Long Sandy in Mr. Bowman's more capacious stove and spread with Sandy's last roll of butter. Fatty Lee was overwhelmed with compliments. The disappointments, the longings, the isolation, the distance from home were all forgotten; the whole world was present at the feast. Here was "inside" and all of the rest of the world was "outside".

A full program was carried out after the feast. Jolly songs by the quartette, Kitty accompanying on the baby organ; rectiations by Viva, Miss Castle and the Lieutenant; a song by Mrs. Schofield; funny stories by her husband, Miller and Scotty; and then the benches and table were set aside, and by Scotty and Viva, Carter and Kitty, to the Scotch tune played on the mandolin and whistled by the quartette, the "Highland Fling" was danced as Dawson never witnessed it before or since.

"It was altogether worth while," said the Parson, as the two girls with Long Sandy and Tom Carter gathered around the stove in Snuggle-Up Cabin. "We carry our Christmas with us, and part of the camp, at least, has learned today that no wind of misfortune and no breath of fever is able to extinguish the Christmas candle. The Clan has fulfilled its mission of cheer."—From "Hall Young of Alaska".

"I PRAY."

Maude A. Mumma.

Dear Lord, I pray for sight more clear,
The strength to crush out every fear
That dims the vision of Thy face,
And keeps me from Thy fond embrace.

Give me the light to tread the road,
That ever leads me home to God;
That others treading, I may tread,
That others leading, may be led.

Make me more worthy of my place,
Fill me with every Christian grace;
So may I live from day to day,
That others may be shown the way.

That others seeing, may aspire,
To noble lives and high desire;
Until in Thee, forever blest,
We find in Heav'n our perfect rest.

The Holiness of God.

There is nothing inherently impossible in what one writer has called "the spectre that drives men to madness and despair—illimitable omnipotent Malice". That is to say, there is nothing in itself impossible in the idea of a god who is utterly bad and cruel, and who creates a world for the purpose of inflicting pain on his creatures. But that is not God as we have Him revealed to us in Holy Scripture, nor as we know Him in Christ Jesus, nor as we find Him in moments of direct apprehension. But if God were like that we should have no hesitation in saying that He was not holy. Did not Mill say that, if indeed God sentenced little children to endless torments for no other reason than that they had died unbaptized, then he would rather be in hell with the children than in heaven with such a god? When we say that God is holy, we mean what the Psalmist meant when he said—"Thou shalt shew me the path of life; in Thy presence is the fulness of joy; and at Thy right hand there is pleasure for evermore."

It is a fair test of religion to see how far it reaches in our daily life. If my religion is my love, it will not be for Sunday, or any other special occasions only, but for all my life, especially for times which seem least religious—for heavy times, which no earthly brightness can lighten.—P. Congreve.

To love God we must know Him as manifested in Christ—know Him as incarnated in human form—know Him as revealing His holiness, His tenderness, His pity, His yearning love, and descending grace, in the suffering, glorified Redeemer.

A HYMN.

In our work, and in our play,
Jesus, be Thou ever near;
Guarding, guiding all the day,
Keeping in Thy holy fear.

Thou didst toil, O royal Child,
In the far-off Holy Land,
Blessing labour undefiled,
Pure and honest, of the hand.

Thou wilt bless our play-hour too,
If we ask Thy succour strong;
Watch o'er all we say or do,
Hold us back from guilt and wrong.

Oh! how happy thus to spend
Work and playtime in His sight,
Who that day which shall not end
Gives to those who do the right.

—Our Hymnal.

The Beggar Man.

Mrs. Munford paused to latch the gate, and waited for little Sally to follow her through. She glanced back up the long, brick walk, bordered with zinnias and sweet william and larkspur, and waved to the old lady who stood on the porch of a cottage among the trees.

"Poor Mrs. Lane," she said; "isn't she a darling?"

Sally looked thoughtful.

"How old is she, mother?" she asked.

"I don't know," replied Mrs. Munford.

"I 'spect she's a hundred and fifty-don't you?"

"Mercy, no!" exclaimed Mrs. Munford. "I guess she's about eighty-five."

"Oh, eighty-five's not old," Sally declared. "Mary McMin's grandfather's a hundred and twenty, and he digs for gold and everything."

Mrs. Munford laughed.

"Oh, no," she said. "He isn't a hundred and twenty."

"Yes, he is," Sally insisted. "Mary said so."

"Well, Mary's mistaken," said Mrs. Munford. "He couldn't be over eighty some."

"Oh, I know he's a hundred," Sally avowed. "Mother?"

"What, child?"

"Isn't Mrs. Lane's face wrinkled?"

"Why, yes," admitted Mrs. Munford, "but she's such a dear old lady you don't think of that."

Sally pondered. They turned the corner at the post office.

"Oh, look!" whispered Sally. "There's a poor beggar."

Sure enough, standing against the brick wall was a beggar, ragged and dirty, holding out a tin cup. One sleeve of his loose coat hung limp by his side. A tattered hat drooped about his unshaven face. In his eyes was a mingled look of wistfulness and loneliness.

"Mother!" Sally pulled at her mother's sleeve. "I want some money to give him."

Mrs. Munford paused, for the moment uncertain. Then she opened her pocket-book and took out a quarter.

"Here," she said. "Give him this."

Sally ran to the beggar, and the coin jingled in his cup.

"Thank you," he said, and smiled.

"Haven't you got but one arm?" Sally asked.

The beggar shook his head.

"That's all," he answered.

Sally glanced up at her mother, who took her by the hand, and together they went along up the street.

"Mother, why hasn't he got but one arm?" Sally questoned in a low voice.

"I don't know," replied Mrs. Munford. "Poor man. It's too bad."

"I feel sorry for him, don't you?" Sally said.

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Munford. "I certainly do."

"He hasn't got anybody to love him, has he?" Sally continued.

"I don't know," Mrs. Munford replied.

Presently they reached home, and went into the house. Bye and bye Mrs. Munford called Sally, but got no answered. She came from the kitchen where she had been talking with the cook, and called again and again, but no answer came. She went up stairs and quickly noticed upon the bed Sally's little bank, open and empty. She at once realized what had happened, and hastening down-stairs and out and down the street found Sally standing beside the beggar, holding out his tin cup for him. An old man had stopped and was putting in some money.

"Come, Sally," Mrs. Munford told her. "You mustn't run off like this."

Sally obeyed, and as they went up the street turned and waved to the beggar. When they got home she lingered on the front porch.

"Now, don't run off down there any more," said her mother.

"Well," she answered.

She sat on the top step and waited. After a while she saw her grandfather coming, and ran to meet him.

"Grand-dad," she began eagerly. "There's a poor beggar man down by the bank, and he's only got one arm. Give me some money to take him."

"What? A beggar man?" her grandfather repeated.

She nodded.

"Yes, and he looks so lonely Please give him something."

"Well, well," said her grandfather. "Let's see."

He got out his pocket-book and gave her a coin.

"How will this do?"

There was a quick gleam of delight in her eyes.

"Oh, thank you!" she cried, and ran to ask if she could go.

"Yes, but come straight back," her mother said, and away she ran down the street.

Soon she returned and sat on the steps. The Maltese cat came and rubbed against her arm and she stroked its softf ur. Presently she spied her father coming and ran to meet him.

"Dad-dad," she began. "You know, there's such a poor beggar man down by the bank, and he's only got one arm. Give me some money to take him."

Mr. Munford put his arm about her.

"How do you know, honey?"

"I saw him when I was out with mother."

She held out her hand. Mr. Munford pulled out some coins and gave her half a dollar.

"Oh, thank you!" she cried, and away she went.

A little later Mrs. Munford came out and called her, and went around to the back yard, where she found Mr. Munford tasting the ripening grapes.

"Where's Sally?" she asked. "I thought she was with you."

"Sally? Oh, she's just gone down the street a piece."

"I bet she's gone back to that poor beggar!" exclaimed Mrs. Munford.

"I 'spect she has," Mr. Munford agreed mildly.

"And I bet you gave her some money and let her go."

Mr. Munford said nothing.

"I knew it!" Mrs. Munford snapped. "Now, hurry and get her and bring her straight home. She oughtn't to be down there, and beside it's nearly supper time.

Mr. Munford set out at once, and soon came to where the beggar leaned against the wall. Beside him, standing on a box, was Sally, with her arm about him, patting him on the back.

"Hello, Dad-dad!" she sang out. "I told him you sent it, and he said you were a nice man."

"Well, you must come along now, honey," he replied, with a nod to the beggar. "It's time you were getting home."

As they started away she paused and looked back.

"Good-bye, Mr. Beggar Man," she said in a voice filled with tenderness. "If nobody else will love you, I will."

"Good-bye, little girl," he answered. "Thank you—God bless you—Good-bye."—J. C. Jamison, in Southwestern Episcopalian.

What Elinor Found to Like.

"Dear me! Rain inside as well as out? However shall we keep dry!" exclaimed Aunt Lou, coming in to find her little niece crying almost as hard as the clouds, on that rainy Saturday.

Elinor looked up for a minute, and then her head went down again. "Oh, Aunt Lou, have you heard?"

"What? Any bad news?" said Aunt Lou, looking a bit anxious, for Elinor's distress seemed very great, and she thought that something dreadful might really have happened. "Tell me," she said, sitting down and taking the little girl on her lap.

"Why, we are going to leave our home here and go to live on an old farm in the country," sobbed Elinor. "It will be so dreadfully lonely, auntie, and I'll miss the girls and the school and everything. I'll be all by myself on that lonesome old place—"

Aunt Lou patted her back comfortingly. "Why, Papa and Mamma will be there, won't they, and Baby Jim. So you won't be the only one on the place. And maybe you will find something to like about your new home, after all. I lived on a farm when I was a little girl, myself, and I was very happy there. I often wish I could see Shady Grove again—"

"Shady Grove? Why, that is the name of this farm," cried Elinor. "Oh, Auntie, I wonder if it could be the same place?"

"Perhaps so; I shall come and pay you a visit, if it is," said Aunt Lou.

"There is Papa coming in now. I'll ask him," cried Elinor, jumping up.

To their delight and surprise, Papa explained that the farm was the very one which had been Aunt Lou's old home. And now Elinor was full of questions. "What is it like, Auntie? How does the house look? And can I have a garden?" she asked eagerly.

"There is dear old brown farmhouse," said Aunt Lou, "and an orchard full of apple trees, filled with lovely pink and white blossoms in spring, and with rosy apples later. And there is a big old garden with old-fashioned sweet flowers, and I am sure the flowers I planted there are growing still. How I should like to see it all again. I have a great mind to go out there with you!"

"Why don't you?" said Papa, who was watching them and enjoying their pleasure. "Mary will be very glad of your companionship, for I must be very busy with the farm work at first, and perhaps Elinor will not think she has reached the 'Jumping-off place', if she has you to show her the pleasant things."

Then Elinor realized that she had worried her father and mother by her excessive grief at the prospect, and she brightened up.

"I won't fret any more, Daddy," she promised. "I know there must be something nice there, and I can have a garden."

And when they moved, a few weeks later, and Elinor saw the pink and white apple blossoms in the orchard, and the lovely old-fashioned garden, she owned that she had been wrong in thinking there should be no happiness in life on the farm.

"It's lovely, and I'm going to be ever so happy here," she confided to Aunt Lou. And she was.—Presbyterian of the South.

THE TOWER BELL.

Anne Pierce.

Ring loud and clear O brazen bell,
Now wake the world from its dreaming spell,
Where wrapped in down and silk they lie
Or shiver with in a loft so high.

Ring sweet and clear while moonbeams fall
Like molten silver over roof and hall.
While night birds breathe their melting song,
And lovers kiss and they wend along.

Ring sweet and low where my dear ones lie,
Bring to their sleeping and dreaming eyes,
Visions of love and dreams of peace,
Blissful dreams that shall not cease.

Ring loud and clear over the ived mound,
Nor fear to wake with your loudest sound,
For they walk through the halls of death so vast Wrapped in a silence deep and fast.

Half Pressure.

John and his father were on their way to a neighboring county in an automobile. There was something wrong with the car. John growled. "I wonder what is wrong with the car today? We always took that hill on high speed, but this time we had to shift into second."

"Was everything all right when we left home?" asked his father.

"Last night the car was working perfectly," said John. "I don't see how anything could go wrong with it when it was not being used."

They rode in silence. Another upgrade showed how weak the power was. "Did you test the tires this morning?" John's father asked.

"Why, no. They seemed to be standing up all right, though."

John stopped the car and tested the air in the tires. He found the pressure less than half what it should have been. Then he knew it was the tires that were acting as a drag to hold back the car.

No automobile can develop its full power if the tires are only half inflated any more than a boy can ride to success on work that is only half done. A boy must put forth the best possible effort if he wants to get on in the world. There are boys who are trying to advance, and all the time are being held back because something only half done is acting as a drag.

It is in school especially that a boy is tempted to do less than his best. Many fellows only half learn their lessons. They go over them just enough to be able to recite them fairly well, but do not take the time to fix them firmly in their minds. Of course, if the whole object of studying was to recite, then that kind of studying might get by. But a boy goes to school that he may be prepared to do a man's work some day. It is not the lessons themselves that are the most important part of his education, though they count in making up the grades. It is far more important for a boy to learn to apply himself. If he keeps at each lesson until he masters it, he will make more than good marks—he will form a habit that will help him all his life. He will be able to apply himself to whatever he goes into in life. That habit means success.

On the other hand, if a boy just gets his lessons well enough to recite them, he will find, when he enters the business world that he will only do enough to get him through the day. He does not give either his employer or himself full measure. And in the end it will hurt the boy more than it will the man who employs him, for that man can hire some other fellow, while the boy who gave scant measure of time and effort will have to keep on living with the failure he has made of himself. Maybe some day, when it is too late, he will realize he has not the power he should have.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

The Lost Funnel.

One bright summer morning, Peggy went out to water her flower garden. She carried the water in a little silvery-looking aluminum pitcher and a little green watering pot, one in each hand. In the right-hand pocket of her knickers was stuck a little tin funnel. When she reached the garden she set down the watering pot, and pulled the funnel out of her pocket, where it was a very tight fit. Then she poured the water from the pitcher through the funnel all around the roots of her sweet-pea vine, and her morning-glory vine, and her nasturtium vine, and her rose-bush and her petunia plant and her pansy plant.

Of course, Peter Pup had come with her. I forgot to mention that, because he always comes. Whenever you want to find Peter Pup, look just behind Peggy's sandal heels. He tried, as usual, to drink some of the water before it soaked into the earth; and when he found that the water was too quick for him, he poked his saucy nose into the watering pot, got it wedged, and nearly spilled the water.

"Naughty Peter!" exclaimed Peggy, just as sternly as she could, which was not very sternly, for she couldn't help laughing at the funny, puzzled look on his face.

Then she took the watering pot, and sprinkled the pansy plant, and the petunia plant, and the rosebush, and all three vines up as far as she could reach. Peter was uncommonly quiet after his scolding, but now he came hopping about Peggy, and took the watering-pot handle in his teeth, to carry it to the house as he always did. That was his job. Peggy's was to carry the pitcher and funnel, and some flowers for Grandmother.

Just then Mother called to hurry, for she was making plumcake, and Peggy could stone the raisins and beat the eggs. Away they raced to the house. Peggy stoned the raisins, and beat the eggs, and then she dusted the sitting room, up as far as she could reach, and then it was lunch time. And before they had finished lunch, along came Uncle Jimmy with his new car to give them all a ride. When they came home, Peggy was so sleepy that she was quite ready for bed, after a glass of warm milk. So was Peter.

They never thought again of the garden until the next morning. Then, when they were ready to go out and water it, the little tin funnel was not to be found. Not in the house or the shed, or the garden.

"Did you bring it in after watering yesterday?" asked Mother.

"I—I can't remember," answered Peggy.

Peter stood by, wagging his tail very fast, eager to be at work; but he had no suggestions to offer about the funnel. So Peggy had to do her watering without it.

Honestly, I cannot see why it was not just exactly as well to pour the water right out of the pitcher on the plants. But Peggy had invented that way of using the funnel, and she liked it. So she felt very sorry about its loss.

However, the summer went on, and October came, and one day, when Father was clearing up some frost-bitten vines, he called suddenly to Peggy, "Peggy, come here a minute!"

Peggy came running. And what do you think? There was her little tin funnel, small end up, and a pert little elm tree growing up through it! It looked so prim and important—that tiny tree!

"Oh!" cried Peggy. "Peter, you took that funnel, while I was sprinkling!"

And Peter made himself very flat, and flopped his ears, and wagged his tail sidewise on the frosty grass, to say that maybe p'r'aps he guessed he did, but really the matter had entirely slipped his mind! And Peggy forgave him, as she always does.

Then Father said, "How would you like to have this little tree taken up and set by the garden gate, for your own particular tree, Peggy?"

"Oh, I'd like it!" cried Peggy. So Father worked the funnel off over the top of the little tree, very carefully, and took it up with a trowel, and set it in its new home. Peggy and Peter watered it well, and it will no doubt make a fine shade for Peggy when she is a high-school girl, and brings out her books to do her home lessons under its waving boughs.—Minnie Leona Upton, in The Christian Register.

The Poor Little Jonquil.

Julia Fisher, Age 13.

The little sparrows were hopping about on the big lawn searching for worms. Now and then they would pause in their pecking to chirp, "Spring is here! Spring is here! Do you hear? Do you hear?"

Presently down sailed old Mr. Crow.

"Good morning," greeted the Sparrows. "Nice day, isn't it?"

Soon little Miss Bluebird flew down. "What a lovely day," she sang.

"Yes," chirped the sparrows. "It's a beautiful day and we're so glad to see you back so soon."

They all began to peck for worms and now and then would stop to sing, "Spring is here!"

In hopping about they all came quite near the flower bed. There was one vacant place where a jonquil had not come up. They all hopped over there and began to dig for worms. They found several big juicy ones, but they also found something which saddened them a great deal. It was a jonquil which was too lazy to get out of bed, they thought.

"Sleepyhead! Sleepyhead!" they cried. "Wake up! Spring is here! Wake up!"

But the jonquil did not move. It was dead. It had been frozen by the ice and snow. They all began to cry. Finally they stopped and found a nice place to bury the jonquil under a rose-bush. Mr. Crow dug a grave and held the service. Miss Bluebird sang the hymns. Then they picked the jonquil up in their beaks and carried it to the grave. They put it in and covered it up. Then they all sang some and flew away. Later they told the other flowers who all felt very sorry for the poor little jonquil.

A GREEN CORNFIELD.

The earth was green, the sky was blue;
I saw and heard one sunny morn
A skylark hang between the two,
A singing speck above the corn;

A stage below, in gay accord,
White butterflies danced on the wing,
And still the singing skylark soared,
And silent sank and soared to sing.

The cornfield stretched a tender green
To right and left beside my walks;
I knew he had a nest unseen
Somewhere among the million stalks.

And as I paused to hear his song
While swift the sunny moments slid,
Perhaps his mate sat listening long,
And listened longer than I did.

—Christina Rossetti.

Humanity, torn asunder by five years of war, is on the brink of wars still more monstrous where millions of young lives and all the hopes of the future would be irremediably engulfed. If women do not fight to the last breath against the approaching scourge the blood of their sons be on their own heads. They will have been accomplices in the massacre which they had not the energy to prevent. Nothing can excuse those who remain passive, weary, waiting or resigned in the face of the greatest Crime in the life of the world.—Romain Rolland.

It is to Jesus Christ we owe the truth, the tenderness, the purity, the warm affection, the holy aspiration, which go together in that endearing word, home; for it is He who has made obedience so beautiful and affection so holy; it is He who has brought the Father's home so near and has taught us that love is of God.—James Hamilton.

"I will not quarrel with you about opinions. Only see that your heart is right toward God; that you know and love the Lord Jesus Christ; that you love your neighbor and walk as your Master walked, and I desire no more. Let my soul be with these Christians, wheresoever they are and whatsoever opinions they are of. Whosoever thus doeth the will of my Father in Heaven the same is my brother and sister."—John Wesley.

Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

Full account of every battle, and approaches to the same, by the State Highway.

... READ ... "THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Deaths

IN MEMORIAM.

In memory of our loving mother, ELIZABETH WOODSON HUGHES McGUIRE, who passed away on August 19, 1919:

Nine years since mother passed away.
And still we see her image round us every day.
Though not a word can we hear,
We know her guarding spirit is very near.
Yet the years that have passed away
Do not seem this heartache to lay.
For this flesh and blood craves to hear
I am with you, dear.
And our souls yearn for her more and more,
And will till we meet on Canaan's Happy Shore.

HER CHILDREN.

MRS. MARTHA W. PHILLIPS.

Died, July 29, 1928, at her home in Goochland County, in her seventy-sixth year, MRS. MARTHA W. PHILLIPS. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Rosa C. Phillips, and a brother and sister, Mr. John W. Blanton and Mrs. B. I. Grigg. She was buried in Grace Church Cemetery, and a host of friends and beautiful flowers testified to the esteem in which she was held in the community. She exemplified in her life those graces developed by a close walk with her Master. She never was known to say an unkind word or gossip. Her sympathy with every good undertaking was manifested and her place will not easily be filled in her church. Her hospitality and kindliness was unbounded. Although in failing health her call to join the Master came suddenly. She will not be forgotten, and her church will miss her varied interests in the Woman's Auxiliary and Rector's Aid.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

HENRY BRADFORD CLARKSON.

Entered into life eternal, Sunday night, July 29, 1928, HENRY BRADFORD CLARKSON. Sudden and painless was the transition:

"No sadness of farewell—
No moaning of the bar,
When he put out to sea."

He was the youngest child of D. J. W. Clarkson and his wife, Elizabeth Quarrier, both of Charleston, W. Va. He was born May 12, 1868. Married December 28, 1897, to Mary Louise Laidley (eldest daughter of Hon. W. S. Laidley). The funeral services were at his home, the Rev. Benjamin R. Roller officiating. The committal was at Spring Hill Cemetery. There he rests beside his wife. Full of energy and vitality, endowed with a rarely bright and magnetic personality, he made lasting friends, and there lingers in the hearts of all who knew him pleasant memories.

"It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call.
They throng the silence of our breast;
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the true, the brave, the sweet,
Who walks with us no more."

RESOLUTIONS.

George Strother Cable.

GEORGE STROTHER CABLE, for sixteen years a vestryman of Leeds Parish, Virginia, and ten years registrar of the vestry, a faithful and devout communicant, honored and beloved by all who knew him, entered into life eternal June 27, 1928, in the seventieth year of his age.

We, the vestry of Leeds Parish, desire to put on record our sincere affection for him, and our deep sense of loss at his passing from us.

We shall ever remember him as a truly Christian gentleman, and even in our sorrow we rejoice in our faith that in the Father's house of many mansions he enjoys that peace which passeth all understanding.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Mary E. Batchelder in Cambridge, Mass.

Miss Annie Barlow, community nurse at St. John's, also visited in New England and in Ohio.

Rector Resigns at Hot Springs.

The Rev. Edward H. Ward, D. D., resigned the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Hot Springs, Va., effective July 23, 1928. His resignation was accepted by the vestry with expressions of regret.

Dr. Ward has served the church at Hot Springs for nearly ten years; having come there from the Diocese of Pittsburgh in October, 1918. Having exceptional ability as a preacher, he has been greatly appreciated by the guests who come to this important resort from all parts of the country.

A native of Campbell County, Virginia, he was educated at Roanoke College, Salem, Va., which conferred on him the degrees of Bachelor of Arts in 1870, Master of Arts in 1871 and Doctor of Divinity in 1887. He received his training for the ministry at the Virginia Seminary; being ordained to the diaconate in 1873 and the priesthood in 1874 by Bishop Johns. In 1881 he was married to Miss S. Taylor, of Sacramento, Cal.

His first charges as Deacon were at Emporia and Poplar Mount, Va., after which he became assistant to the rector of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg. Later charges as rector were at Santa Rosa, Marysville, Sacramento and Stocton, Cal.; Lexington, Ky., 1885 to 1897. From this time until his coming to Hot Springs he was rector of St. Peter's Church, Pittsburgh.

Dr. Ward has held a number of important positions in the Church: Secretary of the Dioceses of California and Kentucky; member of the Standing Committee in Lexington and Pittsburgh; deputy to the General Convention from Kentucky and Pittsburgh; examining Chaplain in Lexington and Pittsburgh; Reinecke Lecturer at Virginia Seminary. Also he was President of the Pittsburgh Philosophical Society from 1909 to 1919.

After a long and useful career, Dr. Ward is giving up the active ministry on account of the failure of his health. It is his plan to remain at Hot Springs until September and then go to Lexington, Ky., where he and Mrs. Ward will make their home in future.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Entertainment for Auxiliary.

A feature of the Woman's Auxiliary Triennial to be held in Washington next October, which will be both unique and charming, will be several receptions and teas for the delegates in the Bishop's Garden. This garden, in the Cathedral Close, must be seen to be fully enjoyed in all its beauty. Here the remarkable box, brought from old-time gardens of Virginia, Maryland and elsewhere the great yew, the picturesque Shadow House, the Wayfarers Cross, charming flag-stones of olden times and blossoms in season will tell their own story and charm the visitors who find their way there. This garden has been developed and is under the direct care of the Garden Committee of All Hallows' Guild, of which Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl is chairman.

Dr. Peter Assumes Duties.

Dr. G. Freeland Peter, recently appointed residentiary canon of Washington Cathedral, preached his first sermon in that capacity on Sunday morning, August 5, at eleven o'clock in Bethlehem Chapel. Canon Peter is canon in charge of the religious work and services of the Cathedral, during August and September.

Dr. Peter, who was formerly associate minister at Epiphany Church, in the earlier days of his ministry, addressed a meeting of the men of the Diocese of Washington in the parish hall of that church, on Tuesday evening, August 7. This was his first public address not in conjunction with the church service since his official return to his native city. In his return to Washington, Dr. Peter must feel that he has really come home and his friends warmly welcome him back.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, rector of St. John's Church, Roanoke, is spending the month of August with his family at their summer home at Saluda, N. C. In his absence the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector of St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, is supplying the pulpit of St. John's.

The Rev. Wilford Ernst Mann, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, Va., was one of the speakers this summer at Interdenominational Bible Conferences in the Middle West. At the Rock River Conference in Dixon, Ill., July 15-22, he gave several addresses. On the program of this conference were such outstanding men in denominational bodies as the great Scotch preacher, Dr. John McNeill; Mr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, and widely known for his "Quiet Talks" books; Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of Chicago, and Fred B. Fisher, of India, and others. At the conference in Cedar Falls, Iowa, July 29-August 5, Dr. Mann gave four addresses, sharing honors with Dr. J. C. Massee, pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston; Dr. J. T. Wardle Stafford of London, and other noted denominational leaders in this country and in the British Isles. This was the second year Dr. Mann has been on the program of this conference where "the tabernacle" seating twenty-five hundred people, was daily crowded, and often many people standing unable to find seats.

ORDINATIONS.

On the Feast of the Transfiguration in St. Augustine's Chapel of the Holy Cross Monastery at West Park, N. Y., the Rev. Carl Walter Marty, O. H. C., was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., acting for the Bishop of the Diocese of Chicago. The Bishop was assisted by the Rev. Frs. Gregory Mabry and R. S. Hornby of Holy Cross Church, Kingston, N. Y., Deacons of Honor; the Rev. Fr. J. S. Baldwin, O. H. C., Deacon, and the Rev. Fr. Leopold Kroll, Jr., as Subdeacon. The assistant priests were the Rev. Fr. John Whiting Crowell, of St. Luke's Church, New York City, and the Rev. Fr. B. A. E. MacLaughlin, of Yonkers, who also acted as Master of Ceremonies. The sermon was preached by Father James Gorham, the Prior of the Holy Cross Liberian Mission. The ordinand was presented by the Rev. Fr. J. O. S. Huntington, Superior, O. H. C., the Litany being sung by the Rev. Fr. H. Hawkins, O. H. C.

Before entering the Order of the Holy Cross, the ordinand had been a student at the Western Theological Seminary; and since Bishop Gray had ordered him Deacon, it was a great joy to have the Bishop to advance him to the priesthood, and an added joy because Bishop Gray is an Associate of the Order.

The ordination was of particular interest to the community as it marked the first ordination at the Monastery; and it is of general interest to the Church by reason of the fact that Father Marty was ordained priest for a Religious Community.

DEATHS.

"Lovely and pleasant in their lives, in their death they were not divided" (2 Sam. 1:23).

Howland Hill and George Harris, two fine young fellows, studying for the sacred ministry, were recently put in charge, for the summer vacation, of two different churches at Alberton, Prince Edward Island. Hill was a student of Princeton University, in the United States, and Harris was studying at King's College, Nova Scotia. Hill was a Presbyterian; Harris a member of the Church of England in Canada. They had rooms at Alberton in the same lodging house, and soon became close friends. One day they went off together for a bath, and were both drowned. No mortal eye witnessed the tragedy; but when their bodies were recovered, it seemed as if Harris, who could swim, had given his life in a vain effort to save his friend.

What a touching appeal this makes to the best spirit in both countries and in both Churches represented by these two young men of such high Christian promise. It goes to our hearts to think of the two mourning mothers, made one by their common sorrow. May they be comforted by Him who watches and cares for even the fall of a sparrow!

What a link these two comrades constitute between our two great English-speaking countries, and also between the two different Churches in which they ministered side by side in such blessed fellowship! They lived and died together, and are now "absent from the body, and at Home with the Lord". Lovely and pleasant in their lives, in their death they were not divided. Will not other splendid young fellows be stirred to lift up the standard on behalf of these two fallen comrades and to follow in their train? The Captain of our Salvation is calling for volunteers.

The Eternal reunion is on the way. Let all broken-hearted mourners look up in sure and certain hope, through Him whom is the Resurrection and the Life.

"Death and darkness and the tomb
Only whisper, 'Till He come'."

G. Osborne Troop.

Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Miss Jessie Claire McDonald, well-known woman educator and for fifteen years principal of the National Cathedral School for Girls, died early Sunday morning (August 12) after a brief illness at the Preston Springs Hotel, Ontario, Canada. Funeral services were to be held Tuesday morning (August 14) in the Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral. The office for the burial of the dead was to be read by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, assisted by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington. Immediately after the funeral the body was to lie in state in the Bethlehem Chapel until the afternoon when the funeral party, accompanied by one of the clergy from the Cathedral, was to go to Indianapolis where interment was to take place in Crown Hill Cemetery there on Wednesday.

Miss McDonald left Washington early in June to spend several months in rest at the Preston Springs Hotel at Preston. She was accompanied by her cousin, Miss Catharine Dunn, also a member of the faculty of the National Cathedral School for Girls. Miss McDonald appeared greatly benefited by the change, but was taken suddenly ill on August 5. On the following day she submitted to an emergency operation under the care of leading surgeons of Toronto. Dr. Sterling Ruffin of this city, her personal physician, went to Preston at once, as did Miss Agnes Peter of Washington, a close friend of Miss McDonald. Although gravely ill she rallied and by Thursday was considered out of danger. On Friday night she suffered a relapse ond became weaker on Saturday, dying at four A. M. Sunday morning.

When notified of Miss McDonald's death the Bishop of Washington made arrangements to leave his summer home at Sorrento, Maine, as did the Dean of Washington Cathedral, who has been at his summer residence at Gloucester, Mass.

Miss Jessie Claire McDonald was born in Indianapolis on January 24, 1869. She was the daughter of the late Ezekiel M. and Lydia Tousey McDonald, and the granddaughter of Senator Joseph McDonald, who long and ably represented that State in the United States Senate at Washington.

Practically all the life of Miss McDonald was passed in Washington. After the death of her father her mother came here and, with the late Miss Anna Ellis, opened the well-known McDonald-Ellis School for Girls at Massachusetts Avenue and Seventeenth Street, N. W. Joseph McDonald, her brother, entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis from which he graduated with honors and Miss McDonald went to Wellesley College, where she became one of the youngest students to receive an A. B. degree from that institution. In 1894, she took her M. A. degree at Columbia University, now George Washington University this city. When her brother, Ensign Joseph McDonald, was stationed in Paris, France, she lived with him there and studied at the Sorbonne, University of Paris, and also did graduate work later at the University of Pennsylvania.

Upon the death of Miss Anna Ellis, Miss McDonald became the last principal of the McDonald-Ellis School, which was her first educational post, for a time she accompanied her brother, now Commander, to his naval stations as a member of his household. After his death she resumed her educational career and for ten years was a member of the faculty of Farmington School at Farmington, Conn.

In 1913 Miss McDonald came to Washington again as principal of the National Cathedral School for Girls, being accompanied by the late Miss Helen L. Webster, also of the Farmington School faculty, who assumed the post of head of the Academic Department of the School.

Under Miss McDonald's administration for past fifteen years, the School has thrived and gained high rank for secondary education, and has been considered foremost among the Church Schools for Girls in this country. She was held in affectionate esteem by hundreds of graduates of the schools in many parts of the country and was greatly beloved by the faculty, students and her associates.

As an educator, Miss McDonald won great renown and was connected with many activities in the educational world. She was a trustee of Wellesley College, Massachusetts, her Alma Mater, and was keenly interested in the cause of the higher education of women. A devout Churchwoman, she was a builder of Christian character in the young people under her charge.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Faith outranges all the telescopes."

Religion is the best armor a man can wear, but it is the worst cloak.—Bunyan.

Our love alone satisfies Christ: why should aught but His satisfy you?

"Jesus was ready for every duty because He came up with it strengthened by the perfect discharge of the duty preceding it."

The world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide;
Above the world is stretched the sky;
No higher than the soul is high.
The heart can push the sea and land
Farther away on either hand;
The soul can split the sky in two,
And let the face of God shine through.
—Edna St. V. Millay.

"Touchiness, petulance, super-sensitiveness, readiness to have one's pride hurt and to be insulted, all these are forms of selfishness. Consider the marvel of Jesus' character in this respect."

Every once in a while I hear that such and such a brilliant young man has come into our congregation, and that he will likely prove a great acquisition. I confess that it is a bait at which I nibble less than I used to. I would rather have a long tallow dip than a streak of lightning. A very small river will carry a good deal of water to the sea if it keeps running.—Rev. C. H. Parkhurst.

When we find it easier to sigh than to laugh, and easier to grumble than to sing, it is high time to take ourselves in hand. It is evident that we are not keeping fit. We need to check up on our habits—habits of body, habits of mind, habits of the heart. Perhaps we are not walking enough, perchance not playing and singing enough, possibly not forgetting ourselves and our cares enough in loving care for others; most likely of all, we are not spending enough time in sweet companionship with our Lord.

BEWARE OF GREEK HORSES

As many Episcopalians well know, the Church of England is passing through a crisis like that which troubles our own. Among the English laymen who are endeavoring to save the Church from the aggressions of the Anglo-Catholics, none is more distinguished, or has rendered more effective service in the cause of reformed religion, than Sir William Joynson-Hicks, Secretary for Home Affairs in the present Cabinet.

To inform the English public concerning the present day struggle for Protestantism he has written a small volume entitled, "The Prayer Book Crisis", published in May, 1928, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. It ought to be read by every Episcopalian who seeks trustworthy information concerning the Anglo-Catholic movement, its aims, methods and spirit.

One of the many passages which applies to the American as well as the English situation is the following:

"The question to which the Prayer Book controversy ultimately and unavoidably leads is whether the work of the Reformation shall be undone, and the nation and the Church robbed of the benefits which followed in its train, by the disloyalty of a section of the clergy, assisted, as they have been by the inaction or even in some cases by the connivance of the Bishops. The ordinary man may not be able to expose the sophistries or to enter into the theological refinements by which the issue has been obscured, but he knows that there is a real difference between the Church of England and the Church of Rome; that at the Reformation the laity were called in to put an end to the claim of the Bishops and clergy that they alone had the right to determine matters of doctrine; and that the Mass and the Confessional were then rejected; and he can see for himself that these things are being revived . . ." (p. 143).

At another point the author quotes as follows from a letter written by Sir William Harcourt, Liberal leader of the House of Commons, to the "London Times" in 1898:

"It is an entire error to suppose that the voice (of Protestantism) has been a cry of 'No popery'; it has been a cry of 'No treachery' " (p. 71).

Disloyalty and treachery are terms of opprobrium, but may be applied justly to many of the Anglo-Catholic clergy. When ordained, they take two solemn pledges. One binds them "always so to minister the Doctrine and Sacraments, and the Discipline of Christ, as the Lord hath commanded, and as this Church hath received the same, according to the commandments of God. . . ." The second binds them "with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word . . ." (Prayer Book, p. 518).

These vows many of the Anglo-Catholic clergy habitually and cynically violate. Instead of defending the teachings of the Church, they steadily use their best endeavors to introduce "erroneous and strange doctrines", even those condemned or forbidden by the law of the Church.

In England the enforcement of discipline among the lawless clergy has been difficult, because their incomes are not derived from voluntary contributions by the laity. In scores of cases they have defied both their Bishops and their congregations.

In the United States, as we know, the situation is wholly different. Here the laity have the power of the purse and so can bring to terms a rector who breaks the law of the Church by introducing forbidden doctrines. In the hands of the laity, therefore, rests the power to save the Church from reaction, to preserve its Scriptural and Apostolic religion from destruction by the Anglo-Catholics.

EARL E. SPERRY.

SHALL WE HELP FULFILL JEHOVAH'S PROMISE

An article from The Church of England Newspaper, republished in a recent issue of the Southern Churchman, recorded the fact, astonishing to many people in this country, that 250 active clergymen of the Church of England are Jews or of Jewish extraction. These 250 men are recruits for the army of the Saviour, won from His bitterest and strongest foes—their bitterness ingrained and inherited through generations of scornful neglect by Christians and of enforced submission to relentless persecution by Christians, their strength from more than three thousand years of superior culture, from demands for ability to overcome cruel obstacles such as no other nation has met successfully. Besides the 250 clergymen, Great Britain has thousands of Jews who have become Christians, many of them vastly valuable to the Church and powerful in social and business life and politics. These converts have been won by tenacious, patient effort of Christians with faith and the capacity for patience that attends all real faith and sincere and high purpose. A scoffing correspondent of The Church of England Newspaper asserted that every Jewish convert had cost $185,000, £37,000. The Church of England Newspaper article replied that this was an absurdly exaggerated estimate, but that, even if it was true, the accessions to Christianity and the redemption of so many people was worth the money; that souls and Christian service were not to be valued or measured by shillings or pounds sterling.

The British achievements with the Jews have been attained by the traditional quality of holding on and sticking to work once begun which has made British greatness.

That is a quality we of this country, especially we Christians, must emulate consistently if we intend that our churches and country shall prove worthy of the opportunity God has given them and the resulting responsibility. We must stick and hold on and endure rebuffs and disappointments and continue to try, to do and to give. By these means we have won wars, righted old wrongs, rejected new temptations to error, brought our country to world supremacy and leadership.

We have among us Jews of all classes and kinds, most of the worst of them degraded and made bad by fearful mistakes of Christians in other lands and years in dealing with them; the best of them deserving unstinted honor for conquest of difficulties unknown and unimaginable to us Christians reared in a Christian land. We owe all these Jews much for untold benefits brought to humanity from their race. We owe them much for centuries of burden and oppression put upon them in the name of our Saviour and our religion and by our various nationalities. We owe to their Jehovah and ours, to their Almighty God and ours, our utmost effort to fulfil His ancient promise to them that all Israel shall be saved and that they shall know and accept our Messiah as also theirs.

An article from B. A. M. Shapiro, a Jew of high type, obvious culture and learning and intellectual strength, tells why and how he was brought to intense faith in Christ as the Messiah promised to his people and to intense zeal for conversion of his people and race. He has stuck to the hard and thorny task to which he consecrated his life and labor and abilities and to which he has held through nerve-trying and heart-trying years. He has persisted valiantly despite Christian coldness and occasional hostilities and stinging suspicions of his own people. He is yet fighting and striving for our cause, unselfishly and gallantly. He needs help to continue his work of publishing and distributing the always stirring and interesting "Jews and Christians", magazine and the appealing, convincing tracts, all of which he prints and puts into thousands of Jewish hands. Write to him at 405 Bible House, New York City. Learn from him what he has done, is doing, hopes to do. Surely every Christian who worships the Jehovah of the Jews and accepts as his Saviour the Messiah of the Jews should be eager to do something for recovery and redemption of the Jews and the addition of their hosts to the Christian army.

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

II. The Historical Books—Joshua to Esther.

Subject—God's dealings with Israel to cause them to inherit the promised land.

From the Pentateuch we learn that it was in the heart of God to bring His people Israel, as the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, into possession of the land and the blessings He had promised to their fathers, in order that He might fulfill His promise to bless the world through them. The historical books are, therefore, an inspired record of God's acts or dealings with His people Israel to give them victory over their enemies, and to cause them to possess His promised blessings (Gen. 22:16-18; Josh. 1:1-9; Deut. 4:37, 38; 6:23; Heb. 4:7, 8; Ps. 103:7).

Purpose—The Historical books were written to teach us how the Lord would lead His Church into the enjoyment of the blessings which God has given us in Christ in the heavenlies, and how He would make every member of His Church a channel of blessing as His witness (Eph. 1:3; Heb. 4:9; Rom. 8:17; Josh. 1:3).

Canaan, the place of blessing for Israel, is typical of the heavenlies, the place of blessing for the Church, and God's blessings for Israel typify the blessings that He gives us in Christ (Eph. 1:3-14; 1 Cor. 10:11).

III. The Poetical Books—Job to Song of Songs.

Subject—The experience of God's people in the Old Testament times, as He sought to reveal Himself to them and through them in His dealings with them. God permitted Job to have the "ashpile" experience in order that He might give him twice as much blessing as he had ever known. The experience of Israel through God's ways with them is the principle theme of the Psalms. Because these books are the revelation of experience they are written in the form of poetry, the language of the heart (Ps. 45:1).

Purpose—The Poetical books were written to reveal to us the experience of Christ and our experience in Him (John 15:7, "Abide in Me"; Col. 2:6, "Walk in Him").

Every step of faith in the experience of the Old Testament saints made them witnesses of Christ, whether they offered a sacrifice, walked with God, built an ark, obeyed God to leave their own country, crossed the Red Sea, or marched around Jericho (Heb. 11; 12:1, 2).

IV. The Prophetical Books—Isaiah to Malachi.

Subject—God's counsels concerning Christ and His Kingdom, and concerning Israel and the nations.

The theme of which the Old Testament prophets spoke, by the inspiration of the Spirit, was Christ, Israel and the nations, and not the Church, which is never a subject of Old Testament prophecy. A key passage, Dan. 9:24-27.

We do find some revelation of God's counsels concerning this age, which, in the light of the New Testament, we may understand as applicable to this dispensation of grace, but never a word concerning the Church of Jesus Christ. Illustration (Isa. 61:1, 2; Luke 4:19-21; 2 Cor. 6:2).

The Holy Spirit spoke beyond the understanding of these Old Testament prophets as He revealed through them the sufferings and glory of the coming Redeemer, the King of Israel (1 Peter 1:11, 12).

Purpose—The primary purpose of these prophetic messages was to enlighten, reprove, correct and instruct the people of Israel, and also the nations concerning whom they were spoken, as to God's purpose and plan of redemption for His earthly people Israel, whom He has purposed to bless and make a blessing to all the nations, under the rule of the Prince of Peace (Isa. 9:6, 7; Zech. 6:12, 13; 8:23; 14:9). For us, the books of prophecy were written to give us a light in a dark place, whereunto we do well to take heed in our hearts, until the day dawn and the Day Star arise, at the coming of the Lord for His Church (2 Peter 1:16-21).

These prophetic revelations give us not only great principles of truth, in making known why God has dealt with Israel and the nations in the way He has in the past, but outline His full program for the future of Israel and the nations (Isa. 61:2, 3; Dan. 2; Amos 9:11-15. "Prophecy is the mold of history" (Amos 3:7).

AN ENGLISHMAN'S PRAYER.

(Found in Chester Cathedral.)

Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
And sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the pure and good in sight,
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled,
But finds the way to set it right.

Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine or sigh;
Don't let me worry overmuch,
About that fussy thing called "I".
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To get some happiness in life
And pass it on to other folk.

GOD'S WAY OF SALVATION

Difficulties Met.

By A. Marshall.

"I Pray Thee Have Me Excused."

A distinguished person in the East, at great expense, provided a sumptuous feast, and invited many. When the time came for the arrival of the guests, they all absented themselves and sent excuses. The fact was, they did not wish to go, and, not having the courage to say, "We won't", they said, "We cannot". Whatever may have been their reasons for refusing to speak out their minds and attend the feast, their excuses were extremely silly (Luke 14).

The first said, "I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused". What was the hurry? Could he not have gone at some other time? The second was not a bit better. "I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused". What harm could have come to the oxen by giving them a night's rest Besides, whether they were value or not for the money he paid for them—they were bought.

But the third excuse was the worst of all. "I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come." Why didn't he go and take his wife with him?

"All Things Are Ready, Come!"

The spiritual application of the story must be evident to all. Jehovah, at an infinite cost, has provided a feast for perishing sinners. He has commanded His servants to go into all the world and proclaim the glad tidings to every creature.

"All things are ready, come!
Come to the supper spread,
Come rich and poor, come old and young,
Come, and be richly fed."

The invitation is universal. None are excluded. "Whosoever will" may come. Millions have partaken of the feast and are now in the glory; millions more are on the way, and still the cry is heard, "Yet there is room".

Worldly people have pictured a Christian's life as gloomy and melancholy. They have imagined that the partaking of the gospel feast fills the heart with sadness, and causes a shadow to rest on the countenance. They seem not to know that the gospel is "good tidings of great joy", not "sad tidings of great misery".

The persons in the parable were invited to a "feast", not a funeral; and in the parallel passage in Matthew we are told that it was a "marriage feast".

"I Never Did Any Harm in My Life."

Such an excuse has often been given. Reader, is this your excuse? Do you really mean that you have never done any harm? Have you never sinned in thought, word or deed? Have you never cherished an impure, unkind or wicked thought? Have you never spoken a hasty word, told a lie, or attempted to mislead any one? Have you loved God with all your heart, soul, strength and mind? Have you loved your neighbor as you have loved yourself? "Oh, no," you reply; "no one has done so."

Never mind others just now. You admit that you have sinned. If one were found guilty of breaking the laws of this country, who would believe that he had done no harm? Reader, there is no use in concealing the fact; you have not been what you ought to have been; you have not done what you should have done—in other words, you are a sinner, and the Word of God declares, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4); "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). Take your place as lost and ruined in God's sight, and give up all attempts to excuse or cover up your sins.

"I'll Turn Over a New Leaf."

It is all very well to say that you will "turn over a new leaf". But let me ask, What about the past black leaves of guilt? The school-boy, after spilling the ink on the page of his copy-book, turns over a new leaf, resolving that in future he will be more careful; but "turning over a new leaf" does not remove the blotted one, and soon the teacher's eye detects the blots and punishes him for his carelessness.

It may be, dear reader, at one time you were addicted to drinking or swearing or other bad habits; but of late you have "turned over a new leaf", and are become what the world calls a "reformed" person. This is right and proper, but don't forget that future good conduct can never blot out past disobedience.

A merchant finds that he is in difficulties. He takes his cash-book and begins a "new leaf", forgetting that there is a "carried over" and a "brought forward" column. New figures on the "new leaf" won't pay the old debts. Every page of our life account is headed with a "brought forward".

Reader, "turning over a new leaf" won't do for you. You must become a "new creature" in Christ Jesus.

"God Is Merciful."

Satan goes about with his bundle of lies, giving one to one person, and another to another. To one he says, "God is too merciful to punish sinners"; and if this is not believed he tries another, "If He does punish the sinner in hell, the punishment won't be eternal".

It is a blessed truth that "God is merciful"; but He is also holy and just, and never can be merciful at the expense of His justice. All His attributes are equally balanced and cannot conflict with each other. He who is long-suffering and slow to anger "will by no means clear the guilty". Yon prisoner who is being taken to jail by the officers of justice has learned that the judge would not allow the law-breaker to go unpunished.

God's pardoning mercy flows only through one channel, and that is the atonement of Christ; and all who refuse to accept of life through His death must forever "dwell with the devouring fire". "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (Ps. 9:17); "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36).

"If a Man Does the Best He Can, He Will Be Saved."

Have you done the best you could? Have you not, again and again, done what you ought not to have done, and omitted to do what you should have done? "I don't pretend to be perfect." Assuredly not, but remember that this admission removes every possible hope of your being saved by your doings. One sin is sufficient to condemn you, and you know that you have committed thousands. What is the use of such suppositions as, "If a man does the best he can", when God has declared that none have ever done so? "All we, like sheep, have gone astray" (Isa. 53:6); "They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Ps. 14:3). Unsaved reader, the "best" that you can do is to admit that you are ruined, helpless and undone. If, from this day until the day of your death, you did not commit a single sin, you could not be saved; for sinners are not saved by what they do, but by virtue of what Christ has done for them. "To him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness" (Rom. 4:5).

"Don't You Believe in Good Works?"

When sinners are shown that salvation is all of grace, and "not of works," it is not an uncommon thing to hear such say, "You don't believe in good works". This is a great mistake. What the Word of God shows us is, that an unconverted man cannot do a good work, as a "good work" must spring from a good motive, and that must be love to the Lord Jesus Christ.

The moment a person is saved, that very moment everything he does ought to be done to the glory of God. No sooner do we read of the jailer's conversion than we see him proving his faith by his works. "He took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes." Next we find him seeking to obey the Lord in baptism. He wished to show his love by obedience to Him who had said, "He that hath My commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me" (John 14:21).

Reader, without faith it is impossible to please God (Heb. 11:6), and so long as you are unsaved, you are utterly unfit to do a single "good work". Believe in God's wondrous love to you, and you won't be able to keep from working for Him in return for what He has done for you.

"It Is So Difficult to Be a Christian."

Do you mean that it is difficult to become a Christian? If so, you are completely mistaken. "But I have again and again tried to become one and have failed." You have not taken God's way, dear reader, or you would now be rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven. Cease trying to be saved by your efforts; Christ has finished the mighty work, and justice is satisfied. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:31).

"I meant that it was difficult to live the life of a Christian." Granted at once. Let me, however, ask, Whether is it easier to serve Satan or Christ? Which is the best master? Who gives the best wages? In himself the Christian is weak and helpless; but He who saved has promised to keep him, and has declared, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee". It is far easier to serve the Lord Jesus than Satan.

In serving Satan, you have to turn your back on your best Friend, despise or neglect His great salvation, resist His Holy Spirit, trample under your feet the Son of His love, and rush headlong to eternal ruin. Why, then, perish forever, seeing you can be saved now?

"I Cannot Give Up the Pleasures of the World."

You are not asked to "give up" anything until you are saved. Salvation, it is true, includes deliverance from the thraldom and dominion of sin, as well as from its penalty, and you can't have one part without the other. It must be all or none.

God does not, however, say to the sinner, "Give up the pleasures and amusements of the world, and I will bestow on you pardon and peace". His way is, "receive Christ now into your heart, and you will be saved from the power as well as the doom of sin".

A lady, in conversation with a Christian at the close of a gospel meeting, said, "God won't save me now." "Why?" "I have made up my mind to go to a ball on Tuesday evening, and He won't save me until I am willing to give up going to it." She was shown that "now" was God's time, and that He was beseeching her to accept of a free and present pardon—as she was and where she was. The word was blessed to her soul, and I need not add that she was not at the ball, as she had got something better.

Now, as you read these lines, "receive" Christ by simple faith, and you will gladly "give up" whatever displeases Him (John 1:12).

"I Don't Wish to Be Gloomy."

Numbers imagine that a Christian is one who goes through life hanging his head, heaving sighs, drawing a long face, and looking very sanctimonious. This is one of the biggest, and we fear one of the most widely believed, lies Satan ever coined.

Real, lasting happiness is the portion of every believer. "Gloomy!" What is there in the gospel calculated to make one gloomy? Does it make a man "gloomy" to know that all his sins are forgiven? Will it make one "gloomy" to be assured that he will spend eternity with the Lord Jesus in glory? Will the condemned criminal who has been pardoned by his sovereign feel sad?

" 'Tis Jesus only that can give Sweetest pleasures while we live;
'Tis Jesus only can supply
Solid comfort should we die."

The only one who has a right to be happy is the Christian—he and he alone being delivered from the bondage of sin, death and judgment.

Well might the Psalmist say, "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord" (Ps. 144:16); "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Ps. 16:11).

"So Many Hypocrites."

And is this your excuse for not accepting the invitation to the gospel feast? If so, it is a very poor one. You know some who say that they are Christians, but their conduct proves that they are hypocrites. Though members of churches and chapels, they do things which you and others, who make no such profession, would not stoop to, and you are inclined to say of all who profess to be Christians, "Nice lot! They are a pack of hypocrites."

But surely this would be very unfair reasoning. Hypocrites are persons who profess to be what they are not. Those whom you refer to profess to be, but are not, Christians. Are we to conclude, because of this, that all who profess are hypocrites? This would be as foolish as to say that all clerks are thieves because two were convicted of stealing.

The fact that some pretend to be Christians proves that the reality must be good, as men don't counterfeit that which is worthless. Suppose, however, that real Christians are inconsistent, will that justify you in not being one? Peter surely could not have been justified in deserting the Lord because Judas was a hypocrite.

"So Many Different Opinions."

"I really don't know what to do. There are so many opinions that I am quite perplexed to know what. If this is your thought, let me strongly impress upon you the importance of being guided entirely by the sure Word of God. There is only one way of salvation, and it is very clearly stated in the Book.

A lady, dying of consumption, was anxious about her soul. She had asked many persons their "views" of salvation, and had received different replies. One told her to "pray", another to "work", and so on. A Christian worker visited her, and she earnestly asked, "What are your 'views' of salvation"? "I have no views," was the reply. The lady was amazed. "You seem astonished," said the visitor; "but supposing I had, what good would they do you, seeing they would be but the views of a fellow-mortal? I can, however, give you something better. I can give you God's views." The result of the conversation was, the lady shortly afterwards found peace to her soul by learning that the question, "What must I do to be saved"? was answered thus: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:30, 31).

"It Does Not Matter What One Believes If He Is Sincere."

This is what many of the "mock charity school" say; but let us see if it is true. A man, feeling unwell, went to the cupboard, took by mistake a bottle of poison, drank some of the contents, and died in great agony an hour afterwards. Did his sincerity of belief save his life?

The guard of a passenger train sincerely believed that the line was clear. "All right, forward," he cried, and then, blowing his whistle, the train was off. Yet he was mistaken, and the result was a dreadful collision, and numbers of souls were suddenly ushered into eternity.

A man's salvation or damnation depends on his belief. If he believes the lie of Satan he will eternally perish; but if he believes the truth of God he will be eternally saved.

The Scriptures are very plain on this point. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 14: 12). Sincerity of belief in that way ends in everlasting destruction. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life" (John 3:36); "All that believe are justified from all things" (Acts 13:39). But "He that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36).

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade—

From the Scriptures:

O Great and Glorious Jehovah, King eternal, immortal and invisible, Author of our being, Creator of all worlds, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and whose kingdom is from generation to generation, to whom power belongeth, and with whom nothing is impossible; we would join the innumerable company of angels, and the spirits of the just made perfect, in adoring and praising Thee. Thousand thousands of them minister unto Thee and do Thy pleasure. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, to show forth Thy loving kindness in the morning, and Thy faithfulness every night. Thy tender mercies are over all Thy folks. Thou visitest the earth and waterest it. Thou causest the grass to grow for the cattle, the herbs for the use of man, and bread which strengthens man's heart. Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness. All creatures wait upon Thee, and Thou givest them their meat in due season. By Thee kings reign, and princes decree justice. All nations before Thee are as nothing, less than nothing, and vanity. When we consider the heavens, the work of Thy hands, the moon and stars which Thou hast created, well may we exclaim, Lord, what is man that Thou shouldst be so mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou shouldst set Thy heart upon him and magnify him? O blessed Jesus, who thought it not robbery to be equal with God, we would honor Thee even as we honor the Father; for Thou are the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of His person. Thou art the true God and eternal life; for Thou and the Father art one, Thou in Him and He in Thee. No man can come to the Father but by Thee; for Thou art the way, the truth and the life. Thou dost ever live to make intercession for us at the right hand of God the Father. Worthy, therefore, is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing, for He was slain, and hast redeemed us to God by His blood.

Believing in Thee, blessed Jesus, we would rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; for Thou wert Immanuel, God with us on earth. And we would worship and adore Thee also, O Holy Ghost, the Comforter, who proceedeth from the father and the Son, by whose blessed operation we are convinced of sin, and by whose holy guidance we are led to the Saviour, and enabled to call Him Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

O do Thou, who art sent to teach us all things, show us more and more the plague of our own hearts, and open our eyes that we may see the wondrous things out of the law of God. Make us, by Thy power, to abound in hope, and to be filled with comfort in all our tribulations. Strengthen us with might in the inner man, and make our bodies to be even the temple in which thou dost delight to dwell. And may our whole body, soul and spirit be sanctified wholly, and preserved blameless until the coming of our Lord. O great Jehovah—Holy—Holy—Holy—Lord God of Hosts—Father, Son and Spirit—fulfil in us all the good pleasure of Thy goodness. Be Thou with us, and be greater than all who are against us. Let Thy grace be sufficient for us. Enable us to resist the devil, that he may flee us. If a good work be begun in us, perform it, we pray Thee, until the day of Christ. And may the grace of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the love of God our heavenly Father, and the sweet fellowship of the Holy Spirit, the Sanctifier and Comforter, be with us, to redeem, to sanctify and glorify us, now and for evermore. Amen. Our Father, who art in heaven, etc.

WHY A CHRISTIAN CANNOT BE AN EVOLUTIONIST

By the Reverend James M. Gray, D. D.

President of The Moody Bible Institute.

LET me say at once that this address is not conceived in any spirit of antagonism to earnest and sincere seekers after truth in the realm of nature. I stand in awe at the accomplishments of the men of science and the results of the abstract thinking of the philosophers of all the ages. I am not here to raise a laugh at the evolutionist, far from it, but to point out where he is wrong, seriously and dangerously wrong, that is from the point of view of a Christian man, a man who believes the Bible to be the Word of God and who believes Christianity to be a religion revealed by God.

But first let us get our definitions right. Let us understand what Evolution means and then what Christianity means.

I.

What Evolution Means.

There are many people who call themselves evolutionists who do not know what it means. They are ashamed to be thought ignorant, or behind the times, or out of fashion, and therefore, they catch at the word as something that will exalt them in popular esteem. They would be horrified at their classification of themselves as evolutionists, if they know what it meant.

What, then, does it mean? What is Evolution? Some people go no further than the primary definition in the dictionary in order to find out. They read there that evolution is the "act or process of evolving or working out a thing", and they say, "Why we believe that!" "Does not every one believe that?" Certainly he does, but that does not make him an evolutionist.

What the Evolutionist Says.

Evolution, in the philosophic or scientific meaning of the term, is a theory which undertakes to account for, or to explain, the origin and course of the universe independently of God, independently of a personal creator, director and upholder of the universe. "Evolution is the teaching that the universe has come into being without the interference of any agency external to itself." So says E. D. Cope, an evolutionist. "The idea which underlies Evolution is that species have had a natural rather than a supernatural origin." So says W. H. Conn, another evolutionist. "The universe is altogether non-miraculous as to its origin and progress." So says E. H. Haeckel, a third evolutionist. "The universe has been developed by the processes of nature." So says Lyman Abbott, a fourth evolutionist. These, observe, are the definitions of evolutionists themselves, who of course, know what they mean.

And yet, strange to say, Evolution always starts with something, it always begins with matter, or substance of some kind, as already in existence. Where did the matter come from, how did it get into existence? The evolutionist does not know and does not pretend to say. He may tell you, merely, that it is an attribute of ultimate being. Or he may say that an uncaused cause brought it into being, but he will go no further, because it is impossible to go further.

How He Reasons It Out.

And this is the way the evolutionist argues or reasons it out. He says in some infinitely remote past, millions of years ago perhaps, matter and force appeared. Notice the word force. Matter without force, or substance without energy, would get nowhere and do nothing. Force is as necessary to be predicated at the beginning as matter is necessary to be predicated.

Now within this matter, says the evolutionist, and associated with this force, there appeared an original cell. Ask him what he means by a "cell", and he will tell you that it is the smallest conceivable element of an organized body. Ask him what he means by an "organized body", and he will tell you an independent living activity, a body containing a spark of life. Ask him how that spark of life got out into that body and he will tell you that he does not know!

But the evolutionist keeps on guessing. He tells us that from this cell, this smallest conceivable element of an organized body, all things emerged. Ask him how they emerged, and he will tell you that they emerged by certain laws resident within that cell or that body. But laws commonly suppose a law-giver; how did those laws get within that body? He does not know and he does not pretend to say.

Where They All Agree.

There is one point, however, of which the evolutionist is very sure, one point on which all evolutionists are agreed. That point is this, that there are no gaps, no breaks in the process of evolution. It is a chain without any missing link. There is a steady and continuous ascent from the lower to the higher forms of life, from the simple to the complex. From the primordial cell just spoken of, to the planets in the sky, and, in the organic world, to man himself. All these things are accounted for, says the evolutionist, by forces and laws operating without a break, remember that, from the original cell. All society has been evolved this way, so has religion, morals, politics and the mechanical inventions. They all come without a break, in continuous evolution from that cell. They were all worked out without any superintending agency whatever, without God, that is to say, from that cell. It belongs to the very essence of the theory to revolt against any claim for the interposition of creative power, the word creation as commonly understood, finds no place in the vocabulary of Evolution.

Charles Darwin's Admission.

But some one may call a halt at this point. He may ask if this is entirely fair to the evolutionist. He may ask if there are not some evolutionists who have a place for God. Are there not some who admit that God created matter and force, and placed them under those laws which, during these untold ages, gradually evolved them into worlds? Yes, there are evolutionists who are so bold. We have included them in those who speak of ultimate being or of an uncaused cause as the source of all things. They are not absolutely atheistic, but they are so practically. They deny this God any superintending, directing or upholding relation to the universe. They deny Him any interference with the fixed laws of evolution though they may admit that He originated these laws. Charles Darwin was himself forced to admit that a vague being called God actually started things, but the theory so often associated with Darwin's name "deprives that God of all personality and attributes and banished Him", as another says, "to the remotest confines of time and space".

But our interlocutor is not yet satisfied, let us suppose. He still asks if we have been fair to the evolutionist. Are there not some, he will say, who go still further in recognizing God? Are there not some who deny that animals have come from plants? Are there not some who believe that animal life called for a new creative fiat, a new interposition of God? We answer yes, there are some evolutionists who believe that and who still call themselves evolutionists, theistic evolutionists, that is, evolutionists who believe in a personal Creator, God, and still remain evolutionists. But their name is a misnomer. Orthodox evolutionists themselves would disown them. Why? Because they contradict and bring into disrepute the very principle which the theory of Evolution insists upon. That is, the principle of continuity, the principle that there are no gaps or breaks in the process of development. To quote another, "If I admit that God came into the process and used creative power to form something that had not existed hitherto, then there was a gap, a break in the continuity that a new creation filled. In other words, what thus came into being was in no sense the outgrowth or development of what went before, and thus the theory of Evolution goes into the discard".

II.

What Christianity Means.

This much for Evolution; now let us turn to Christianity. As we permitted the evolutionist to tell us what Evolution means, so should we permit the Christian to tell us what Christianity means.

The inspired Apostle Paul is the first and the chiefest expounder of Christianity. Let us hearken to what he says. With startling clearness, as Professor Machen expresses it, Paul summarizes what Christianity is in that precious passage where, writing to the Corinthians, he says:

"Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye received, and wherein ye stand;

By which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures;

And that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures:

And that He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve:

After that, He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once."—(1 Cor. 15:1-6.)

Here observe that Paul, inspired writer though he was, is not resting on his own understanding of the subject, he is not asking his readers to accept his ipse dixit as to what Christianity is, but is giving them that which he himself "also received". He does not say whence he received it, but the inference is that he received it from our Lord Himself by special revelation. In an earlier chapter in this epistle, and in other places, Paul speaks of more than one such special revelation. Nor is it contradictory to this to say also, that Paul must have had elementary instruction in the Christian faith from the earliest disciples with whom he fellowshipped (Acts 9:19). And further still, as a pupil of Gamaliel, he must have tested that which he received from them by an examination of the Old Testament Scriptures on his own part. Paul was not ignorant of what Christianity was, and his definition of it may be relied upon.

Therefore, we see that according to Paul, there are at least three things which a Christian must believe in order to be a Christian and any one, or all, of these three things is absolutely incompatible with Evolution. What are these three things?

A MESSAGE FROM MICHELANGELO.

A Detail from a Frescoe on the Ceiling of the Sistine Chapel.

The first thought that comes to you in looking at Michelangelo's Daniel is that glory of youth, physical strength. Not bigness or titanic force of giants so admired by children, but that strength which comes from perfect development of mind, as well as the body.

The placing of this figure in the center of a spandrel, an inverted pyramid, a form so suggestive of an opening out or increasing power denoting life, is a most appropriate form for the youngest and most active of the prophets painted by Michelangelo. Activity is accented by the attitudes of the figures placed either side of the prophet. These figures, genii, seem to be dancing, expressing joy. The same genii placed by the side of the other prophets are in attitudes of thought, sadness or wonder.

The figure of Daniel is seated in an attitude of one who is sending a message of the deepest import. He is writing upon a desk or tablet placed on his right, near the wall. Behind him is the figure of a man who, in looking over Daniel's left shoulder, appears to be giving him a message. Before the prophet stands a small figure, similar to those little genii placed behind some of the other prophets. This little figure is standing, his sturdy little body bent forward so that he may hold firmly the heavy open book placed on his shoulders. Daniel also holds the book. His left hand is stretched out holding the cover, showing, in so doing, the great muscles of his arm and hand.

His head is turned towards the right and he is so completely absorbed in his work, tracing the message with his finger, that he appears unconcerned with affairs that might be going on around him. His face shows no expression of that contemplation, warning or admonition which we see in the faces of the other prophets. Instead, we see intense mental activity governed by spiritual force. His face is filled with that enthusiasm which belongs to those who have the power to reveal truth. For Daniel was given the power not only to declare a prophecy, but to reveal its meaning.

His experiences had been more varied, more remarkable, than those of any other prophet; his faith tested by more terrible methods, and he had come forth from all dangers with a firmer trust in God.

He had been a revealer of the dreams of others; now he had a dream of his own to be revealed.

In the book of Jeremiah, which is open before him, Daniel read that he and his friends, captives in Babylon, should be restored to their own country. Then he prayed that this might be fulfilled and "an angel, Gabriel, the same that had appeared to him before in a vision, appeared even while he was praying", came, "swiftly touched me about the time of evening", to quote the words of Daniel.

The angel "like unto a man" continues talking to Daniel, telling him that he is sent to give him "skill and understanding". Continuing, the angel gives him the message of prophecy of the coming of a Messiah, that Daniel shall be restored to his country and that he is beloved.

Then Daniel has a strange vision, after which the archangel Michael comes to reveal it, saying: "O man greatly beloved, fear not; peace be unto thee; be strong."

The whole of the vision is interpreted, being a prophecy that the Messiah should come after all the great world powers then known, "Persia, Greece, the kings of the south and north and an unnamed power greater than all", should be destroyed and that the Messiah would be a personal Messiah a "son of man".

This idea gave the humanistic touch to Daniel's prophecies; hence their strength. It is this touch that enabled Michaelangelo to portray so faithfully the prophet Daniel; for the great artist was also a humanist; was also an interpreter. His message, given to us in every touch of his chisel or brush, is "Be strong".

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chests will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Ps. 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Z. T. Strother, of Warrenton, Va.:

"Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me" (Ps. 15:50).

A PRAYER.

"I want the adoring Divine,
Thou only, my God can'st bestow,
I want in those beautiful garments to shine,
Which distinguish Thy household below;

I want every moment to know,
Thy spirit resides in my heart,
That His power is present to cleanse and to heal
And newness of life to impart.

I want, Oh, I want to attain
Some likeness my Saviour, to Thee,
That longed for resemblance once more to regain,
Thy comeliness put upon me;

I want to be marked for Thine own,
Thy seal on my forehead wear,
To receive that new name on the mystic white stone,
Which none but Thyself can declare.

I want as a traveler to haste,
Straight onward, nor pause on my way,
No forethought nor anxious contrivance to waste,
On the tent only pitched for a day;

I want—and this sums up my prayer,
To glorify Thee 'till I die,
Then calmly to yield up my soul to Thy care,
And breathe out in faith my last sigh."

THINGS THAT NEVER HAPPEN IN CHURCH.

The ushers calling for assistance in carrying the offering because of its bulk or weight.

The minister insisting that the people attending service in the morning must not return in the evening, in order to make room for others.

The sexton standing with hands folded asking "Isn't there something else for me to do?"

The quartette or choir pleading with the minister to permit them to sing at the mid-week prayer service.

A church "sore-head" doubling his subscription to current expenses.

The finance committee rejoicing over a big increase in the next year's budget.—Paul Morrison in Church Management.

TWELFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than we desire or deserve, pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy, forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and meditation of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

SUCH a prayer suits well the more mature Christian, who has grown in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ; though it lacks the brevity and force of the publican's prayer. The newly awakened sinner will generally find better expression of his wants to God in prayers like the publican's or Paul's at his conversion, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do"? (Acts 9:6). The Bible gives us models of prayer to suit all ages, all conditions of life, all stages of growth in the Christian course, from the babe to the manhood in Christ; from the prayer of little Samuel, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth", (1 Sam. 3:10), to that of Solomon at the dedication of the temple (1 Kings 8:23-53), or that of the aged Simeon, the "Nunc Dimittis", one of the shortest and most beautiful prayers on record; no petition in it, we might say; for the first verse is just a resigning himself into God's hands, as one full of years, and thankful for this crowning mercy, having seen the Lord's Christ.

All Christians have had much experience of God's readiness to hear, and willingness to give, which we ascribe to Him in using this collect; and on the other hand doubtless we Christians have found times when our Father seemed not to hear, or if He heard, did not give just what we asked. I refer of course to times of great distress, especially sickness of dear ones, whose loss seemed more than we could bear. If He does not give just what we ask, be it health and strength, or life itself, or the means to live in comfort, or other temporal blessing, He is sure to give in answer to earnest prayer the comfort needed to bear the loss, and as time goes He makes it more and more apparent to His faithful follower why he was not given the specific thing asked. No doubt his brethren prayed earnestly for St. Stephen's life, and the Church needed him, and always does need such men very much. Why was it not granted, as was Peter's life, a little later! And we might also ask why the same tyrant was allowed to slay James, the brother of John, for whom we may be sure the Church prayed, as for Peter.

Some light on this problem He allows; but it is far from full and satisfactory. e. g., St. Augustine said, "Si Stephanus non orasset, ecclesia Paulum non haberet" (If Stephen had not prayed, the Church would have no Paul). And a striking reference was made to that dying prayer of Stephen by one whom an infidel asked why his merciful, omnipotent Christ had let His faithful Stephen die so cruel a death. Said the Christian in reply: "He gave Stephen not life, but a far better gift; power in dying to pray for his murderers."

That God gives us more than we deserve is so evident that we need not dwell upon it. Only a self-righteous Pharisee could think otherwise; and He gives us more than we desire in that He gives us according to our need and not according to our wants. We know what we want, or think that we do; He only knows our needs, and in tender love and compassion on our childish wishes, acts accordingly. On how many of our wants in the past we can look back now, and see plainly that they were not only not needs, but positively harmful, and in tender mercy not given us. Our constant prayer should be, "Give us, Lord, not what we want, but what we need".

In the petition we appeal to God's abundant mercy for forgiveness first, as the necessary condition for the asking, or enjoyment of, any other. The wording of the collect is most pleasing here; forgiving and giving harmonizing so sweetly. With a conscience void of offense through Christ's atonement, we come boldly to the throne of grace, and obtain mercy and grace to help in time of need, through His merits and mediation; though unworthy of the least of His mercies (Heb. 4:14 and 16).

THE Epistle for the twelfth Sunday after Trinity is 2 Cor. 3:4-9. In verses 1-4 Paul declares his trust in the excellence of his work at Corinth, the proof of which is set forth in verse 2, where he calls the Corinthian Christians an "epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men", and "not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in tables that are hearts of flesh" (R. V.), and this trust of God he has in Christ, in whom is all his sufficiency, who has made Paul an able minister of the New Testament, "not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life". Here the writer contrasts "letter" and "Spirit", and then "the ministration of death (or condemnation), with the ministration of righteousness". How the letter of the law kills is shown by Rom. 7:9, where Paul says, "For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died".

This death unto sin, this recognition of the sinfulness of sin, must come to the sinner to make the new birth possible, "the new birth unto righteousness; for being by nature born in sin and the children of wrath, we are hereby (by baptism) made the children of grace". Moses' ministration was that of condemnation; Christ's that of righteousness. His righteousness, which imputed to us, gives us place in His kingdom.

The glory of Christ's ministration is strongly set forth by this comparison with that of Moses, a glory so brilliant that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold his face, and a veil was needed, because "the skin of his face shone" (Exod. 35:30), "and they were afraid to come nigh him". But this was a passing glory, a glory to be done away, with that old dispensation, while the glory of Christ, of which the three favored ones on the Mount of Transfiguration were allowed a glimpse, is an everlasting glory.

The transfigured Christ was seen by St. John in Patmos, where His countenance was as the sun shining in His strength (Rev. 1:16), and so He will appear in His glory "to those who look for Him the second time without sin, unto salvation" (Heb. 9:28).

Observe the force of Paul's logic, the argument "A fortiori"; "for if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory". Visions of that glory have been rare since the time of Moses. The guiding of Israel by the Shechinah from Egypt to Canaan is a prominent feature in Old Testament history, and was even more important to the wanderers than the "fiery-cloudy pillar".

For hundreds of years till Isaiah's time there was no communication of God to His people, save by Urim and Thummin (Lights and Perfections), in some mysterious way, and in other ways not clear to us; but such grand displays of heavenly glory are not given, and we are told that in Eli's time, "the word of the Lord was precious in those days; there was no open vision" (1 Sam. 3:1). In Isa. 6 we have the prophet's grand vision of "the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple" (this in the year King Uzziah died). Then in the captivity we have the wonderful vision of Ezekiel wherein was "the appearance of the likeness to the glory of the Lord", when the prophet received his commission.

Such revelations of God's glory are given in the Old Testament. Yet Paul assures us that "the ministration of righteousness doth much more exceed in glory". How can a poor mortal add anything to His infinite glory? We might well be discouraged, but for many texts which show us how by faithful service and obedience we can glorify God, especially in His intercessory prayer. "All mine are Thine (He says, St. John 17:10), and Thine are mine, and I am glorified in them."

THE Gospel for the twelfth Sunday after Trinity is Mark 7:3-37, the healing of the deaf mute in the Decapolis. Our Lord's way of healing here is very different from the ordinary, e. g., from the way He healed the daughter of the Syro-Phonician woman, told by Mark just before; no process, simply an act of the divine will; while here various incidents are given, taking Him aside, putting His fingers into His ears, spitting, touching His tongue, looking up to heaven, sighing, then finally the word of command, "ephphatha".

Twice after this Jesus healed in like manner a blind man at Bethsaida (Mark 8:22-26), and a man blind from his birth, sent to the pool of Siloan to wash off the healing clay (John 9:1-7). I am indebted to Keble's "Christian Year" for some thoughts on this miracle. He sings for this twelfth Sunday after Trinity on the text, "and looking up to heaven He sighed, and saith unto him ephphatha, that is, "Be opened" (Mark 7:34). Keble thinks the sigh here, and the tears at Lazarus' grave, may have been partly caused by thoughts of the vast extent of such sorrow and distress the world over, which the divine plan did not now contemplate to relieve in the miraculous way these were relieved. The consciousness of the power to relieve suffering, yet restrained by the knowledge that the suffering must not be relieved in this way, if God's gracious purposes for mankind are to be fulfilled, might well cause deep grief in the Saviour's sympathetic soul. And if His inability to go through the world relieving all bodily ills that met Him caused Him grief, how much more must He have grieved over the wilfulness of so many sin-sick souls about Him, who knew not their need of the Great Physician of souls, and would not be healed!

"The deaf may hear the Saviour's voice;
The fettered tongue its chain may break;
But the deaf heart, the dumb by choice,
The laggard soul that will not wake,
The guilt that scorns to be forgiven;
These baffle e'en the spells of heaven;
In thought of these His brows benign
Not e'en in healing cloudless shine."

The spitting of Jesus on this occasion and the next, when He healed a blind man at Bethsaida (Julias), and the use of His spittle for healing the man blind from birth in Jerusalem, are incidents hard to see the meaning of. They clearly belong to the healing side of the God-man, Christ Jesus of Nazareth, and spitting is always (if it has any meaning) expressive of disgust or contempt. Could it mean either or both here? So far as I can recall, Jesus never gave any expression of disgust or contempt save when He called Herod the Tetrarch, "that fox". Of what or of whom could He here have felt disgust or contempt? Might it not be of Satan and his agents venting their wrath and hatred of man on such insignificant persons, feeling their inability to reach Him in that way? If so, they found occasion to avenge it on Jesus, when they, through their instruments, the councillors of the Sanhedrin, spit in His face, buffeted Him at His mock trial in Jerusalem (Matt. 26:27), as Isaiah had long before foretold (Isa. 56:6), "I hid not my face from shame and spitting". The use also of means apparently so useless as spittle and clay to effect a cure, might be meant as a lesson to us not to neglect means altogether (as faith-cure people do), but to hold them of small value compared with the divine agency which works through them.

"Clay and Siloam's pool we find
At heaven's command, restored the blind;
And Jordan's waters hence were seen
To wash a Syrian leper clean.
All medicines act by Thy decree;
Receive commission all from Thee;
And not a plant that spreads the plain,
But teems with health, when heaven ordains."

The effort of Jesus to avoid publicity by taking the man "aside from the multitude", charging them to tell no man, failed entirely; for "the more He charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it; and were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well; He maketh even the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak".

Even man's disobedience redounds to God's glory, as now the great number of benevolent institutions for the sick, the afflicted and the insane (of which there were none till Christ came, and the Gospel taught the use of them), redound to His glory, yet are supported mainly by money of disobedient, those who make no profession, or are only Christian in name.

NOTES ON THE PRAYER BOOK

How the Order for Morning and Evening Prayer Came Down to Us.

THE average member of the Church has very little idea that between the covers of our Book of Common Prayer are packed something like 1,700 years of Church History and worship.

To get an adequate idea of what Morning and Evening Prayer are, for instance, and how we have arrived at the present form, let us look back about the same 1,700 years and see what we can find.

The earliest description of Sunday worship which we have is to be found in Justin Martyr writing about 150 A.D.

The service was as follows:

1. A lesson from the apostles or prophets.
2. A homily upon it by the minister.
3. Prayers in which all the congregation joined.
4. The Kiss of Peace.
5. Presentation of the Toly Elements—Water being mixed with the wine.
6. Prayer and Thanksgiving by the President.
7. Reception of the Elements by the congregation, a portion being reserved to be taken to absent members by the deacons.
8. Almsgiving for the relief of the sick, the poor, widows, orphans and prisoners.

Here is the first outline of a liturgy. The word liturgy means any kind of service, and as the Holy Communion was the chief service of the early Church it came eventually to signify that service.

Services like this must have been common, that is to say, in use in several parts of the Christian world, for Origen talks of appointed prayers. Cyprian mentions customary prayers—"Preces Solenes".

Liturgies are still extant which have been used about this time. (i. e.) Sub. apostolic times.

That ascribed to St. James was the Liturgy of Jerusalem, and was used in the third century, for St. Cyril wrote a comment on it in the fourth century.

The Liturgy of St. Mark used in church of Alexandria.

St. Chrysostom's used in church of Canstantinople.

St. Basil's used in churches of Cappadocia.

Mozarabic and others used in Spain.

Again a strong point in liturgical worship favor is the fact that at the Council of Laodicea, 372 A. D., a decree states that the same liturgy or form of prayer should be always used, both at the ninth hour and in the evening.

This Canon was made obligatory on the whole Church by the Council of Chalcedon in 451 A. D.

Now, whilst this outline was probably the same throughout the Christian world, there would be undoubtedly variations due to local custom and practice. Hence in time there grew up several different and distinct types of liturgies.

The circumstances surrounding Augustine's mission to England in 596 bear out these facts. He expected to find an extinct Church, but instead found numbers of Christians driven out by the invading West Saxons into Wales. With them were seven Bishops with their attendant priests and deacons.

These men even in this early day had very strong and distinct views as to the independence of the Church in England, and were not prepared to receive the Roman missionary except on terms of equality.

The chief difficulty being the difference as above between their own liturgy and that of Rome.

Augustine, very much worried by this, referred to Gregory the Great, and asked his advice by a series of questions, one of which was:

"Whereas the faith is one, why are the customs of the churches different?"

Another:

"Why is one manner of celebrating the Holy Communion used in the Holy Roman Church and another in that of the Gauls?"

The reply of Gregory was very wise and Catholic, and to it we owe the fact that today we have an independent form of worship.

It was as follows:

"You, my brother, are acquainted with the customs of the Roman Church in which you were brought up. But it is my pleasure that if you have found anything either in the Roman or the Gallican or any other Church which may be more acceptable to Almighty God, you carefully make choice of the same, and sedulously teach the Church of the English, which is at present new in the faith, whatsoever you can gather from the several churches, for things are not to be loved for the sake of places, but places for the sake of good things. Select, therefore, from each church those things that are pious, religious and correct, and when you have made these up into one body, instil it into the English for their use."

The liturgy spoken of as the Roman is the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, that of the Gallican Church being derived from the liturgy of the Church of Ephesus.

Augustine endeavored to make up a common liturgy, and being prejudiced by his own Roman use naturally favored it, but his efforts failed at the Council of Cloveshoo 747 A. D.

About the time of the Conquest another attempt was made by Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, and he left behind him the several books that made up the Sarum use, adopted in 1085 A. D., and later introduced into other parts of England, and as a writer of 1256 A. D. said:

"The Church of Salisbury being conspicuous above all other churches like the sun in the heavens, diffusing its light everywhere, and supplying their defects."

This use then, combined with the uses of Hereford, Bangor, Lincoln, were the background for the compilers of our Prayer Book.

These uses were a collection of service books as follows:

Legenda—Containing lessons read at Matins from Holy

The Legenda—Containing lessons read at Matins from Holy Scripture or Homilies or lives of the Saints.

The Psalterium—Book of Psalms divided into portions, so that whole might be sung in the course of a week.

The Troparium—Containing the verses or Tropi, sung before and after the Introit in Holy Communion.

The Ordinale—Also called Pica or Pie, a table of reference to find the proper office for every Holy Day in the year.

The Missal—Which was in four volumes.

The Antiphover—Choir instructions for High Mass.

The Lectionary—The Epistles.

The Evangelistarium—The Gospels.

The Sacramentary—The prayers of the mass for the priest.

The Manual—Occasional offices—Baptism, Marriage, Burial, &c.

The Processional—Forms to be used in processions on certain days.

Breviary—So called because these last were shortened by Gregory VII. This was the hour book, and contained the offices to be said at the seven canonical hours, which were:

Matins, or Uhtsang, in old English, with Nocturns and hands said at break of day.

Prime or Primesang, 6 o'clock.

Tierce or Undersang, 9 o'clock.

Sext or Midday sang 12 o'clock.

Nones or Noon sang 3 o'clock.

Vespus or Even sang in evening.

Compline or Night sang bedtime.

Pontifical—Offices administered by a Bishop only—Confirmation, Ordination, Consecration of Churches, Dedications, &c.

All of these were in Latin. Services by the priest and for the priest, with just an occasional word for the people, for instance, a Canon, of Egbert, Archbishop of York in 740 A. D., said that "Every priest do with exactness instil the Lord's Prayer and the Creed into the people committed to him". Similar injunctions were made in the eleventh century and in the thirteenth.

Then in the fourteenth century the light of day began to shine in what was an unenlightened and dark England. John Wycliffe translated the Bible into English.

In 1525 appeared the first printed Bible—William Tyndal's. Then the first Version by Authority, the great Bible of 1539.

Improved editions of the Sarum Breviary were made in 1516 and 1531, and a last in 1541. This was commanded to be used throughout the Province of Canterbury, and at the same time every curate was directed to read to the people each Sunday and Holy Day one chapter of the New Testaments in English.

In 1543 Cramner proposed a revision of the service books.

In 1544 a new English liturgy was published.

In 1548 an order for Holy Communion in English was compiled.

In the same year, 1548, King Edward VI appointed the Archbishop of Canterbury and others to "Make one convenient and meet order of Common and Open Prayer and administration of the Sacraments for use in the realm, 'having as well eye and respect to the most sincere and pure Christian religion taught by the Scripture as to the usages in the primitive Church' ".

In January, 1549, an act of uniformity directed that this book be used on and after Whitsunday, June 9.

This book was the parent of our Book of Common Prayer.

Cramner took the old service books and from them condensed the seven-hour services into two, our Morning and Evening Prayer.

Now, having them all in English instead of Latin so that they were services that the people could enjoy and take part in, a revision was made in 1552, and in 1559, in 1604, and lastly in 1662; from this and the Scottish books of 1637 and 1764 we get our American Book of 1789. As we use our Prayer Book at Morning Prayer then let us realize something of the wonderful work done by the men of the Reformaiton, and pause as we say the Te Deum, and think that for over 1,500 years has it been used in our churches.

Let us realize again that:

The Colect for Peace goes back to Gelasius, Bishop of Rome, 492 A. D.

The Collect for Grace, from Gregory 590.

The Prayer fr the Clergy frm Gelasius, 492.

The Prayer for St. Chrysostom from the early liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrsostom.

And let us realize also something of the heritage that has been passed to us from the martyrs and saints of old and in realizing it endeavor once more; let us build a reverence for this book that is second only to the Bible in the heart of every member of the Anglican Communion.

EXTRACT FROM THE WILL OF THOMAS B. GRIFFIN, 1788.

Blessed be God Almighty, most merciful for ever and ever, Amen.

This is the last will of Thomas B. Griffin of Lancaster County, made at a time when he thought to pass from this world to the next; at a time when Infidels believe, the wicked cease to doubt, and the Liar tells the truth.

I resign my soul to God (in humble hope of its future Happiness through the unbounded Mercy of my Saviour Jesus Christ) as in the disposal of a Being infinitely Good and great.

My desire first is that my remains be deposited in the Vault on the Plantation whereon I live, with my ever remembered dear Wife, Judith Griffin, and children; and my will is that a Marble slab be procured to put on the Vault with the following Superscription: "Here lye deposited the dear sacred Remains of Judith Griffin, a daughter of Carter Burwell, Esqr, born the 11th April 1744, married to Thomas B. Griffin Nov. 8th, 1766, and snatched away by a violent Sudden Illness the 20th Nov. 1769. She was the most affectionate wife that ever blessed the married State; as pious and devout a soul as was received into Christianity, and performed every Call and Duty with the greatest Pleasure and Sweetness: the best of Women, and the best of Wives.

"How lov'd, how good thou wert availed thee not Thy space of dust alone remains of thee,
To whom related or by whom begot;
'Tis all thou art; 'tis all the good can be."

She had a son called Le Roy and a Daughter named Lucy, who both dyed soon after they were born and lye entombed with her.

"Not that we are sufficient of ourselves, to account anything as from ourselves; but our sufficiency is from God; who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter, but of the spirit" (1 Cor. 3:5, 6).

THE TEACHING CHURCH. A Handbook of Adult Religious Education. Edited by Alfred L. Woodard. Introduction by the Bishop of Manchester. Cloth, pp. 209. The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, London. Sole American Agents, The Macmillan Company, New York City.

The challenge has gone forth that preaching has reached its finality. The people need and demand instruction. And from the character of much that goes for preaching, we may heartily assent. Dr. Jowett, the popular pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, held large congregations spellbound by his teaching methods. Wherever Campbell Morgan goes the crowds follow. He is a teacher. Others might be quoted.

The timeliness of this book, therefore, is evident. We have such excellent papers as The Meaning of Adult Religious Education and Its Value; The Attitude of the Adult Today to the Christian Religion; The Content of Adult Religious Education; Method in Adult Religious Education; The Place of Reading in Adult Religious Education, and "What Can I Do in My Parish"? Syllabus and Appendices complete this partial list.

One has a sense of regret, however, that in order to meet the adult of the day, one must, as the Bishop of Manchester does, bow subserviently to the evolutionists. When he says, "Personally, I am convinced that the evolutionary view harmonizes with Christianity better than the old-fashioned view", one shrinks. He must know that he cannot reconcile the anti-Christian attitude of the evolutionary school by any condescension on his part. Evolution will inveterately array itself against revealed religion. And we grieve that the Bishop should impugn the historicity of the early chapters of Genesis with no concern as to the resultant repudiation of the doctrine of redemption and St. Paul's vehement contention concerning the first and second man in Rom. 5 and 1 Cor. 15. We have not yet seen any reconciliation on this matter. Either St. Paul was mistaken, as one American Bishop has declared, or he must be recognized as speaking truth by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, who should know the history of "origins" better than any un-Christian scientist. Bishop Brown was logical. When he embraced Darwinism, he threw overboard his former faith.

And in the course of the book one finds strains of this character. But we cannot allow the "dead fly" in the ointment to spoil the otherwise commendable elements. The concept of the work, its most praiseworthy aim, its clarity and comprehensiveness entitle it to a wholesome appropriation by ministers, church workers and teachers.

CHRIST AND THE NEW WOMAN. By Dr. Clovis G. Chappell. The Belk Lectureship of Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga. Cloth, pp. 117. The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.25.

We should prefer another title for this excellent treatise. The mind of our Lord is not any different towards the new woman than it has been towards the old. She has a precious soul to save, a life to live and a destiny to mature. Perhaps if the phrasing were reversed it would be more appropriate. The problem is not how Christ is disposed towards the new woman, but how she may be inclined towards Him. And that really is what the writer aims to discuss.

The new woman is here. She has intentionally (in many cases) fired the sexual impulses of men until they have become dull to the suggestions which in the early period were distressingly shameful. How far she will go in the exposure of her graceful form we may live to see. But the battle has been fought and won. Helpless man lies at her feet conquered.

It is not only in her habits of life, her scanty attire, her lipstick and vanity case, her daring invasion of the realm of masculinity in the use of the cigarette, but as a factor in business, art, science, law, literature, criticism and other spheres previously monopolized by men, that she is making her impress. Yet, why should she not catch a red hot bolt from her helper, far up in the air on a steel girder, if she has the nerve to do it? A marked contrast to her predecessor who knew only the household routine and the crocheting needle. Yet, we do admire her. We are proud of her as she is, as well as what she was.

It is not in her achievements that the author finds ground for perplexity. The rather, that in her ascent from former occupations, ideals and environments, she becomes intoxicated with a false realism which would unsex her and render the superb creature that she is, the victim of a deception which can be but fatal to her best estate and admirable individuality. We all know, as he says, that the war created a high idealism which the armistice brought into collapse; that what we had hoped would ensue, "the nation finding its soul", was sordidly reversed. We descended into depths of "war-shocked" abandon which gave birth in due time to "the new woman". Our author seeks to recover her for the Lord as he presents her in Her Opportunities; As a Worker Outside the Home; In the Home; Her Dangers; Her Education for the New Day (in which the fit view of marital relations is discussed) and the bearing of Christ and His union with woman. All thoughtfully and plainly treated. A good book for the times and for both sexes.

"AS LONG AS WE LIVE."

Please continue our Churchman, as we want to take it as long as we live.

SUBSCRIBER.

Salem, Va., August 13, 1928.

"COMFORT."

Mr. Editor:

It is to your Mr. A. B. Williams I look for the words of personal comfort and never fail to find, and it may be the Saviour sent the thought to him because the waves were boisterous around me and He would remind me not to be fearful. This is only one thing more I have to thank the Southern Churchman for. May it long continue to bring the comfort and peace to others it brings to me.

"SUBSCRIBER."

"CONVINCED."

Mr. Editor:

I have become convinced that the Articles of Religion should not be removed from the Book of Common Prayer. And this for three reasons:

First. Too many people care for their retention and would be sincerely grieved by their removal.

Second. Since the last meeting of General Convention the Articles have become identified in the popular mind with the present faith and doctrine of the Church. This distinctly places them outside the commitment by General Convention to the Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book.

Third. This controversy, if carried to Washington in October, will seriously jeopardize the entire revision, which from the beginning has been characterized by a remarkably fraternal and Christian spirit.

Above all things, I oppose passing the Articles into the hands of a committee. Any effort to revise them, by dropping some and changing others, will bring discord and trouble. Let us leave them where and as they are.

WYATT BROWN.

SHALL WE HAVE PRAYER BOOKS IN THE MISSION FIELD?

Mr. Editor:

A recent news item in one of our Church papers reveals a situation which should engage the earnest attention of the General Convention. It is under the head of "Southern Brazil", and the gist of it is embodied in the following statement:

"The Brazilian Church has been seriously handicapped by the lack of Prayer Books, as the former edition of the Prayer Book was exhausted six years ago." For six years, in other words, our devoted missionaries in that tropical district have been striving to "carry on" without Prayer Books, or at most, with a constantly diminishing supply. Assuming that there were enough for actual use six years ago, and with the wear and tear of the intervening years in mind, it is not hard to visualize the number now remaining—nor their present condition!

And what is being done about it? On April 29, so the item continues, the Convocation of the district appointed a commission "to revise the language of the old Prayer Book and publish a new edition". It requires little knowledge of such matters to realize that the work of revision itself is a very large undertaking, and that the cost of publishing an edition of the Book of Common Prayer is far beyond the resources of a single Missionary District. Yet this brave district undertakes it single-handed! Let us hope that they will succeed, and that the battered remnants of the old edition may be preserved, by miracle or otherwise, until the new edition is ready for use; for if experience is any guide, it will take some years to complete the work.

Translating the Book of Common Prayer is no simple task. It calls not only for a wide acquaintance with both languages involved, but also—and its importance cannot be exaggerated—for literary gifts of a high order. Otherwise the resulting product is unworthy of the Church and becomes an object of ridicule among the better educated. Some foreign language districts have such talent at their command, but others have not. In most cases it would be necessary to employ expert assistance. And even where it is found within the ranks of the mission staff, provision must be made for relieving those so designated from other work, in order that they may devote themselves wholly to the work in hand. It cannot be done at odd moments.

The point that I wish to emphasize is that such undertakings fall properly to the Department of Missions or the National Council, and should not be left to the individual districts, with their meagre resources. For the cost of publication a special appropriation will be required, in any case, and the department owes it to the Church at large to see to it that the book published is in every way worthy of the imprimatur which it bears.

Nor does Prayer Book publication stand alone. The same things are true with regard to Hymnals, Sunday-School Supplies, and the whole range of apologetic and devotional literature. At the present time we have almost nothing: no Prayer Books, either Spanish or Portuguese, no Church hymnals, no Sunday-school material worthy the name, and in Spanish at least, no apologetic literature. The situation in the Orient is not much better. The full details of our lack in this department may be learned from a perusal of the chapter on "Equipment and Literature" in "The Missionary and His Work", published recently by Morehouse Publishing Company. And the reason for the shameful condition there revealed is simply this, that we have left the great task to the districts to wrestle with as best they could.

But surely the time has come for the Church's missionary administration to shoulder the burden, and see to it that the missionaries at the front are supplied with the weapons of their warfare. To this end I beg to suggest that the General Convention take appropriate action, and that a reoslution similar to the following be adopted:

Resolved, the House of Bishops concurring, that there be created in the Department of Missions a Subsidiary Division of Literature, with the duty of supplying the Church's missions at home and abroad with such literary equipment as their work demands, and that the National Council be recommended to make such appropriation as may be required for the efficient carrying out of this purpose.

Next to the salaries of the missionaries themselves, there is no other need in the whole field of missionary endeavor that is comparable with this.

LEFFERD M. A. HAUGHWOUT.

"PASTORS, POLITICIANS, PACIFISTS."

My Dear Mr. Mackenzie:

My co-author and I are indeed grateful to you for your courageous review of "Pastors, Politicians, Pacifists", which appeared in the July 7 issue of the "Southern Churchman", and which has been brought to my attention.

The "politics" have been so shrewd and so skillful in their manouverings that they have deceived the very elect. Many of the rank and file, in pulpit and pew, have latterly begun to sense the sinister truth of the situation, and it is to me a source of much joy that men like yourself, wielding a powerful influence for good, are manfully crusading against this great and dangerous prostitution of our religious organizations.

The only debate that Mr. Johns, my co-author, and I engaged in prior to writing this book was upon the question as to the charge that we knew would be made—that we were "attacking the Church". We both love the Church and see in it the only hope for a weary world, but we see as well the fact that the Church cannot give to the world what the world so grievously needs if the Church is to be utilized for political ends.

Again let me express my sincere gratitude to you for your thoughtful and purposeful assistance.

LeROY F. SMITH,
Lt. Col. Inf. Res. U. S. A., in charge Lecture Bureau, Better America Federation.

"ERROR."

In our issue of August 11, under his letter, "Bishop Candler on Politics", we referred to Major J. C. Hooks as a member of Stonewall Jackson's Brigade. We should have referred to him as a member of General N. P. Forrest's Cavalry, one of the greatest cavalry troops that ever existed.

General Lee is credited with the statement that General Nathan B. Forrest was one of the greatest geniuses developed during the Civil War, based on his accomplishments with the least resources.

Day of Prayer for Anti-War Treaty.

New York—Sunday, August 26, the the day preceding the signing of the Muliateral Treaty for the Renunciation of War, is urged as a special occasion for thanksgiving and prayer throughout the churches in a call issued today by the officers of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"The signing of the Multilateral Treaty by fifteen nations," said Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, President of the Federal Council of the Churches, "promises to prove so epoch-making in the moral and spiritual life of mankind as to call for the widest and most grateful recognition by all the religious forces of the world. In our own country the churches have an even deeper interest in the event than in other lands because of the far-seeing initiative and superb leadership taken by the American Secretary of State in negotiating this unique treaty."

Word has been received that the churches of Great Britain have been planning extensive observance of this Sunday as a day of thanksgiving. The Archbishops of Canterbury and of York, have sent a special letter to all Anglican clergymen saying that the occasion "is a great one in the contemporary history of the world". The Presbyterian, Methodist and Anglican leaders in Ireland in a joint statement have summoned their people to unite in prayer for Divine "blessing upon this great undertaking".

The call issued to American religious bodies by the Federal Council of the Churches emphasizes both thanksgiving for the success of the treaty and prayer for its hearty acceptance by the people and government of the United States.

General Lee and Our Constitution.

In March, 1869, General Robert E. Lee wrote to General George W. Jones in part as follows, and it revealed fully in what spirit he accepted the results of the Civil War:

He said: ". . . . . I was for the constitution and the Union established by our forefathers. No one is more in favour of that Union and that constitution, and as far as I know it is that for which the South contended, and if restored, as I trust they will be, I am sure that there will be no truer supporters of that Union and that constitution than the Southern people.

Please present my kindest regards to every member of your family, especially to your brave sons, who aided in our struggle for states' rights and constitutional government. We failed, but in the good Providence of God, apparent failure often proves a blessing."

"Misfortune nobly borne becomes good fortune."

Premiers and Primates.

It is interesting to remember that Earl Balfour, who was eighty last week, was the Premier who, twenty-five and a half years ago, nominated Dr. Randall Davidson to the Primacy, and that both were born in 1848, the ex-Premier being one hundred and nine days younger than our retiring Primate. Mr. Asquith (afterwards Earl of Oxford and Asquith) nominated Dr. Cosmo Lang to York, and Mr. Baldwin, who is sixty-one today, and is nearly three years his junior, has nominated Dr. Lang to Canterbury. During his twenty-five and a half years' Primacy, Dr. Randall Davidson has seen seven successive Premiers, Mr. (now Earl) Balfour, Sir H. Campbell Bannerman, Mr. Asquith, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Bonar Law, Mr. Baldwin, and Mr. Macdonald. He joked about the changes on his eightieth birthday, yet it is interesting to note how few changes of occupant happen at Lambeth Palace compared with 10 Downing Street. Mr. Gladstone nominated Archbishop Benson, and lived to see Archbishop Temple nominated by Lord Salisbury, who in his turn saw Dr. Davidson nominated by his nephew, Mr. Balfour, who now sees Dr. Lang nominated by Mr. Baldwin.

Women Missionaries, Attention!

The Triennial Committee on Entertainment of Women Missionaries, Deaconesses and Sisterhoods is making every effort to get in touch with any of the above-named who are engaged in Mission work and are planning to attend the Triennial meetings in Washington this fall.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Washington is offering hospitality, in so far as possible, to all these most worthy guests. Room and meals for a period of about two weeks, that is, from the afternoon of October 8 to the morning of October 23, will be available for those who wish it and the Committee hopes to have all guests placed by September 15.

Will all who are interested please communicate at once with the Chairman of the Committee, Mrs. David S. Carll, 3245 Ellicott Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Eighth Annual Convention.

At the closing business session of the Business Men's Evangelistic Clubs last night the following officers were elected for the new year: Charles M. Norfleet, President, Winston-Salem, N. C.; W. H. Stansell, First Vice-President, Richmond, Va.; O. C. Holland, SecondVice-President, Montgomery, Ala.; James Morton, Secretary-Treasurer, Atlanta, Ga.; W. G. Wellborn, Field Secretary Atlanta, Ga.

The association is made up of the Southern States. The convention was, without doubt, the best yet held. It was decided to hold the ninth annual convention during August, 1929, at Blue Ridge, N. C.

W. R. Lecky,
Secretary Virginia Association.

Day of Prayer for Schools.

In keeping with its annual custom the National Reform Association, with headquarters in Publication Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., is offering to send free of charge the September issue of its official journal, Th Christian Statesman, to all pastors and other Christian leaders who will encourage their people to observe the second Lord's Day in September as a Day of Prayer for Schools. As in former years, this issue will be replete with authentic, up-to-date data relative to the value and importance of training the youth of our country in Christian morality, in the one and only institution in which all these youths are asembled. Pastors especially will find this particular issue helpful in the way of furnishing information that will enable them to discuss intelligently the subject of Christian Education.

Parties in the Church.

Years ago a very much revered teacher of history told me that the traditional parties existed to emphasize some one aspect of Christian truth, some particular phase of that which we chiefly learn in the Articles of our Belief. The Broad, or Liberal, Churchman lays a heavy emphasis upon our faith in "God the Father who hath made me and all the world". If we are true to that principle we shall worship the God of an infinite and all-embracing love; we shall see that all men live within the scope of that love; we shall endeavor to open our minds to truth from any quarter, knowing it to be truth of God. The Evangelical, or Low, Churchman, wants us to keep ever before our minds the saving truth that "God the Son hath redeemed me and all mankind". Loyalty to that part of the faith will make us very careful about the inwardness of our religious life. It will make us fervent worshippers of Jesus the Crucified. It will make us impatient of formalism. It will supply us with the motive for tireless service in the Name of Christ who died for us. And what is the High, or Catholic, Churchman seeking to teach us? What save this—that "God the Holy Ghost sanctifieth us and all the people of God". Because of that we seek for God in the Church, in the sacraments, and wherever "two or three are gathered together". Jesus only "began to do" in Palestine all the wonderful works of healing and redemption which we so sorely need. He lives and acts now, in and through His Church.—Dean Glasier, In The Living Church.

"Near East Relief" Service at Old Calvary, Fletcher.

A largely attended service marked by enthusiasm and the raising of a considerable sum of money for the Near East Relief was recently held at the historic old Calvary Episcopal Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C. (The Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., rector.) Mr. Lex Gluttz, Director of the Near East Relief for North and South Carolina, gave an address treating of the work of the Near East Relief in general and the Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., who has just returned from a three months' trip in Europe, Asia and Africa, gave his personal impressions of the work of the Near East Relief as he saw it in operation in Egypt, Palestine, Turkey and Greece. Mr. McClellan's address is to be released by the Near East Relief office for wide publication this coming autumn. Mr. McClellan was appointed by Governor McLean, of North Carolina, and the Hon. Josephus Daniels to represent North Carolina in the Near East Relief last winter and early spring in Egypt, Palestine, Turkey and Greece. His address was his official report to the New York City office and to the Near East Relief in North and South Carolina.

Rector Changes Parishes.

The Rev. John Simmons Wellford, who since June, 1926, has served as rector of All Saints' Church at Norton, Va., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, Va., and expects to take up his new work September 1. St. Thomas' Church has been without a rector since the resignation of the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, who went to Christ Church, Martinsville, in May, 1927. Mr. Wellford is a native of Roanoke, is a Bachelor of Arts of St. Stephen's College, Annondale-on-the-Hudson, New York, and a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, class of 1926. He was ordained to the diaconate in June, 1926, and to the priesthood in 1927. Immediately upon his ordination to the diaconate he was placed in charge of the church at Norton. Happily, Mr. Wellford is remaining in Southwestern Virginia, as both the churches at Norton and that at Abingdon are in this diocese.

Mission in Nelson County.

The Rev. James A. Figg, rector of St. Thomas, Christiansburg, and Grace Church, Radford, was the preacher in an interesting series of services held at Christ Church, Norwood, during the week of June 23-29. Great interest was manifest on the part of the people and good congregations were in attendance. The church at Norwood is under the care of the Rev. Frank Mezick, of Arrington, who also has charge of Trinity Church, Arrington, and Grace Church, Massies Mill.

Church Merger.

A merger has been announced between St. Bartholomew's Church, North Avenue, Baltimore, the Rev. Carol Harding in charge, and Trinity Church, Ten Hills, Baltimore. St. Bartholomew's has been at its present location since 1857, when the vestry was incorporated. It has always played a conspicuous part in the church life of the city. The church building has now been sold because of the change of population in this part of the city and the proceeds will be devoted to the building of a church in Ten Hills, which will have the name of St. Bartholomew's. Trinity Church in Ten Hills, with which it has merged, has developed into an active and promising mission of the diocese under the rectorship of the Rev. Edmund H. Gibson, who has recently announced his acceptance of a call to Trinity Church, Galveston, Texas. There is already a well-equipped parish house at the Ten Hills Church property. The rectorship of the combined churches has not been announced.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve; Pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy; forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. I SHALL NOT GO ALONE.

When comes the hour, to me unknown,
When my allotted time has flown,
And I must then go out alone—
O mystery so dark!
How shall I breast that surging sea
That marks this earthly boundary?
And what bright star will shine for me
To guide my fragile bark?

I shall not go out all alone
Into the dark and dim Unknown;
For He who never leaves His own
Will still be with me there.
And though I cannot now foresee
If rough or calm the tide may be,
My Saviour will be there with me
To banish anxious care.

I shall not venture all alone
The narrow sea whose waters moan;
For Christ, my Pilot, tried and known,
Will guide me through the foam;
Aye, He will hold me by the hand,
And calm the waves by His command,
Until we reach the shining strand
Where I shall be safe home.

Young Mexican Deacon Defies the Scorpions.

Bishop Creighton, according to his most welcome custom, has sent more pages from his Mexican journal, telling of a visit to another of those Indian missions with its mingling of pathos and hardship and triumph. This one is at Jojutla, in the State of Morelos, with Presbitero Miguel Camara in charge, and Deacon Samuel Cespedes "in residence". The latter is one of the young men ordained last year.

On the way, one passes the ruins of great haciendas and sugar mills marking the progress of the Morelos revolutionists toward Mexico City, who seem to have thought it necessary first to destroy as far as possible the basic industry of their great and fertile state.

The mission premises at Jojutla are well located on a street just off the plaza. The room used for services is in good condition and, as the congregation is rapidly outgrowing it, some day it will lend itself admirably to use as a Sunday-school room and parish house.

Just back of it, however, is a dark, gloomy, windowless room which serves as sleeping quarters for the deacon, Sanuel Cespedes. Back of that room is another, equally repellent, with no floor, which is his "house". The roof of this room is falling in, and is impartially infested with rats, venemous spiders and scorpions. The kitchen is a thatched lean-to, equally bad. As the heat is intolerable, Sr. Cespedes often pulls his bed out to a partly roofed-over space for a bit of air, but here also there are scorpions. He has been bitten twice quite severely and his arm was paralyzed each time for more than a week.

The Bishop, arriving on Saturday, sat under this roof to receive the many visitors who came to greet him, all expressing great pleasure in his visit. The principal topic of conversation, however, was the recent death of two people in one of our out-stations, San Nicolas Obispo. They were bitten by scorpions one day and were dead the next.

Sunday is market day, with the plaza crowded. The pavement in front of the church proved to be the regular stand of the itinerant barbers, who set up their chairs and plied their trade.

"Our service was wonderful," the Bishop says, "or rather, our series of services, for we had five weddings, Holy Communion, with two sermons, and a baptism." Any student of Latin American life knows how frequently the Church's marriage service is omitted because it has been made difficult or impossible to secure. "These weddings," the Bishop continues, "were interesting and pathetic. The ten principals stood in a row before the altar with their children all about them. . . . . My heart went out to them as they came to receive the blessing of the Church upon their union."

"The little church is only intended for about fifty people, but somehow or other one hundred and eighty got in, and many were on the street unable to enter. Sr. Camara celebrated. Sr. Cespedes preached the sermon and at the close, I read an address in Spanish. There were many communions and hearty responses and singing.

"After the service there was a sumptuous feast of turkey mole (chili gravy, says the helpful dictionary). There were the usual gracious addresses, and a poet recited a poem in my honor. My reply was my first attempt to improvise in Spanish. All through the addresses there was commendation of Cespedes and his ability. The people are anxious to rebuild. They want to tear down the really disgraceful part of their plant back of the church, and erect a new church and decent living quarters for their minister. They are right, and they will need some help. As soon as their vestry organization is completed they will have a definite proposition to make and will tell me how much they can give in money, labor and material. They will not know until the rice crop is in. We hope for their sakes it will be a good one. I have a high regard for Morelos Indians.

"During the whole day the heat had been stifling. The atmosphere in the church was thick. In the night a terrific tropical shower came up. The roof of the hotel leaked like a sieve. I tried pulling my raincoat over me, but the hollows in it soon filled and I grew tired of pouring water out on the floor. One becomes somewhat fatalistic in Mexico, and, although my bed and pillow were wet and I was wet, I went to sleep and slept soundly. The morning was lovely and clear and the trip home delightful.

"I wonder, as I write and think of Jojutla with its simple-minded people reaching out after Jesus Christ through our Church, if their aspiration for a new and suitable building in which to worship Him, and for decent quarters for their minister, which will not be an invitation to deadly scorpions, has any appeal. For, despite distance, race and difference in social code, 'all ye are brethren', and Churchmen in Jojutla are also touched and moved by the beauty of holiness."

The Personality of God.

When we speak of God we think of personality. We must say, "He". I know that the scientists of the last century tried hard to think and speak only of force, blind, mechanistic force, and to use the word "it" in alluding to the power which is back of all; but this attitude was able in the long run neither to satisfy them nor the minds of the multitude of common men and women.

We cannot avoid thinking in terms of personality when the word God falls from our lips. There is plain evidence that he has a brain, that there is design and a plan back of all the complications of creation. Our minds answer to his mind. We are all aware of the limitations of the old argument from design, by which men tried to prove the existence of God. We don't need to prove Him; it is foolish to try; but there is this much value in the argument from design that it is an intimation of personality, of a mind back of the created world. More than that, emotion is there. There is emotion in ourselves; we are principally emotion, bundles of emotion. We must therefore spring from emotion; emotion made us and not we ourselves. I know how feeble, groping and boyish all this talk is; but we can't help talking this way, reasoning or feeling this way, whichever you please to call it; and we can't help attempting the impossible task of putting into words some idea of our God, even though the intellect breaks down in the very attempt. Anyhow, we feel and ineradicably feel that God is a person and there is just no getting away from that feeling.—Dr. Burris Jenkins, in The Christian.

Cabbages and Plain Folk.

It all leads up to cabbage, mere cabbage. This kind is not associated with "kings" but comes in a covered wagon to plain folk like ourselves and has won, just recently, such an enthusiastic welcome on the part of my neighbor that I have been puzzled ever since. She is a conscientious little woman, this lady across the way, with three children, all of whom I have noted as always looking very frail and thin and showing a very unchildlike lack of animation. Something stirs them sufficiently to get them from place to place—but never into mischief. Indeed, I have always thought there would be great rejoicing in that family if one of them should commit some childish prank. Once I saw one of them climb a tree and fall out and since then the three usually sit on the porch and play jacks. They often lose the ball because it rolls under a loose board and nestles beneath the steps. I suppose that if one of them had the energy to crawl under the porch, he would find balls enough side by side to start a miniature ten pin alley. However, as their mother is an indulgent parent and keeps a supply of pretty colored bouncers on hand, the three children are never without a game.

Now, I have been quite sure that it could not be any fault of my good neighbor that these children are so lacking in energy. She has fed them milk regularly. The barn yard has been recruited into service. Often I hear a hen cackle, the back door slams, and next a plump figure hastens to the chicken house. Then in a short while an egg-milk is given to the child that seems most puny.

I felt sorry for my neighbor one day last month when I was calling on her. "Johnny, the Elder," as he is called, had just come in from school. He had taken his ball and jacks and was about to play when he asked his mother for a candy.

"No, dear, I'll get your milk for you in a minute," she answered.

"Aw, Mother, please give me a candy," he begged. "You know I ought to have candy 'cause the nurse in school said, today, I was under-nourished."

"Under-nourished!' She said you were under-nourished!"

Oh, my poor neighbor! How indignant and embarrassed she was, and how out of place I felt to be there at that time! She explained to me at great length the quantities of milk she gave her three children, and I could vouch for it and tried to make her feel as comfortable as possible. Finally, she ejaculated, "I'm just going to see that nurse and give her a piece of my mind"!

I never knew what she got in return for a piece of her mind, but I have noticed some queer things lately. Just here is where the cabbage comes in. My neighbor has been getting a great deal of this green along with spinach, celery and lettuce, vegetables I never saw her buy before.

"We've all taken to cabbage," she said to me one day when we met at the provision wagon. "We have cole-slaw or some raw vegetable and a cooked green every night."

"Is that so?" I asked, and "put my thinking cap on", as they used to say. What amazed me most, though, happened yesterday as I looked out of the window. "Johnny, The Elder", was jumping rope!—National Kindergarten Association.

The moonlight lies
  Like a rare pearl's gleam
On the snow-clad fields
  On the frozen stream.

And paints the wall
  Of the great old stair
Through the tall broad window
  A tapestry rare.

Yet saint and sinner
  Lie wrapped in dreams
While the moonbeams tender
  A healing brings.

The dawn light springing
  From the jocund east.
Gilds its pallid visage
  And the night has ceased.

Teddy Discovers An Island.

"Say, Daddy, that looks like land that I see way off there in the distance. I know that the air is especially clear and sometimes things loom up and appear different from what they really are, but that surely does look like there may be either an island or land of some sort way out there on the horizon."

"Well, I guess you are right for once, Son Bear, and that must be Nantucket which we see."

"Are there any people on it? And is it very large? And what do they do? And—and—and—tell me all about it, will you, Daddy Bear?"

"Oh, yes, there are a lot of people on the island, and over to the farther end which we cannot see there is a settlement of very well to do folks who come there every summer. Long before they came, however, there was once living there a very queer old bear whose name was Silas, but he always went by the name of 'Si' or 'Uncle Si'. He had many ways that seemed strange to the other bears of the settlement and did many things that to the others appeared rather out of place. The younger Teddy Bears would often plague him by letting his geese and ducks out of their pens, and then Uncle Si would have a hard time getting them to come back.

"Once they shot some wild ducks and, after skinning them carefully, stuffed them with sawdust or seaweed and set them out in the ocean. Some of the boys went and told Uncle Si that there was a flock of wild ducks close to the shore and he immediately took his bow and arrows and carefully wended his way to the shore line. Getting down behind one of his blinds which he had made, he fired arrow after arrow at the birds. They did not appear to be frightened, nor did they move very much when he hit them. After he had used all of his arrows he decided he would go out for those he had hit.

"Of course all this time the Teddy bears were not in evidence but hiding behind a stone wall. When Uncle Si discovered how he had been fooled and found how many arrows he had lost, he was, quite naturally, not in a very good humor.

"When Uncle Si came for his mail that evening the store folks commenced to ask how many ducks he got that morning. Some of them asked if it were harder to kill sawdust ducks than it was real live ones. One of the younger boys even asked him if he were going to cook the seaweed ducks the same as if they had been real ones. He sputtered a great deal about how mean the boys were, and that in his younger days boys never did such mean tricks to their elders.

"Uncle Si had caught wild geese alive several times and had had fairly good success in raising them. The year in question, he had planned to raise some wild ducks, for he had said at the store that he did not see why it should not be as easy to hatch wild ducks as it was wild geese.

"One evening the latter part of April he chanced to remark that one of his wild ducks was broody and he was going home to put some eggs under her. Unfortunately, or otherwise, he happened to mention, when some of the younger Teddy Bears were present, that the duck had made her nest out by the big oak and he was going to let her set right there.

"That was enough for the Teddy Bears. They watched him put the eggs under the duck and knew that he would not be likely to look at her again until the time for the eggs to hatch, for the duck would come and go as she liked whenever she became hungry or thirsty. One of the boys went home and as soon as it was real dusky he stole over to the oak and quietly withdrew the eggs and slipped in their place two or three handfuls of acorns that he had saved the fall before. The old duck evidently did not know as much as she might, for she continued to set on the acorns as contentedly as if they had been her very own laid eggs.

"After four weeks of impatient waiting the boys once again gathered at the store. Then the questions commenced to come forth and every time Uncle Si appeared they wanted to know how the duck was getting along, how many ducklings he thought he might have, and what day he expected the hatch to come off and all sorts of question that those youthful minds could invent. Well, the morning Uncle Si went down to inspect matters under the oak the bears were watching him from behind the woodpile and were very careful to keep out of his sight. Uncle Si threatened all sorts of things that he would do when he discovered the trick which had been played upon him. But how was he going to find out who did it?

That night when he came for his mail, some one asked if he had had a good hatch and Uncle Si said some very unkind words about boys of the place and what he would do to them, if he ever caught them on his place again. The news spread like wild fire about the acorns which Uncle Si had set under a duck, and many was the taunt he received from the Teddy Bears when he passed along the street.

"Time passed on and the Indians came in to take this particular part of the island. They learned somehow of this trick which the Teddy Bears had played on Uncle Si, and they always referred to the place in connection with the incident. Gradually it became known as the sands where Si-acorns-set, and the white people have called it Siaconsett ever since that day."—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

An Experience With Mr. Wasp.

Eunice came out, broom in hand, ready to sweep the back porch. But being a careful little housemaid, Eunice didn't begin her sweeping before she had looked at the ceiling.

What did she expect to find there? Spiderwebs of course.

Sure enough! Two of them. One hung straight down just like a filmy thread. The other one was a tiny black net, spun right in one corner of the porch ceiling.

Office: 804 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

For our Prison Chaplain to have visited 125 institutions and addressed more than 20,000 prisoners is indeed gratifying, and though there had been no visible results we would feel a solemn duty had been discharged; but when we realize there were 3,700 prisoners who gave outward manifestation of their desire to lay hold on eternal life alone through the merits of the Crucified One, we believe our friends will join in praise and thanksgiving, for had but a single soul responded, the effort would have been justified.

Our friends will also be glad to know that in the execution of plans for a still larger ministry we have been able to extend our work southward Mr. Steffan having addressed the inmates of the Virginia State Penitentiary for the first time on March 18. On that occasion there was present Mr. Langbourne M. To the V. J. Steffan Prison Association:

Gentlemen: Having attended Mr. Steffan's service at the Virginia State Penitentiary in Richmond, Va., yesterday, I desire to say that in my opinion he is one of the most capable and strongest advocates of the cause of the King of Kings I have ever heard. The Holy Spirit is certainly working through him, and may God's hand be always over and His Holy Spirit always with you in your great work in His service.

Yours sincerely,

I wonder what Mr. Spider will say when he comes home and finds his net gone, and his steak too, thought Eunice as she proceeded to shake off the spider-web and the dead fly on the green lawn below.

Once again Eunice examined the porch ceiling. No more spider-webs, but—what was this?

A little hut, made from tan-colored clay with some small, round holes in it. Eunice gave the little hut a whack with the end of the broomstick, and down it came, walls and roof and all. As it struck the porch-floor Eunice heard a buzzing sound from somewhere. Then out flew Mr. Wasp from his private apartment to find out what was the matter. Up into the ceiling he chased, circling wildly around the spot where his home had been. He just couldn't imagine what had happened to it. He knew he had built a snug little nest for himself and his family right on the edge of the porch roof. There they were living in peace and contentment when, without the least bit of warning, an awful blow sent them flying down into the unknown—house, family and all.

Mr. Wasp just kept on buzzing around for a few moments, then he made a bee-line for his family. But no trace could be found of either home or children.

Then he became frantic. He just acted as if he had lost his head. He spun around in a circle, he butted his head against the siding, he buzzed and buzzed until he had used up all the buzz that was in him. Then he suddenly shot off into space like an arrow.

And all this time Eunice had been standing there, wide-eyed and open-mouthed with astonishment. She was thinking very hard, thinking and wondering:

Mr. Wasp must have felt pretty bad, or he wouldn't have acted that way. He had built a snug little nest for himself and his family—one little room for each one of the children. Perhaps it wasn't right to throw his home into the alley—children and all. How would I feel if a great big giant came along with a great big pole as thick as a tree! How would I like to have him give my playhouse a push until it toppled over, and then carry it away and dump it into the ravine! Mr. Wasp didn't know any better than to build his nest on our back porch. He didn't have sense enough to see that houses like his look better on the eaves of the chicken-coop or the wood-shed. Of course Mr. Wasp never stopped to think of these things. I was silly to get mad at him.

If Mr. Wasp should ever build another nest on the back porch, I'll move it just as carefully as I can, so as not to give him such a shock. And I don't know but what I'll let him stay just where he chooses to settle down—front or back porch, as long as he behaves himself and attends to his own business.—Children's Companion.

BOY'S HANDS.

"Sometimes it's only shadows
When mother says it's dirt;
But I know it's only shadows,
'Cause I scrubbed them till they hurt.

"I don't know where they come from,
My father says that he Sometimes used to have them
When he was small like me.

"My mother never has them;
Her hands are always white;
But just 'cause boys are different
To scold me isn't right.

"Sometimes it's only sunburn;
Then dad and mother grin;
But I know it's only sunburn,
'Cause it's in, in, in."

—R. K. Gordon, in the Canadian Forum.

Why Leo Was Called Home.

Leo filled the wood box, and did the few other chores that fell to the share of the second boy in the family; then he hurriedly dressed for school. He did not wait for his brother and sisters that morning, for he wanted a game of ball before nine o'clock. He was in the full enjoyment of his sport when Charles and the others appeared. Charles came directly to him and said:

"Mother wishes you to come home at once."

The ball was in Leo's hands. He stared blankly at his brother.

"Wh—what is the matter?" he stammered.

"Nothing."

"Anybody sick?"

The Church School in The Book of Common Prayer

To Whom It May Concern:

As a Church School teacher I most highly commend the revised Trinity Course, "The Church in the Book of Common Prayer", by Bishop C. M. Beckwith, to all Church School teachers and superintendents.

When I was a child, Mrs. Beckwith herself gave me instruction in the Trinity Course, and I have always considered it a most splendid and thorough foundation work for all subsequent Church School instruction. While the new course is printed in question and answer form, it allows a great deal of latitude to the teacher to adapt the work to children of whatever age are being taught. Not only did I study the course, but as a Church School teacher I have taught it alone and in connection with other courses, and its thoroughness and grasp have always appealed greatly to me.

In Grace Church School, Anniston, Alabama, we believe we have permanently solved the usual vexatious "summer problem" through this course. A great percentage of our Church School teachers are also public school teachers, and in summer we find it very hard to keep an adequate number of teachers who are trained for the work. This summer we have had every teacher above the Primary Department use Grade III, "The Book of Common Prayer", adapting it to her children. When one teacher is absent, therefore, her class can be consolidated with that of another teacher without interruption to the work. The children have been very interested, and we encourage them to ask us any questions that might occur to them, to find the answers for themselves.

If your Church School is using the Christian Nurture Series, then I suggest the use of Bishop Beckwith's course in conjunction particularly with the "Episcopal Grades"—those teaching the Catechism, the Church Year and the Prayer Book and its services. And for summer work, to supplement the Christian Nurture Series, I do not believe a better course could be found for the entire Church School above the Primary Department.

Respectfully,
LOUISA NONNENMACHER.

"No."

"But why does mother want me?"

"I don't know," Charles answered; "she merely gave me that message for you."

The Lee children were trained to obedience. Leo had no thought of doing otherwise than his mother bade him. He dropped the ball, relinquished the game with a sigh, and with a word of explanation to his comrades he was off.

Home was a half-mile away; slowly he traversed the road over which he had sped so lightly a few minutes before. It had never seemed so long. As he drew near the house he saw his mother standing by the big table stirring gingerbread. She looked up with a smile, a kind, cheery smile that had nothing in it to put a boy who was on the verge of crossness still more out of humor.

"Oh, yes," she said gently; "you left your coat on the floor of your room, and I thought it would be better for you to come home and hang it up."

It was said as quietly as if it were a most natural thing to ask him to walk a mile to put his coat in its proper place.

Leo sped upstairs. His room was in perfect order except that the coat was lying just where he had thrown it.

This was not the first offense of a like nature. Oh, no! many were the reprimands he had received for tossing aside his garments and leaving them where they chanced to fall. He had always pleaded, "I didn't think!" or "I forgot!" Then it would slip his mind until he was caught in a similar error. Now he hung his coat in the closet, and then he went slowly downstairs.

"Is that all?" he asked of his mother.

"Yes," she said, pleasantly, "that is all." He turned to go.

"Wait a minute," she called. "Here is a hot ginger-cake for you. It will taste good on your way back."

Leo took the cake gratefully, and thanked his mother. It did taste good, and, moreover, it seemed to dispel the little cloud that had settled upon him. By the time he had reached the schoolhouse he was his happy self again.

Leo is now a man, and, telling me the story, he said:

"That was a good lesson to me. I never again forgot to hang up my coat."

—Emma C. Dowd, in The Household.

Whether or not you follow an annual budget plan with your personal expenses, you doubtless count on certain percentages of your income going to cover certain specific expenses. A percentage should be allotted to the building up of an estate for your dependents. The surest method of immediately establishing an estate is through the medium of insurance.

The facilities of this Corporation are cordially extended to clergymen and their families and to lay-workers and their families in connection with their insurance problems. The policies are issued at net rates, without loading, and the annual refunds which have been declared have made the cost of insurance still lower.

can guess; it is not any of them; it is the baby. Why do we all want to help a dear little baby who tumbles over and can't get up again? I wonder if it isn't because we love it, and don't you think if we loved every one better we would be more anxious to help each other? Let me tell you a story of how a little girl learned to love people.

Betty was an only child so she was badly spoiled by her parents. She did not like little boys and girls and very few people liked her. Her parents gave her almost anything she asked for. She had a beautiful kitten but she would throw it out the window or down the stairs until the poor little kitten would try to hide when it saw her coming.

As Betty grew older, and started to school, she realized there was something lacking in her life. She wanted something but she didn't know what. One morning on her way to school she saw an old lady trying to pick up a basket of apples which had upset. She asked Betty to help her get them and not liking to refuse, she helped gather them up. When they had them all back in the basket the old lady laid her hand lovingly on her head and said, "My, but you are a nice little girl to help an old lady like me". Betty went on her way smiling and wondering what made her feel so happy. That night she patted her kitten and it curled up in her lap, purring softly.

The next day she smiled at an old crippled beggar and gave him a nickel she had intended to buy candy with; and when he said, "God bless you, my dear", she felt strangely happy.

Betty was learning. She soon found that the days she helped some one were happier days than those in which she thought only of herself. Soon she decided to do at least one kind act to help some one each day, and what a happy little girl Betty became.

She found that she loved those whom she helped, and wherever she went she was greeted with a smile. She not only learned to love little boys and girls, but also old women who had to work very hard, the old shoemaker at his little shop on the corner, the janitor at the schoolhouse, the clerks in the store, and the sad-faced young lady who lived across the way.

Now, I believe, if you will try Betty's plan of helping others you will find it much easier to love every one and to be happy.—The Friend.

MADAM SPIDER.

Madam Spider weaves
Underneath the eaves
A pretty little house of silken thread;
Snugly fit in place,
It looks like paper lace
Where across the window it is spread.

With her big bright eyes
Looking very wise,
She sits within the center of her room,
Waiting for a fly
To slowly flutter by,
To that she may catch him in her loom.

She will patiently wait,
Trusting now in fate
To send the dinner she has worked to earn;
I can plainly see
In this for you and me,
Lessons all of us had better learn.

We should never shirk,
But should do our work
Faithful—every day should do our best,
Then with patience wait
Railing not at fate
While we trust our Father for the rest.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doc trinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

ROBERT AMBLER MEADE.

Entered into Eternal Life at Memorial Hospital, Richmond, Virginia, Friday evening, August 10, 1928, ROBERT AMBLER MEADE, beloved husband of Mary Scott Meade and son of the late Sarah Knight Callaway and William W. Meade, all of Haymarket, Va. On Monday "At Even 'ere the Sun was set" with his fellow vestrymen as honorary pallbearers, he was borne by loving hands from his home nearby, to the little church he had loved and served, St. Paul's Episcopal, where the beautiful ritual was read by the Rev. Edwin S. Hinks and the rector, the Rev. Warren A. Seager, at the conclusion of which the flower-draped casket was lowered to its resting place in the church-yard, near loved ones gone on before, with whom he is now reunited. Mr. Meade was of the Clark County branch of this name, being the great-grandson of Colonel Richard Kidder Meade and great-nephew of Bishop Meade.

His life was for the greater part spent in his native town, where he engaged in business, and was closely identified with church and community affairs and where he is now deeply mourned. Trained at his mother's knee when a little boy in a simple faith in Christ his Lord and Saviour, strong in the faith he lived and fell asleep.

"Grant him Eternal Rest, O Lord, and may light perpetual shine upon him."

MRS. LOUISA TAPSCOTT HALL.

Died at her home in Charles Town, Jefferson County, W. Va. on July 13, 1928, MRS. LOUISA TAPSCOTT HALL, nee Tabb, widow of John Hite Hall. The breadth and depth of her beautiful Christian character cannot be expressed in words. An invalid for over seven years, confined to her bed for about four and a half years, her unselfishness, infinite patience, simple faith, and consideration for others, was a benediction to all who came in contact with her. Not only her children and this generation, but the generations to come will rise up and call her blessed.

MRS. FIELDING LEWIS MARSHALL.

MARY NEWTON THOMAS, the widow of Fielding Lewis Marshall, died at her home in Orange, August 4, 1928.

She was the daughter of George Ira and Maria Harper Thomas, and was born at their home in Alexandria, August 9, 1842, where she was married, July 9, 1867.

She was the mother of nine children, and is survived by five daughters and three sons, and by one step-daughter and one stepson, all of whom were present, or personally represented at her funeral, which took place from the Presbyterian Church at Orange, as St. Thomas' Church was undergoing repairs. The rector of St. Thomas, the Rev. Douglas Neff, conducted the services.

It was a coincidence, that in this closing chapter of a life full of loyalty to its rarely blessed beginnings, she should have been borne forth to her last resting place from the church of her fathers. For though an active member of the Episcopal Church since the christening of her first child, she never lost her love for and interest in the Presbyterian Church, in which she was brought up.

Her surviving children are Maria Newton Marshall, Eleanor Warner Taliaferro, Ann Lewis Reid, Walton Harper Marshall, John Newton Marshall, Alice Marshall Nelson, Evelyn Lewis Marshall and James Randolph Marshall; and her stepchildren, F. Lewis Marshall, Jr., and Mrs. Charles R. Nash.

Her early married life was spent at "Ivanhoe", near Delaplane, in Fauquier County, where she was beloved by all with whom she came in contact.

The family moved from this county to Culpeper and thence to Orange, where most of her children were born, and guided by her to the approach of maturity, showing themselves worthy of her loving care.

Death came to her after the gradual decline of a life well spent, which furnishes a high example to all who knew her, leaving with them the blissful assurance of her glorious immortality.

THOMAS ROGER BOGGS.

THOMAS ROGER BOGGS, son of the late Roger W. and Lillian Gouldman Boggs, of King George, Va., was drowned in the Potomac River near Fairview Beach on Friday, June 29, in the twenty-third year of his age. Funeral services were held in St. John's Church, King George, on the following Monday and interment in Trinity Cemetery.

Mr. Boggs had been a communicant of the Church since twelve years of age when he was confirmed in St. George's Church, Fredericksburg. His clean life and noble, manly character, known to all associates, were the outcome of his careful early training. He had been a valued employee of the Miller and Rhoads Company of Richmond for about four years. This had been his only position since leaving school. His death, which came from his heroic response to a cry for help from others who were his companions, was an example of the unselfishness that marked his whole life. He leaves a mother, two brothers and three sisters to mourn their loss.

"If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours in the earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a man, my son."

congregation of devoted friends filled St. Andrew's Church at the burial service held there Thursday, August 9, previous to burial in Ravenna, Ohio. The service was conducted by the Rev. S. S. Marquis, rector of Christ Church, Cranbrook, Mich., assisted by the Rev. John Mockridge, rector of St. James' Church, Philadelphia, and former rector of St. Andrew's, and the Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, Coadjutor Bishop of Ohio.

Mr. Torrance was born in Batavia, Java, Dutch East India, July 29, 1866, the son of Robert Baird Torrance and Sarah Cushing Ladd Torrance. His youth was spent in England, where he was educated at the Charterhouse School, Owen's College, and Victoria University. He obtained early training also at a school in Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany.

He entered the ministry after he had been engaged for several years in business in the East Indies and in this country. He was ordained priest August 6, 1906, at Ravenna, Ohio. For sixteen years he had been rector of the St. Andrew's Church. For the five years previous he had been rector of the St. Phillip's Episcopal Church, Detroit. His principal interest being religious education he had served as chairman of the department of religious education in the Diocese of Michigan for eight years. He also was a member of the board of examining chaplains.

The present Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Michigan, perhaps of larger scope and more perfect organization than any similar unit the country over, is Mr. Torrance's abiding movement. Years ago, in the day of small Sunday-school "Teachers' Institutes", Mr. Torrance had the vision of a scheme of religious education which should rival any plan of secular education in technical excellence. In the crowded tenement district where St. Andrew's has been for years a fortress of the spirit against the materialistic encroachments of a fast developing industrial city. Mr. Torrance has been the head of one of the best vacation schools and dear to hundreds of children and parents of the community who thus made their only contact with religion. Not primarily an organizer, Mr. Torrance was the means of inspiring many successful movements because he was a great Christian soul, original in his thought, yet loyal and loving in his cooperation with his fellows.

Surviving him are his widow, Mrs. Jane Beatty Torrance; a daughter, Beatrice, and a sister, Miss Mabel Torrance, of New York City.

HISTORICAL TRAVELOGUE

St. John's Church, Richmond, Virginia

In the cemetery surrounding St. John's church sleep many of the old settlers of Virginia, but what makes this humble little edifice famous is the fact that here at a convention held on March 20, 1775, Patrick Henry inspired the delegates with words that awakened the world: "Give me liberty or give me death."

In the little old church now may be seen a bronze tanlet placed near the pew from which Patrick Henry arose to make his immortal speech.

There are many ancient tombstones. The oldest is that of Rev. Robert E. Rose, dated 1751. Among the graves is that of Elisabeth Arnold Poe, mother of Edgar Allan Poe.

"THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

1835 DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 1, 1928. No. 35.

Mr. Editor:

When members of the "Catholic" party are charged with teaching Roman doctrines, they often deny it. When confronted with evidence from "Catholic" sermons and writings in proof of the charge, they frequently declare that such Roman views are held only by the extreme members of their party. The following declaration of faith by Anglo-Catholics of England will therefore have vital interest for all Protestant Episcopalians. It is official in character and affords undeniable and unimpeachable evidence of what the Anglo-Catholics are actually teaching. It was issued by the Central Council of Catholic Societies, representing the English Church Union, the Federation of Catholic Priests, the Anglo-Catholic Congress, and the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, and was published in the "English Churchman" for June 14, 1928.

"1. We believe that in the Holy Eucharist the bread and wine becomes the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ by virtue of the prayer of Consecration, and that therefore He Himself is truly present under these outward forms. (Transubstantiation.)

2. We believe that the Body and Blood of our Lord thus truly present are offered to the Father as a sacrifice; that this sacrifice is one with the Sacrifice of the Cross; and that it is the continual commemoration of our Lord's death and Resurrection, and the continual application of His merits. (Sacrifice of Masses.)

3. We believe that our Lord Jesus Christ being therefore truly and personally present in the Consecrated Sacrament is therein to be adored; and that inward and outward acts of adoration are due to Him in the liturgy after the Consecration.

4. We believe also that our Lord is no less present in the Sacrament when reserved, and therefore is therein always to be adored with like acts of adoration."

A comparison of these teachings with Articles XXVIII and XXXI will show plainly enough why the "Catholics" wish to bury the Articles in oblivion.

In their zeal to accomplish this purpose, and thus to clear the way for legally teaching these doctrines to their trustful congregations, some Anglo-Catholics maintain that the questions at issue in the present controversy are "trivial"; are but "theological hair-splitting"; or, as one rector gracefully puts it, are "sheer piffle." If their contention is sound, then the great leaders of the Protestant Revolution were deluded. They cherished the profound conviction, for which many of them died, that a correct conception of the Lord's Supper, based on Holy Scripture, was of vital importance to the Christian life.

We cannot believe, however, that the Anglo-Catholics do in fact consider the issue trivial. All the evidence points to the contrary. Their many organizations have long been engaged in teaching the above doctrines; they present them indefatigably in books, brochures, and leaflets; they hold an annual congress for obvious purposes; they are now raising $500,000 to spend in propaganda for destroying the Protestant doctrines of the Church. Their clergy cynically and habitually violate their ordination vows to teach Roman doctrine, thus causing strife and unhappiness in parishes which formerly were at peace.

In view of these facts and many others which might be cited it is impossible to believe that the Anglo-Catholics consider trivial the issues now before the Church. Their assertions, however, are well designed to lead uninformed churchmen to acquiesce in the plan of abolishing the Articles. —E. E. Sperry.

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes. "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part: ". . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Where you cannot ask God's presence, do not venture your own.

None are more un-Christlike than the unforgiving.

It is not so much where you live
As whether while you live you live
And to the world your highest give.
—Oxenham.

"God's boundless love and arching sky
Above us when we wake or sleep,
Above us when we smile or weep,
Above us when we live or die."

The book to read is not the one that thinks for you, but the one that makes you think.—President McCosh.

If wrinkles must be written on our brows, let them not be written on our hearts—J. A. Garfield.

"For the day of life I ask
Some absorbing, useful task;
And when it is truly done
Tranquil rest at set of sun."

"A saint, when overborne by indwelling sin, ought to comfort himself with the thought that a prisoner of war is not a deserter."

Really come to grips with the facts of Christianity as they are revealed in Christ and you will find that faith can justify itself far more readily than unbelief.—J. S. Worboys.

I saw the lightning's gleaming rod
Reach forth and write upon the sky
The awful autograph of God.
—Joaquin Miller.

There's nobody perfect; that's the believer's bed of straw; it's the hypocrites bed of ease."

The Christian apologist stands no longer on the slippery or shifting ground of a purely historical science. He sees no sense in sham fight. He has done forever with the old debates about Biblical origins and authorships, about the credibility of Judges or credibility of Jonah, as if it were on these matters that his faith were to rest. He would now fairly and frankly advance his Christian experience of God and put it at the disposal of all who will use it.—Raymond Calkins, in "The Eloquence of Christian Experience".

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 1, 1928. No. 35.

FOES WITHIN THE CAMP

This paper is described accurately by its name—The Southern Churchman. It is the mouthpiece and representative of scores of thousands of loving and loyal members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, living or originating in the Southern States. Many of these people for whom and to whom The Southern Churchman speaks every week descend from ancestors who proved devotion to the Church of England by giving blood and land for its defense against Romanism on one hand and Calvinism on the other. Many others have been drawn to the Church by the fidelity to the truth as revealed in Holy Scripture, the simplicity, clarity and directness of doctrines and teachings for which it stands and the dignity and beauty of its forms and rituals. The majority of these people are in what is called, by small atheists seeking dollars and temporary notoriety by the long familiar device of sneering at sacred things and the decencies instinctively respected by clean-strain Americanism, "The Bible Belt". Intended as cheap derision, that appellation really is a compliment as splendid as ever has been earned by any section of any country.

Speaking for the Episcopalians of this "Bible Belt", The Southern Churchman feels impelled by duty to its constituents to record, in their behalf, its strong protest against two recent utterances in publications and by individuals assuming to speak for and to the Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, Vicar of Trinity Church, New York City, inserted in the year book of his parish sneer and denunciation aimed at those who oppose exclusion from the Book of Common Prayer of the Thirty-nine "Articles of Religion". The New York Churchman republishes Dr. Stetson's observations with evident delight.

The Rev. Edmund L. Souder publishes in the "Living Church", of Milwaukee, an ecstatically enthusiastic account of a "Catholic" mission in the Philippines, presumably supported by the Protestant Episcopal Church in America. He tells of the lamp kept burning before the altar in the church, the flowers always heaped about, "Our Lady's Shrine", the Stations of the Cross, celebration of solemn High Mass. He speaks of himself and his co-workers as "Catholics"—Anglican Catholics". He goes out of his way to deride and belittle Protestants and Protestanism. The "almost universal worship of Protestantism is insipid and thin," he remarks. "Protestants," he continues, "have done very little among the natives in the Philippines, for whom this Catholic Mission is established." He refers to "Protestant Episcopalians" in scornful quotation marks. The Rev. Mr. Souder is supposed to be an ordained clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The "Living Church", which prints and illustrates his descriptions and expressions of opinion with obvious approval, is supposed to be published for the Protestant Episcopalians of this country. One of the illustrations represents Bishop Mosher, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America in the Philippine Islands, as conducting service wearing a mitre and with an altar boy behind him holding up a crosier.

The Southern Churchman and the Southern churchmen and churchwomen and the many thousands outside the "Bible Belt" who feel and think with them believe in, love and belong to the Protestant Episcopal Church in America. They have no quarrel with their fellow Christians of the Roman Church or of any Protestant denomination, and seek none. They recognize the right of the Rev. Dr. Stetson to regard the Thirty-nine Articles as nonsensical and out-of-date, of the Rev. Mr. Shipler, of the "New York Churchman" to hold like opinion of the Church liturgy and of the Rev. Mr. Souder to call himself a Catholic and to admire and imitate the forms and methods of the Church of Rome. The object, however, logically and righteously, to persons who hold and publicly proclaim such opinions continuing to claim place and membership in the Protestant Episcopal Church and assuming to speak for it and by its authority and to shape its course.

We Southern Church people are staunch in allegiance and loyalty to the Protestant Episcopal Church because we love and believe in it as it was built and established by the fathers and founders. We are conservative, holding fast to what time and trial have proved to be good, the blood of martyrs and the beautiful sacrifices of saints innumerable, gone before, have consecrated. The radicalism of the Rev. Mr. Shipler, which would modernize, skeletonize, or amputate, our liturgy, and of the Rev. Dr. Stetson, which would take the Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer, and the retrogression of the Rev. Mr. Souder, which demands our return to Rome, are alike abhorrent to us. We have seen our Church rise from the ashes and stand strong and triumphant, doing mighty work for God and mankind, on her old foundations. Our prayers and hopes are that she shall continue so to stand and so to do, unshaken and unimpeded by the restless seekers after notoriety and new things, the shallow, busybody, eager followers after transient fashion, of thought or doctrine, the ultra aesthetes who would make her a thing of ceremony, spectacle and ritual, and the ultra-reformers who would strip her of her beauties of ritual and clothe her in overalls.

An element of our citizenship regards the Constitution of the United States as old-fashioned and needing overhauling and revision; but even this small minority does not suggest that the document be excluded from the law books or that any of us may feel free to ignore it or treat it with contempt because it is one hundred and forty-one years old. The Thirty-nine Articles of religion were accepted and adopted just fourteen years after the Constitution. A number of the men who helped frame the Constitution were devout Episcopalians and helped, also, to adopt the Thirty-nine Articles. Disclaiming intent of discourtesy, I cannot avoid surmise whether the Rev. Dr. Stetson and his supporter and admirer, the "New York Churchman", regard themselves as more progressive thinkers, more profound in logic, gifted with foresight and informed on history, than the builders of the Constitution or the bishops, the clergy, and laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America who adopted the Thirty-nine Articles in General Convention on the twelfth day of September in the year of our Lord 1801. Straying a moment from Church and government affairs, the Order of Ancient Free Masons has ritual, phrase, constitution and methods said to date back to the time of King Solomon. A Mason would object very strongly to a member of the fraternity pretending to hold membership while deriding and denouncing ritual, phrase and methods as old style, out-of-date and non-progressive. Surely we who have inherited or taken membership in this Church of ours have equal right to ask that those who find it not in accordance with their taste and opinion get out of it, honorably and frankly.

A suggestion of the humerous is brought in by the reflection that every pretext presented by Dr. Stetson for removal of the Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer may be presented with equal force for removal of his own Trinity Church from Broadway, facing Wall Street. The church building is old, as age is counted in New York. We have in the South Episcopal churches in which services were conducted three centuries ago; but Trinity is ninety years old. Its architecture is not modern. Its steeple is unnecessary. Steeples were useful in old days to guide travelers over lonely moors and wide wastes to churches and town. Now they are not required. The church and its graveyard obstruct the traffic of a very busy street. Trinity is inconveniently located for its congregation. Its claims to existence are age and associations. In the estimation of the Rev. Dr. Stetson and the Rev. Mr. Shipler age and association give abundant reason for death and destruction. The church site could be sold for an immense sum with which many new and nice and shiny combinations of church, assembly hall, social hall and movie theatre could be built in many nice and shiny and new communities, managed by nice and shiny and new Reverend Mr. Shiplers. Why, then, leave it as it is and where it is? Surely sentimental considerations and regard for the ancient and venerable are unworthy of progressive New Yorkers and should be left for us old fashioned, benighted, besotted, fundamentalist Protestant Episcopalians of the "Bible Belt"!

We Southern churchmen and churchwomen and our allies and sympathizers elsewhere on the continent are content with our Church as it is. It looks to us to be doing very splendid and beautiful work and to be going forward continually in usefulness and growth. We are content to be the custodians of its magnificent traditions and to march under its banners in the fight against sin and for the salvation of human souls. Those who despise the traditions and find the old landmarks irksome and distasteful may discover congenial conditions elsewhere. Those who crave to crawl back toward the Church of Rome, renegades from their own sworn allegiance, despised by Rome as heretics and by Protestants as deserters, may crawl and glory in their crawling. We are not likely to lament in loss of such. We stand staunch and true to the Protestant Episcopal Church, as it is, as it has been, as it has come down to us. We hope to leave it for those who shall come after us; and we continue to voice our protests against those pretending to remain in it or of it while striving to maim and disfigure it or treacherously betray it to its enemies.

Alfred B. Williams.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade—

From Bishop Wilson—Morning.

ACCEPT of our thanks, O Thou giver of all good, for having preserved us through another night, and brought us to the light of another day. Continue this, Thy guardian care to us, O Gracious God, until the night of death is past, when we beseech Thee to raise us up to everlasting life. We gratefully acknowledge our dependence upon Thee for all the necessaries, conveniences, and comforts of this life, and for everlasting happiness hereafter. We give Thee thanks for the everlasting light of Thy Gospel, and the help of Thy grace, and for the promise Thou hast made of pardone and forgiveness through Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our sincere repentance and amendment. Give us, we beseech Thee, such a sense of these and all Thy other mercies, as may make us truly thankful to Thee for them. Give us grace, O God, ever to walk in Thy sight, making a conscience of all our ways, and fearing to offend Thee, so that we may never fall into those sins of which we have already repented. Enable us to resist and overcome the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil; to follow the motions of Thy good spirit, to be serious and holy in our lives, true and just in all our dealings, watchful over our thoughts, words, and actions, diligent in our business, and temperate in all things.

Give us grace to improve all the talents committed to our trust; and may no worldly business, no worldly pleasures, divert us from the concerns of the world to come. May Thy blessing be upon our person, upon our labors, and upon all that belongs to us, and may we never undertake any work that we dare not beg of Thee to prosper. O Heavenly Master, bless us, we pray Thee, with good and faithful servants; and grant that we may perform all the duties of Christian rulers; that we may have a tender care for the welfare, both of their bodies and souls, and be examples to them of sobriety, justice and piety, so that we may have an household fearing God; and may Thy blessing rest upon them, and upon all our affairs committed to their trust.

And, O God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for His sake bless our children. Grant them healthful bodies, understanding souls, and sanctified hearts. Keep them from all dangers and sad accidents. Let Thy grace preserve them from the temptations of an evil world, and may we never be wanting in any part of our duty towards them. Be Thou, O Father, their Guide and Portion in this world and in that which is to come. Pour down, also, bountiful Lord, Thy blessings upon all our relations, friends and neighbors. May they all be partakers of Thy grace in this world, and inheritors of everlasting glory hereafter. And hear us, gracious God, while we further pray in the name and perfect words of our blessed Lord, for ourselves, our friends, and all mankind: Our Father, who art in heaven, etc.

CLEAN HANDS.

Once in my childhood days long gone and dead,
I watched a supper table being spread
By busy hands; and eagerly I said—
Wishing to help—"Please, may I bring the bread?"
Gently, reprovingly, a kind voice said,
"Are your hands clean?"
Oft, when I see the multitude unfed,
And, waiting, hungry for the living bread,
My heart and hands are eager to be sped
To bring the manna that they may be fed.
But One Voice says, e'en as a voice once said,
"Are your hands clean?"
I only bow my head.

THE REAL ISSUE

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D.

IN a former article (June 9) we have seen how Dr. Charles, in his book, "Divorce and Nullity", "proved that the only way to get rid of the sanctity and permanence of Christian marriage is to get rid of the veracity and genuineness of the New Testament witness to Christ's teaching. Having succeeded to his own satisfaction in his main attack on St. Mark's testimony, he has no difficulty in bowling over successively that of St. Paul and St. Luke. Meanwhile, he is blind to the fact that St. Matthew, whom he hails as the only true witness, is equally clear in his statement that the excepted "fornication" is not adultery, and that marriage of or to a person divorced is adultery.

1. The Real Issue—"Companionate Marriage".

This method of Dr. Charles is so easy. With the witness of St. Mark "proved" to me "mutilated, distorted, untrustworthy, unhistorical, a human fiction, and false" (passim), the central fortress is taken, and victory is complete. So, "the whole problem of divorce", under consideration by the Joint Commission of 1925, is simplified for them. It is no longer the interpretation of an apparently, but not really, obscure "exception" to the Seventh Commandment that is at stake, but acceptance or rejection of the received text of "the entire New Testament" on marriage, as it has stood the attacks of unbelievers and critics for eighteen centuries.

It is well that the challenge should be made thus openly, and that, not only the great Council of our own Church, but "all who believe and call themselves Christians" should understand the real issue. They must either choose the "Everlasting Gospel", the only Gospel that we have, with its unchanging morality, as it has been held and handed on in the Church of all the ages, bringing peace and joy, and hope, and life itself to every generation of believers, and the essential foundation of family and home and nation, or they must discard this Gospel as a shadowy "ideal", a bundle of uncertainties and inconsistencies, and as the teacher of a "new morality". In brief, the union of man and wife is either "the profound and matchless oneness of Christian marriage", as Gladstone expressed it, and as still taught in every Anglican Prayer Book, as well as in our own; or it is in logical effect "companionate marriage". That is, it is only a contract depending on an "if", subject to the whim or fancy of one or other of the parties, and that, by the easiest possible method of a single act of passion, or even only pretense of it, and an appeal to a civil court.

2. "Conditions" of Divorce Are Not "Causes".

One other issue needs to be made clear to the Church and the Convention alike. In the resolution under which the Joint Commission was appointed it is specified that the purpose is "to study the whole problem of divorce, its conditions and causes". If by this definition is meant that conditions and causes comprise "the whole problem", it is very important to understand that, while conditions may influence for good or evil the growth of the disease, in themselves they are not causes. Every age, even every generation in this fast-living age, has its own conditions.

Israel, a little nation of believers amidst a whole world of pagans, had its own peculiar conditions. Athens and Rome had theirs. The breaking up of the Roman Empire, the days of feudalism, the Renaissance, the sixteenth century, all had conditions of their own. Ours are different, that is all. They may be dangers to avoid or overcome, but they are not causes. When we have exhausted the whole list of modern conditions, social and economic—the effects of war, excessive wealth or poverty, idle rich or crowded poor, nerve-racking business or feverish pursuit of pleasure, new inventions, the bicycle and auto, Friday evening dances and week-end parties—we have not reached a single cause. The root of the disease is not there, and there is danger of wasting time and thought on that aspect of the problem.

The real causes of divorce and its rapid increase today lie deeper than any or all of these ever changing conditions. Conditions may be less or more favorable to religion and morality as the generations come and go. With similar conditions to ours all about Him—worldliness, paganism or semi-paganism, wealth or poverty, in that "evil and adulterous generation", the Lord Jesus, like a wise physician, distinguishes clearly between surface conditions and causes. He singles out the quality of each human heart as the prime cause and source of sin. "Out of the heart," He says, "proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications" (Matt. 15:19).

3. The Only Cure.

It follows, therefore, that the only real cure for this and every other form of sin must be sought, not in external conditions, but in the power and grace that can only be found in Christ and in obedience to His commands. No matter what improvement we may effect in conditions, the cuases will continue. It follows also that if the Church has been untrue to her trust, one chief and prolific cause of this appalling disease, this cancer that is eating out the very life of family and home in America, is to be found in her failure to teach and preach, in pulpit and canon, in school and home, the truth as taught by Him, and clearly expressed in her office for "The Solemnization of Holy Matrimony", where we find no "except" whatsoever, nor any uncertain voice.

On the contrary, so far as this American Church failed to do this, she has been preaching and teaching by her canon for the last sixty years to most willing ears most effectively, that, in despite of her warnings against entering this holy estate "unadvisedly or lightly", nevertheless, her children need not be so very careful after all. For there is one simple and easy way she declares, by which she will, in certain circumstances, permit a second marriage, and a third, or even a fourth, if the first should prove a failure or a disappointment.

Nor is this interpretation of her canon mere conjecture or possibility. As every parish priest of experience, and every intelligent layman or laywoman, who has knowledge of what young people are talking about today, knows full well, this kind of teaching by the canon, evasive and conditional as it is, is discussed freely among them and acted upon.

4. The Fatal Harvest.

And with what result? Why wonder that our forty-eight civil legislatures with complete logic have added to the canon's one cause (and that the easiest), fifty other causes, many of them, in the eyes of both men and God, of greater weight than this sin of passion. Why wonder also that we see this giant nation in earthly wealth and power, with its "head of fine gold", but its "feet of iron and clay"; its vast multitude of broken homes (nearly two hundred thousand every year), and its fatherless or motherless children, or else with three or four "fathers" or "mothers", depived of that home influence and Christian training which form the only possible basis of enduring civilization?

Our latest official report (for 1926) shows one divorce to every six and a fraction marriages in the United States, while our neighbor, Canada, with Christ's law in the Church, and a very few causes for divorce in the state, had only one divorce to every one hundred and twenty-one marriages! In view of such conditions bad laws both in Church and State, we may well ask with something akin to despair, "What shall the end be for our children, and our children's children?"

Here is what is called the sure test of pragmatism, as taught by Himself, "By their fruits ye shall know them". It has been truly said that both "The Church and the world today are face to face, not so much with a question of Scriptural exegesis, as with a condition so horrible that it must be dealt with by heroic measures".

Our Lord did not forbid separation for urgent cause. But He did demand that, no matter what trials or wrongs have been endured before separation, there shall be no remarriage while the guilty partner lives. In His loving severity and mercy, He knew that such an allowance even to the most innocent sufferer would only open the floodgates for infinitely greater unhappiness to countless multitudes.

Sympathy with the sufferer every Christian feels and approves. Sympathy even with the guilty sufferer is a virtue, if there are signs of repentance. But sympathy must never be allowed to become a maudlin sentiment. "The sentimentalist," writes Dean Inge, "is kind only to be cruel, and unwittingly promotes precisely the results he most deprecates."

The crucial question to ask ourselves is, "Have we any right to allow our sympathy to go beyond its proper bounds of heart and affection, where alone it belongs"? One Apostle bids us "speak the truth in love". Another bids us "love in truth". For untruth can never be love. He who spake those stern and unmistakable words, that remarriage after divorce is adultery, was not only infinitely wise, but also infinitely loving. To claim, then, that any law of the Church that only obeys His "commandment" is cruel, is to condemn Him as cruel. There is no escape from this dilemma.

*Note.—There has been much said recently about our Lord having only held up an "ideal" of marriage, a mere counsel of perfection, and that He never "legislated on divorce or anything else". Such writers seem to forget that the supreme test of true religion, in addition to keeping the Ten Commandments, as summed up in the duty to God and our neighbor, is "If ye love Me keep My commandments". Have they also forgotten that He gave to His Church in the most authoritative manner the keys of His Kingdom, to open or close, to bind or loose. If all this is only "idealism", then why have any laws at all, civil or ecclesiastical? Why not have an ideal of love, and honesty, and truthfulness, and dispense with the Sixth and Eighth, and Ninth Commandments, as well as the Seventh?

IF WE WOULD WIN OUR PUPILS FOR CHRIST

Six Factors That Enter Into all Personal Work in the Sunday School—

By Lotta B. White

IT IS unnecessary to discuss all the details of the work of winning pupils for Christ entrusted to the teacher, for the same methods could not successfully be used in all classes, but the general principles are the same, and, for better analyzing, have been divided into six subheads: Personality, Partnership, Prayer, Purpose, Perseverance, Power.

Personality. I will eliminate all work of the parents in the home, of the teacher in the day school, and speak only of the work of the teacher in the Sabbath School. The greatest earthly factor in winning the pupil for Christ is the life and conduct of the teacher. It does not matter so much what we say as what we are. What we say is readily forgotten but what we do and are remains and will have its effect upon the life and decisions of every pupil.

Here is a little example that came to me the other day, of an act of a teacher and the immediate results. A young girl said to an older person, "Mrs. A. is my Sunday-school teacher, but I do not intend going to her class any more. I was over town and saw her going into the picture show and there is a vile picture being shown." One act, thoughtless perhaps, lost a pupil for that teacher and perhaps a soul for Christ, and it is just as well that that girl remains away fro mthat class, for her faith in her teachers' life has been destroyed. I know that teacher and believe that she has the interest of the girls at heart and prays for them and wants them to see them saved and active in the Lord's work, but unless our prayers and work are backed up by a daily Christian conduct—not a Sunday conduct, but a daily conduct—our teaching will not accomplish the good we desire.

Partnership. "We are God's fellow-workers." The sense of not being alone, of not doing our work in our own strength, but in His power, in His strength, with His approval, under His command, submitting to His guidance, allowing Him to share the responsibility; just as a number of persons in business together jointly share the responsibility and rest upon each others' judgment. The work is the Lord's, and He has called us to assist Him in the doing of it. He has gone away and has entrusted the work to us, but He is still the partner with every worker, so we are "fellow-workers together with God". When we realize this it will give to all our work a different significance.

Prayer. Perhaps you think prayer is the first and foremost factor in the work of winning the pupil to Christ, but unless you recognize the need of pure, upright daily living, in every relationship in life, and God as your partner in all your work, you cannot pray God's blessing down upon your work. Yes, you can say prayers over any work and at the same time be guilty of conduct that cannot meet with His approval. The prayer that brings the answer must first meet God's requirements and the very first requirement that God asks is that the vessel into which He will pour His blessing be a clean vessel. He can use a weak vessel or a broken vessel or a small vessel, but He will not use an unclean vessel.

Purpose. I think we all understand how having a purpose makes us strong to labor in the direction of that purpose. You might call it an aim or a goal, but we all have a purpose in our daily work, unless life has become so monotonous that we simply drift on in an aimless fashion, worse than wasting the time the Creator has given to us to fulfill His purpose in our living. There should be a definite purpose in the teaching of every lesson, and all these aims or purposes should revolve around or center in the great purpose of saving the soul of the pupil—causing him to see his sin, his utter helplessness to save himself, the willingness of the Saviour to take his sin. Bringing the pupil into touch with Jesus should include confession of personal sin, acceptance of Christ as the sin bearer, public confession of sin, taking of the vows of the church, and in his strength living in obedience to those vows.

Perseverance. Perseverance is simply the gift of continuance. Many a teacher never attains results because he does not persevere. Teaching is not something to be entered into and dropped with every little discouragement. Do you remember the reply of Nehemiah when he was building the wall and was urged to leave his work? "Why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down?" If God has called you to teach His Word you can only leave the work when He commands and not when you choose.

Power. It is hard to define power, but it is the "promise of the Father" given when we fulfill His will and desire. His coming into hearts does not depend upon wealth, social position, management, or machinery, but is wholly from God to prepared hearts and lives. This power is not noisy, demonstrative like an earthquake, or the ocean's roar, or the mighty thunder, but while it is very intense it is yet very quiet in its working. Elijah had to learn the lesson that the power of God was not in the earthquake, not in the wind, not in the fire, but a sound of gentle stillness, or, as the Authorized Version has it, "a still small voice".

We shall not win souls for the Master without the pure life, without being in partnership with Him, without being in vital touch with God through Jesus Christ's intercession, without purpose in our work and also perseverance, and yet none of these or all of these together is the power God has promised. "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you . . . And when He is come, . . . He shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you." "He shall glorify me." The Holy Spirit power for service is for every one who will pay the price. Are you willing?

"He will fill your heart today to overflowing,
With the Holy Ghost and power."

BENEDICTUS DOMINUS.

Blessed be the Lord God, . . . . who only doeth wondrous things (Psa. 62:18).

We have a God who delights in the impossible, who challenges the meanest of His followers to attempt that which no man ever has attempted, and to succeed. We have a God who, typified in the Old Testament by Elijah his servant, pours out the water on the burnt sacrifice, and does it a second time, and a third time, in order to make it impossible for himself to answer by fire—and then does it! It was William Booth of the Salvation Army who said, "God loves with a great love the man whose heart is bursting with a desire to accomplish the impossible for Christ."—Samuel M. Zwemer.

LAUDATE DOMINUM.

Praise ye the Lord, Praise God in His sanctuary; praise Him in the firmament of His power.

Praise Him for His mighty acts; praise Him according to His excellent greatness.

Praise Him with the sound of the trumpet; praise Him with the psaltery and harp.

Praise Him with the timbrel and dance; praise Him with stringed instruments and organs.

Praise Him upon the loud cymbals; praise Him upon the high sounding cymbals.

Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord.—Psalms.

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE

(Prepared by the Commission on the Church and Social Service, of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, for use on Labor Sunday, September 2, 1928.)

DREAMS of a better social order can no longer be dismissed as the impracticable objectives of sentimentalists. Science appears upon the scene as the handmaid of religion. For science has already accomplished the impossible. By its knowledge of law it has subdued the natural order to the will of man. Man flies, he speaks through space, he draws electric power from the sky. By the aid of science we now do those things which previous generations put down as the foolish dreams of impractical men. There is every reason to believe that science can now adopt social ideals as specifications of a great task to be accomplished for humanity and proceed by the scientific method to assist in evolving a new industrial order which shall be increasingly characterized by righteousness and peace.

A score of years ago the churches of this country expressed the ideals of religion in their bearing on social and industrial relations. The abolition of child labor; protective regulations for women in industry; the abatement and prevention of poverty; the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery and occupational diseases and the hardship of enforced unemployment; suitable provision for old age; the right of employees and employers alike to organize; adequate means of arbitration and conciliation in indsutrial disputes; the gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point; a living wage as a minimum in every industry and the highest wage that each industry can afford; a new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property; and the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised—these are the industrial ideals for which the churches stand.

Certain phases of the industrial problem press for immediate attention. The past year has seen a serious condition of unemployment. The situation has been not less but more challenging because of a condition of prosperity for many while a very large number of men were out of work. The Department of Labor has estimated that there were nearly two million fewer persons employed in January of this year year than in January, 1925. Since the so-called normal unemployment is not less than one million, this government estimate means that at least three million workers must have been unemployed during the past winter. Such a condition is economically unsound and intolerable from the point of view of Christian brotherhood. Let the forces of religion vigorously renew their efforts so to inspire our technicians, and so to impress upon industrial leaders and when necessary upon government the demand for solutions for unemployment, that wise and effective measures may be worked out to remove this evil from our economic life.

The coincidence of unemployment and the rapidly advancing productive power of the nation due to the increased use of machinery, new power resources, scientific management, and the growing efficiency of labor suggest the possibility of a further shortening of hours and of a five-day-week in certain industries. Churches and social agencies must be prepared to do their part in providing for the increasing leisure time for all as hours of work are shortened. We have learned to view with confidence the ability of the workers, if opportunities are provided, to make as good use of their leisure time as any other social group.

It is of basic importance in the approach, not only to these problems of hours and unemployment, but to all matters which touch intimately the lives of the workers, that the right of collective bargaining shall be recognized as fundamental. Representation of all the people concerned in a common undertaking, which is the American principle of government, is the only sound and scientific method of adjusting labor relations and of working out permanent solutions of industrial problems. We view with satisfaction the forward-looking offers of the American Federation of Labor and other unions to cooperate with management in an effort to eliminate waste from industry, to increase production and to promote efficiency in the service of the public. An engineering approach to industrial problems by the labor unions in practical cooperation with management holds a significant promise of orderly and constructive progress.

It must not be forgotten that the churches are also employers of labor and that as such they are under the same moral obligations as other employers to operate on Christian principles in their relations with those whom they employ. Indeed, they are under greater obligations because of the position they assume as teachers of ethics and religion. The churches must ask themselves not only whether the salaries of ministers, missionaries and church workers are fixed on a brotherly basis, but also whether, in the business enterprises of their boards and publication agencies, conditions of employment, wages, hours and control are in accord with an enlightened Christian conscience. Some labor leaders have not been interested in the liberal pronouncements of the churches because of evasions by the churches themselves of the practical issues involved. A prominent church official has said: "I am about ready to ask my communion either to practice some of its liberal pronouncements or to repeal them."

We, therefore, urge both the religious and secular forces of the nation to renew their faith in the social ideals of the churches as practicable objectives for American life. We suggest to all concerned in industry that they approach the solution of labor problems in a more scientific and cooperative spirit, assured of the possibility of hitherto unattainable social progress. We call upon capital, labor and the public to move forward with good will, courage and intelligence into a new and better day.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. H. B. Gill, of Eureka Springs, Ark.:

"Do as occasion serve thee, for God is with thee" (1 Sam. 10:7).

THE LAYMAN.

By Edgar A. Guest.

Leave it to the ministers, and soon the church will die.
Leave it to the women-folk—the young will pass it by.
For the church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob,
And the church that is to prosper needs the layman on the job.

Now a layman has his business, and a layman has his joys,
But he also has the training of his little girls and boys;
And I wonder how he'd like if it there were no churches here,
And he had to raise his children in a godless atmosphere?

It's the church's special function to uphold the finer things,
To teach that way of living from which all that's noble springs;
But the minister can't do it, single-handed and alone,
For the laymen of the country are the church's cornerstone.

When you see a church that's empty, though its doors are opened wide,
It is not the church that's dying, it's the laymen who have died;
For it's not by song or sermon that the church's work is done,
It's the laymen of the country who for God must carry on.

POINTERS.

In every business concern there is constant warfare between the Head and the Overhead.

A happy family (home or office) is usually the result of a lot of quiet work on the part of some one member.

Ideas are funny little things. They do not work unless you do.

Remember that two-thirds of promotion consists of motion. All things come quicker to the man who meets them at least half way.

A real man, after climbing to the top, doesn't forget those who held the ladder for him.—C. W. Rowley, Toronto.

THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may so faithfully serve Thee in this life, that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE petition, "that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises by such faithful service, is suggested by the first verse of the Epistle (Gal. 3:16): "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made." A steadfast belief in these promises and in the faithfulness and power of Him who has made them, is the main source of a Christian's happiness in this life. One of the earliest lessons to me in boyhood was, "What is required of persons to be baptized? . . . . Faith, whereby they steadfastly believe the promises of God made to them in that sacrament." Belief is essential to salvation; a steadfast belief is needed, if we would pass happily along the way to the Celestial City, like a Hopeful, or a Faithful, or old Honest, and not like a Mr. Despondency, or his daughter, Much-afraid.

The conditions set forth in our collect for faithful service must be borne in mind for the attainment of the promises. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead," says St. James (2:17), and upon the abundance of such works, and faithful service, largely depends the happiness we may have in Christ's Church militant. The attainment of the promises of God is indeed of infinite value to the lost sinner; but the enjoyment of such promises now in this finite portion of our eternal life is well worth seeking, not only for one's own comfort and happiness, but for the glory of Him who has given the promises, whose words are pledged for them, and who bids us rejoice in them, and assures us of grace abounding to enable us to do so, if we will but seek it, aright.

The Epistle for the Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity is Gal. 3:16-22, and begins with promises made to Abraham and his seed, which is Christ.

This chapter has some obscurity; but its general tenor is plain, to correct that leaning on the law of salvation, to which Judaic influences were leading the Galatian Christians. The tendency about us now is in an opposite direction; to "continue in sin that grace may abound" (Rom. 6:7), or at least to under-estimate and minimize sin; to think less of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. It is by careful attention to the law that through grace sin becomes exceeding sinful (Rom. 7:13); and so the law becomes our "schoolmaster" to bring us to Christ (Gal. 3:24).

The promises of this Epistle to Abraham and his seed have been fulfilled in the first Advent of Christ. Let us consider the promises yet to be fulfilled in the second Advent.

The promise of His return was given by the "two men in white apparel", after He had been "taken up and the cloud received Him out of their sight" (Acts 1:9), "at Bethany" (Luke 24:50). Another promise of His coming was given by Himself in the upper chamber in Jerusalem after the Passover feast and first Eucharist; "I will come again and receive you unto Myself, That where I am there ye may be also" (John 14:3).

Is this promised coming the same as that given by the "two men in white apparel", at Bethany, or is it the one foretold by Paul in 1 Thess. 4:16, "when the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first"? which coming would seem to be that foretold by St. John (Rev. 20), where, Satan being bound, the blessed dead are raised, and "reign with Christ a thousand years" (v. 4). We have five promises of His return (taking them in the order of time): 1. To Peter, James, John and Andrew, as He sat on the Mount of Olives, having finally left the temple and His work in Jerusalem; His coming "to judge the world, and the peoples with His truth" (Ps. 96:13). 2. To the eleven in the Upper Room after supper to comfort them for His departure. 3. To the same eleven after His Ascension, by the two men in white apparel. 4. By the Holy Spirit through St. Paul, in 1 Thess. 4. 5. By the Holy Spirit through St. John, in Rev. 20, where a first resurrection of the blessed dead is declared, and then the general resurrection and the judgment, when the dead, small and great, shall stand before God, and the books shall be opened, and the sea, and death, and hell shall give up the dead, and the unsaved shall meet the second death.

Among these "small and great", who are to stand before God for judgment, will the blessed dead appear, who have part in the first resurrection?

We deal with mysteries here, but I'd fain think not, and that the "all nations" of Matt. 25:32, who are to be separated from one another, "as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats", do not include "them which sleep in Jesus", whom "God will bring with Him (Jesus)" of 1 Thess. 4:14. That perfect peace with God, which belongs to the Redeemed, and the robe of Christ's righteousness, in which they shine, seem inconsistent with that scene of final judgment, except they appear as attendants on Him, and witnesses of His mercy, and judgment, and justice.

The Gospel for the Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity is Luke 10:23-37, and contains the parable of the Good Samaritan.

This Gospel and, indeed, the whole chapter (Luke 10) draws our attention to "Lost Opportunities", the "might have beens".

The main force and power of the story are summed up in the last words: "Go, and do thou likewise." Jesus tells this lawyer, this Jew, this fellow of the Levite and priest, this despiser of Gentiles, especially of Samaritans, to act the Samaritan. What did the lawyer think of this advice, and how did it influence his life? How interesting to know what became of him! Luke says he was tempting Him (Jesus) with the question, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life"? tempting Jesus, trying or testing Him, and hence we may suppose the lawyer thought himself safe, and an heir of eternal life, fulfilling his duty to God and to his neighbor, to the God of Israel, and to his fellow-Israelites. When Jesus says to him: "This do, and thou shalt live," He seems satisfied as to God, but to have some qualms as to the rest of the law, duty to his neighbor, and he asks a question often asked by the Christian who wishes to know how wide a range must his benevolence have. Geographically in those days the range was far narrower than now, when steam and electricity has brought continents and peoples so much closer together. We may be good Samaritans to sufferers in almost any part of the world, and hospitals nearly all over the earth will make good use of any fund we have for charity; but distance in heart that separated the priest and Levite from the Samaritan was not so much greater than that which still exists between classes and races now. That it is less we owe to Christ and His teaching; but enough remains to hinder much the full performance of our Lord's command, "Go and do thou likewise", I should be glad to think that this wounded, half-dead man on the wayside was not a Jew; for to do this despised people justice, 'tis said they are kinder to their poor than any other people; that a beggar-Jew is unknown. The priest may have noted him as a Gentile, and the Levite "looked on him", perhaps to be sure that he was not a Jew. But if the sufferer were a Jew, and were so neglected by his own countrymen, and cared for by a hated Samaritan, it adds force to the lesson taught. Jesus is not satisfied simply to answer the lawyer's question; for He not only tells him to whom he is to be neighbor, but also tells him his duty as neighbor; and as we are told to go and do likewise, it were well to note carefully how the Good Samaritan treats this unfortunate fellow-creature. The details of his care are interesting; "he bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and took him to an inn and took care of him". We know not how pressing was the business of this good man that day on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho; but we may presume he had business, for few traveled for pleasure in those days, especially on this road which was much infested by thieves; but busy or not he takes time to give personal attention to this sufferer; e. g., ride on to the inn and leave money and instructions there to have the wounded man attended to. He may have been on some errand of importance that would justify such a charity; but he "had compassion on him", and would not leave him so. Observe this word of Jesus. The feeling that makes one active in personal service to the afflicted is much nearer akin, is much nearer to the Spirit of Christ than that which inspires many Christians to give largely of their money to hospitals. I by no means wish to belittle such gifts of the rich, which have so blessed the world with benevolent institutions. Much is given, I know, to be seen of men; yet many such gifts show the spirit of Christ in the giver, or at least that he would fain do something for those that Jesus came to save. But the man who gives only in this way loses a large part of the blessing of giving. To realize that the giver must go about doing good as Jesus did, come face-to-face with poverty and suffering, he moved by it and relieve as he may. Then he will realize the truth so sweetly said by Portia:

"The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blessed;
It blesses him that gives, and him that takes;
'Tis mightiest in the Mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
It is an attribute of God Himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice. . . . ."

Yes, if we follow Jesus' command, and go, and do likewise, we shall realize the double blessing which no doubt that Good Samaritan had the next morning, when he told the host: "Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more when I come again I will repay thee."

WHY A CHRISTIAN CANNOT BE AN EVOLUTIONIST

By the Reverend James M. Gray, D. D.

President of The Moody Bible Institute.

II.

1. A Christian must believe in the Scriptures.—I do not say he must believe the Scriptures, but he must at least believe in the Scriptures. The distinction between these two phrases will appear later. Personally, I believe the Scriptures. That is to say, I believe every record they contain is absolutely true or credible as a record. But that position is not necessary to the present argument. For the present argument it is only necessary to believe that the Scriptures are the source or foundation of the Christian faith. Paul believed and taught that. He said, "I delivered unto you how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures". "He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." The Scriptures were Paul's authority for what he said, the basis for the faith he delivered, that he taught to others. Hence, in Paul's mind, the Scriptures must have been divinely given, or, to express it in another way, the Bible must have been a revelation from God.

But if the Bible be a revelation from God, then it must have been an intervention in the otherwise continuous development of things. It must have been an intervention in the natural processes of thought, a gap, a break in that continuity so vital to the evolutionary hypothesis.

As already premised, one need not discuss the nature or extent of inspiration in order to establish this. One may hold any theory of inspiration that he pleases, so far as his argument is concerned. Nor is it a question of the interpretation of any particular passage or book of the Bible. One may be a Calvinist or an Arminian, a premillenarian or post-millenarian, it matters not. And further still, it is not even a question of a longer or a "Shorter Bible". Professor Kent's Bible will answer in this case. It is simply the question of a Bible. Have we a Bible? If any revelation of the kind longer or shorter, verbally or otherwise inspired, has come from God, then the man who believes that cannot be an evolutionist. Why? Because what thus came into being as a revelation from God was something that had not existed before. The Bible in other words, was neither an outgrowth or a development of what preceded it. It broke into the continuity of things, and in doing that it thrust the theory of Evoluion into the discard.

2. A Christian must believe in Christ. And if the expression may be forgiven. He may not be any kind of a Christ that men may conceive or imagine in whom he must believe. No fictitious Christ, no ideal Christ, but the Christ of whom Paul speaks. "I delivered unto you * * * how that Christ died for our sins * * *. And that He was buried and that He rose again the third day. * * * And that He was seen * * *." Here is a real historic being of whom certain marvelous facts are recorded.

Personally, I believe that Christ is God. "Very God of Very God," as the Nicene Creed says, but that is not the question here. For the sake of the argument, we might momentarily waive the question of Christ's Godhead.

Personally, I believe that He died as a substitute for a guilty race, a vicarious sacrifice to divine justice, but that is not the question here. For the sake of the argument we might accept any lower view of the atonement. We might think of His dying only as an example or a martyr, if you please.

Personally, I believe that Christ arose from the dead in the body which was placed in the tomb, but that is not the question here. For the sake of the argument, one might almost be willing to speak of a "spiritual resurrection", manifest contradiction though it be.

All these great and fundamental questions might be waived or set aside, and for the moment we might speak of Christ only as a new and perfect type of the spiritual man. A man who spake as never man spake. A man who died as never man died. A man who loved as never man loved. A man who lived as never man lived. A man who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. A man of innocence not only, but a holy man, positively holy. We might limit our understanding or our appreciation of Christ to these things, and then we might raise the question, Whence came He? "What think ye of Christ?" How shall we explain such a man? I say nothing about His virgin birth just now. I simply ask the question, How shall we account for Christ? and I place the responsibility for an answer where it belongs.

Recently, I read a sermon on this subject by a Dr. Williamson of Pennsylvania, who quoted a Darwinian as saying that Jesus was simply the outflowering of a race that had been developing for millions of years. Then Dr. Williamson asked, "If that be true, why was there only one Christ and not a multitude of Christs at the outflowering of the race? And moreover, how did Christ happen to come at a time when, as historians record, the race had deteriorated both physically and morally? Finally, why are there not today, two thousand years after Christ, a great multitude of men who are an improvement upon that particular Christ?" Such an improvement is what Evolution would lead us to expect. Why is it not so?

There can be but one reply, namely, that the Christ of Bethlehem and Nazareth, the Christ of Gethsemane and Calvary was Himself a miracle. And if a miracle, then a gap, a break in the continuity of things. Like the Word written, so the Word incarnate was not something that had before existed. He was not an outgrowth or development of what preceded Him. He broke into the continuity of things, and in doing that He thrust the theory of Evolution into the discard.

3. A Christian must believe in redemption. He must believe in redemption needed and in redemption accomplished, for Paul says: "Christ died for our sins * * * He was buried * * * He rose again * * * And He was seen * * *." He does not say here what he says in his letter to the Romans, namely, that Christ "was raised again for our justification" (4:25), but it is implied of course. Christ's resurrection, in other words, was "the demonstration, the warrant, the proclamation of His acceptance" by the Father as the propitiation for our sins. (Bishop Moule.)

But now if "Christ died for our sins", then we are sinners, and helplessly and hopelessly so. There could have been no other escape from the consequences of our sin than the death of Christ, or else so great a sacrifice would not have been required. For even if Christ's death were thought of only as that of an example or a martyr, it were still an awful sacrifice.

On the supposition therefore, that men were sinners in need of a supernatural Saviour and a supernatural salvation, is it not evident that they could not represent a rising race? Must they not be a fallen race? According to this, men are not coming up from a lower development in creation, but almost the very opposite. Man in his natural state, in other words, does not represent an ascent but a descent. As others have expressed it, he is not an evolution but a devolution. Evolution says that man has come up from the brute, and that whatever there is imperfect in his nature was brought with him from the animal world, hence he is growing better all the while. If this be so, how can man be considered a sinner? And what responsibility has he for his misdeeds? And how does he require any redemption? Is he not to be congratulated on his progress rather than punished for his declension?

My friends, Evolution may be true. Let us assume it for the moment. We are not discussing the objections to it from the scientific point of view. That will come at another time. All that we are insisting upon at present is that a Christian cannot be an evolutionist. An imaginary evolutionist, as another speaks of him, may call himself a Christian, but a real Christian cannot imagine himself an evolutionist? Why? Because a Christian must believe in the Scriptures, he must believe in Christ, he must believe in redemption. He must believe in some other things, but these three are what Paul is here setting before us as the definition of Christianity, and these are enough. These things are supernatural. They are gaps, they are breaks in the continuity of development. The first requirement of continuity is that nothing shall happen in nature that is opposed to the course of nature, and all these things have so happened, or else Christianity is a fake. All these things have so happened, or else our preaching is void and your faith also is void. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God. Do you believe that? Are you prepared to assent to that? Until you are so prepared to do, you are not prepared to call yourself an evolutionist.

III.

AN EVOLUTIONIST AND A CHRISTIAN CONTRASTED.

I have recently read "Life and Confessions of a Psychologist", the autobiography of C. Stanley Hall, the first president, and indeed the creator and builder, if he was not the founder of Clark University. President Hall was born and nurtured in a New England home. His parents were godly people. The environment of his academic and college days was Christian. He thought himself converted in his youth and united with the church. He even began to study for the ministry not as a vocation indeed, but as a profession. Then he went to Germany to further himself in philosophy and especially his chosen field of psychology and pedagogy. "I came home," said he, "feeling that I had attained maturity in my religious consciousness. I had felt the charm of pantheism, of agnosticism, even of materialism. But the only whole-hearted scheme of things I had accepted with ardor and abandon was that of an evolution which applied no whit less to the soul than the body of man. This was bedrock." (p. 222.)

What kind of a building did G. Stanley Hall erect on this bedrock? "The hated Puritan Sunday * * * now became a day of joy and holiday recreation." "The teetotalism in which I had been nurtured went the way of the old Sabbath-arianism and I came to love beer." "Hitherto girls had played an extremely small part in my life, but more than one German fraulein appealed to me in a new way and I cultivated several," and more to the same point.

How did G. Stanley Hall end his days? He died a year or two ago, and one of his devoted students and a near companion, Lorine Pruette, tells us in The Century what his outlook was on the beyond, and what the evaluation of his earthly accomplishments when the silver cord was loosened and the golden bowl broken. "He enjoyed so the good things of life," said she, "from the perfect dinner to the perfect symphony! There was so much yet for him to do! His finest book he saw shaping itself in the future, and death for him held all the horrors of annihilation, destruction of that keen brain, reduction to nothingness of all that stored wisdom he had won through the years."

That is the logic of evolution. I would put alongside of it the valedictory of the great apostle who told us the meaning of Christianity:

> "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—(2 Tim. 4:7, 8.)

GOD'S WAY OF SALVATION

Difficulties Met.

By A. Marshall.

II.

A Living Saviour for You.

READER, if you are not yet saved, even now you are a condemned sinner, hurrying to an eternity of darkness and despair, with the wrath of the Almighty resting upon you. "He that believeth not is condemned already" (John 3:18).

It matters not what you are—high or low, rich or poor, educated or illiterate, religious or immoral—unless you are "born again", unless you become a new creature in Christ Jesus, you cannot see the kingdom of God. "Ye must be born again" (John 3:7).

If, however, you have been led to see your guilt and danger, and are asking the question, "Is there salvation for me?" I can assure you, on the authority of Him who cannot lie, that you may be saved as you read these lines; for He has said, "Come; for all things are now ready" (Luke 14:17); "Now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6:2); "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth" (Isa. 45:22).

"God loved the world of sinners lost
And ruined by the fall;
Salvation full at highest cost
He offers free to all."

Do You Know That You Are Lost?

The Philippian jailor knew that he was lost, else he would not have asked what he had to do to be saved (Acts 16:30, 31). Have you ever really seen yourself to be a lost sinner? Do you say, "Of course we are all sinners"? That is very true; but some are sinners saved by grace journeying to heaven, whilst others are lost, hastening as fast as time can carry them to unending misery.

Reader, are you saved or lost? Face the question fairly. Were you called to meet God at this moment, are you prepared? "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil and canst not look on iniquity" (Hab. 1:13). "Righteousness and judgment are the habitations of His throne" (Ps. 97:2). If unsaved, unconverted, unforgiven, listen to the Word of Jehovah: "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ez. 18:4); "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (Ps. 9:17).

If you know that you are lost, there is One both able and willing to save you. His mission to this world was to "seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke 19:10). Take the lost sinner's place, and claim that lost sinner's Saviour, and salvation will be yours.

The Ground of Salvation.

God is holy and just; and though merciful and gracious, "will by no means clear the guilty" (Exod. 34:7). In His Word He has said, "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). How then can any one be saved for "all have sinned", and all deserve to die the second death?

The Scripture has declard, "Without shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. 9:22). Sin must be atoned for! Must all eternally perish? Is there no possibility of escape?

A voice is heard from the throne of God: "Deliver him from going down to the pit" (Job 23:24). Justice asks, "On what ground?" "I have found a ransom." What was the ransom provided by Jehovah for the redemption of sinners?

"Jesus gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:6). The ransom price has been paid and accepted. Justice is satisfied, not with what you have done, but with what Christ has done for you. On the ground of His finished work, God invites and beseeches you to accept a free, full, and present salvation.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come . . . without money and without price" (Isa. 55:1).

How to be Saved.

It is a wonder that any remain unsaved when God has shown so clearly and fully, in His Word, how salvation is to be obtained.

Numbers, instead of being guided by what God's Word says, go by what Mr. So-and-So thinks; thus they are ignorant of the gospel of God's matchless grace.

If you wish to be saved, hear what God says to you in the following Scriptures:

"For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). "All that believe are justified from all things" (Acts 3:39). "Whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10:43). "He that believeth on Him is not condemned" (John 3:18). The first-born in the blood-besprinkled house in Egypt was preserved from the destroying Angel because Jehovah had said, "When I see the blood I will pass over you" (Exodus 12:13). Salvation can only be had by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Salvation without money, salvation without price,
Salvation without labour, believing doth suffice;
Salvation now this moment, then why, oh, why delay?
You may not see tomorrow; now is salvation's day."

"Far Too Easy a Way."

Many are stumbled at the simplicity of the Gospel. When it is presented to them in all its fullness and freeness, they declare that believing on the Lord Jesus Christ is "far too easy" a way.

Thank God, it is an "easy" way of being saved. Well might the poet Cowper sing:

"Oh, how unlike the complex works of man, Heaven's easy, artless, unencumbered plan."

Though an "easy" way, it is not "too easy", since it is obtained through believing in One by whom the difficult work has all been done—the Lord Jesus.

It was not "easy" for Him to be mocked and insulted by men. It was not "easy" for Him to be scourged, spat upon, and crucified. It was not "easy" in the moment of His humiliation and agony to be forsaken by God. It was not "easy" for Him to be "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities" (Isaiah 53:5).

Though an easy way, it is God's only way of saving sinners, and if the reader is not saved in that way, he will never be saved at all. "To Him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness" (Romans 4:5).

"I Always Believed on Jesus and Yet I Cannot Say That I Am Saved."

Depend on it, if this is what you say or think, you are completely mistaken. No one has "always believed on Jesus". You may have believed a great deal about the Lord Jesus, but you have never really believed on Him. You have never received His glorious Gospel, or you would be saved. What about the Lord Jesus do you believe? "I believe that Hedied on Calvary for sinners." Believing that won't do you any good. Do you believe that He bled and suffered and died on account of your sins? If you did you would see that there was no reason why you should be afraid of meeting God. If you did you would know from the Word that you had eternal life, and would not come into judgment on account of your sins. No one can believe on the Lord Jesus Christ without being saved, for He has declared: "Whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10:43); "All that believe are justified from all things" (Acts 13:38, 39); "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John 6:47). So you see, if you really believe on the Lord Jesus, God says you are saved.

"I Don't Believe in the Right Way."

If you are not already saved, you don't believe in Jesus in any way. Scripture does not recognize two ways of believing—a "right" and a "wrong" one. Men may speak about a "living faith" and a "dead faith", a "raving faith" and an "intellectual faith", but Scripture speaks of believing what God says. Faith in man and faith in God are the same exercises of mind; the difference is not in the faith, but in the person on whom the faith terminates. Those who are lost perish through believing the devil's lie, and those who are saved are delivered through believing God's truth. "The devils believe and tremble," because they are doomed to eternal despair; and the saints believe, and rejoice with joy unspeakable, because they are to spend Eternity in happiest fellowship with the Lord Jesus.

Paul did not say to the jailor, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with the right kind of believing, and thou shalt be saved". If he had, the poor ignorant heathen would not have understood him. He simply said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ". Do the same, oh, reader, and thou shalt be saved. Don't think about your believing, but about Christ, the object of faith.

"Must We Not Work Out Our Own Salvation?"

Such a question is often asked by anxious, as well as careless, sinners. Sometimes it is put in this form—"Does it not say in the Bible that we are to work out our salvation? How, then, can you reconcile that with the statement that we have only to believe in order to be saved?"

When you ask, "Does it not say we are to work out our salvation"? whom do you mean? Do you mean every person —saved and unsaved? If so, you have only to look at the epistle and see to whom it is addressed. Phil. 1:1—"To all the saints in Christ Jesus at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." They were already saved. They did not hope to be, they knew they were saved. "My beloved," says Paul, . . . "work out your own salvation" (Phil. 2:12, 13). They were already in possession of it. "Your own" implies possession. They were to "work out" what God had wrought in. This passage certainly had no reference to the unsaved. The unsaved are "dead in trespasses and sins", and therefore cannot work out their salvation. Besides, Scripture is very explicit—"By Grace are ye saved, . . . not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. 2: 8, 9).

"Must I Not Pray to be Saved?"

Scripture nowhere states that salvation is to be had by prayer; it speaks of sinners being saved only in one way—through simple faith in the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ. Did the Lord Jesus tell Nicodemus to "pray, and be saved"? No. "Whosoever believeth in Him should not perish" (John 3:14, 15). Did Paul, in answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved"? reply, "Pray earnestly for forgiveness, and you will get it"? No; he said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:31). You do not need to pray to God for salvation; He is at this moment beseeching you to Take it (2 Cor. 5:20). If you expect to be saved by prayer you will be deceived, as it cannot take you a step nearer to heaven. How can you dare to ask God for salvation so long as you are guilty of the awful sin of making Him a liar (1 John 5:10, 11). Instead of continuing to pray for salvation, even now as you read these lines, stretch out the empty hand of faith and take it as a gift from the pierced hand of the Lord Jesus. "The Gift of God is eternal life" (Rom. 6:23). "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22:17).

"If I Do My Part, God Will Do His."

A Christian in the east of England used to say it took him forty-two years to learn three things—(1) That he could do nothing to save himself; (2) that God did not require him to do anything; and (3) that Christ did it all.

If you learn these three lessons you will never talk about your doings. "Your part" is to admit that you are a helpless, hell-deserving sinner, unable to do anything to save yourself. "Your part" is to cease thinking of being saved by anything you can do or feel. "Your part" is to believe that Jesus did everything that was necessary—that He finished the work of atonement and paid the ransom price with His precious blood. Whenever you cease trying to be saved by your doings, and believe on the Lord Jesus, who did it all and paid it all, you become a son of God, an heir of glory, and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ. "To him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousnes" (Rom. 4:5).

"It is finished, yes, indeed,
Finished every jot;
Sinner, this is all you need,
Tell me, is it not?"

If God is satisfied with the "finished" work of Christ, you ought to be satisfied with that which satisfies Him.

"I Am Too Great a Sinner."

Some who say this really suppose that they are too wicked to be forgiven; but in many cases it is only said in mock humility, as an excuse for continuance in sin. There can be no doubt but that you are a great sinner, and far worse than you imagine. "You have no idea how wicked I am." I don't know, and what is more, I don't wish to know; but one thing I certain of, He knows all about you. Since you were an unconscious babe on your mother's breast, He has watched over you and loved you with more than a parent's love. In spite of your sin and folly, He stands with outstretched arms ready to welcome you. The prodigal son was received by his father in rags and wretchedness, misery and poverty, and God is willing to save you now. Take the lost sinner's place and claim the lost sinner's Saviour. "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6:37). Though a "great sinner", you are not beyond the reach of His pardoning mercy, and now you may receive the full and free forgiveness of all your sins, by believing on Him who died for you (John 6:47). "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke 19:10).

"No One Can Be Certain of That."

Paul's reply to the most important of all questions was very explicit. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved". He did not say, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will have a good chance of being savel"; but "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved".

Numbers declare it is "great presumption" in any one to "go the length" of saying he knows that he is saved. They affirm that "no one can be certain", and that all we can do is to have a "humble hope". How different this is from the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ and His apostles! Paul says, "We are always confident" (2 Cor. 5:69). The Apostle John says, "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for His Name's sake" (1 John 2:12). "We know that we have passed from death unto life" (1 John 3:14). Every sinner who believes on the Lord Jesus is bound to believe that he is saved. It would indeed be "great presumption" in any one to doubt the Word of the living God. "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar" (1 John 5:10, 11), and he who believes on Jesus has the divine promise, thou shalt be saved (Acts 16:31).

MEMORABLE UNITY AT THE LORD'S TABLE.

To the Editor:

Sir—The well known convention, held for fifty-three years at Keswick, in the beautiful English Lake District, has just concluded its latest assembly. This 1928 convention will be forever memorable, because the meetings closed for the first time with a united celebration of the Holy Communion. It is specially noteworthy that the service was held in the evening, following our Lord's own example when He instituted the sacred feast. Nearly three thousand devout communicants crowded the great convention tent. Among them, we are told, were bishops and clergy of the Church of England, and ministers of various other branches of the church. The aged Dr. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Stuart Holden, and Mr. Lindsay Glegg united in the administration. "A Solemn hush and sense of the Divine presence" were remarkably manifest throughout the vast assembly. It is thought that seldom, if ever, has so great a number of communicants gathered before in England at one service of Holy Communion.

The Rt. Rev. J. B. Linton, missionary bishop in Persia, was present on this sacred occasion. He writes to the London Record an article in which he reminds us of a similar inter-communion service held in connection with the famous International Missionary Council, which met last March at Jerusalem, with Christian representatives from no fewer than fifty-one nations. Bishop Linton says that "to an overwhelming majority of these delegates" the united communion service with which their meetings terminated seemed the only possible conclusion. And he adds these memorable words from his own experience: "For those of us who had the joy of sharing in that solemn act of fellowship, Jerusalem, 1928, was a milestone on the journey towards that 'one-ness', for which our Blessed Lord prayed. Keswick, 1928, is the second milestone. It was inevitable that the Keswick convention should some time or other find its expression in the sacrament of fellowship. It was impossible to go on for ever under the motto 'All one in Christ Jesus', and not be impelled to express in the sacrament of fellowship the spirit of communion, which so manifestly pervades that unique assembly of Christians of every denomination."

We remember the stir created by the incident which occurred at Kikuyu in Africa some years ago. There again Christians of different Churches gathered at the Lord's table in one happy company, thereby awakening a controversy that led to the famous Lambeth appeal. The editor of the London Record entirely approves of these assemblies for united communion. He says, in his editorial notes on July 26 of this year, that "those who admit that non-Episcopal ministers are true ministers of the Word and sacraments, cannot but rejoice that Keswick has taken its courage in both hands, and made this step forward. What in mean men is prudence is cowardice when God urges, and the times demand a new departure. The days in which we live demand that all who are one body in Christ should show their unity; and what place is better, or more in accord with the teaching of Holy Scripture, than the table of the Lord, which is the table of the Church"?

By "the table of the Church", the editor of course means of the whole Church, not of the Church of England only. All the Lord's true children enjoy the same God-given right to eat of that bread and drink of that cup, which it cost Christ His life to provide. We cannot too often dwell upon our Lord's own sure promise, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them". The one and only condition attached to this glorious promise is that with true meekness and lowliness of heart we should gather "in His name".

Generously allow me to close with a personal incident. Many years ago during my ministry at St. Martin's Church, Montreal, I held a united communion service in the church for different Christians at that time assembled in the city at a convention. We enjoyed the full approval of the late venerated Archbishop Bond, who was only prevented by illness from himself celebrating at the Lord's table on the occasion. That privilege then fell to me as rector, and we had the joy of welcoming one hundred and one communicants, including some ministers of other churches. But there was this important difference from the united communion at Keswick: no minister of any other denomination assisted me at the Lord's table. We were only reaching after the larger and fuller unity. Yet even for this a clergyman—since become an honored bishop—wrote frankly over his own name, and rebuked me for what he said he must characterize as my "disloyal act". I wrote him a friendly reply. He came to see me, and we had a heart to heart conference. I rejoice to say that he is now one of my truest friends; and I think he would gladly do himself today what he at that time so frankly rebuked me for doing. "Love never faileth."

FALLACIOUS REASONING EXPOSED.

Mr. Editor:

The faith of many of your readers, like that of the writer, has been immeasurably strengthened by the scholarly articles on Evolution and Higher Criticism, respectively, by Drs. Griffith-Thomas and Schapiro.

The fallacious reasoning of the Evolutionists and the erroneous teachings of the Higher Critics are, by these two eminent scholars, thoroughly bared and exposed.

Conclusions based upon faulty scholarship are the source of much of the present day agnosticism.

The writer's reactions to Truth and Error are reflected in the following stanzas:

Coexistent and Eternal,
Far ere flight of Time began,
Ceaseless warfare Truth and Error
Wage, for mastery of man.

Error, in its ceaseless struggle
With the Truth, cannot prevail:
Truth is mightier than Error;
Vainly Error doth assail.

NEXT TO PRAYER BOOK.

Mr. Editor:

Since "The Southern Churchman" was organized some time in the 1830's, it has come to our home—first to my grandmother, then to my mother and since her death to me. From it my little brother and I learned our letters and to us it has always stood next to the Prayer Book. Prof. Berkeley Minor's articles are of much interest to me. I remember him most pleasantly as one of my instructors of old Virginia Female Institute.

STRANGE INCONGRUITY.

Mr. Editor:

I am using with much pleasure and profit "The Churchman's Kalendar of Daily Bible Readings", prepared by the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church. I find on the last page (page 59) a "kalendar for Church and Country", in which I read (for February 12), "Lincoln's birthday, 1809", but January 19 is a blank.

Strange incongruity! Lee, a great man and prominent layman of the Church—Lincoln, no greater or better man surely, not in any Church, of whom his intimate friend, Ward Laman, said: "When he went to church at all, he went to mock, and came away to mimic"—who was shot in a theatre on Good Friday.

Comment is not needed; the facts speak for themselves.

CHINESE COMMISSION REPORT AVAILABLE.

Mr. Editor:

Possibly few of our people know that the report, made by Bishop Sanford and myself to the Department of Missions and to the National Council concerning our visit to China, has been published in pamphlet form, together with the action taken thereon.

Bibles for Byrd Antarctic Expedition.

The New York Bible Society has presented to Richard E. Byrd for the Antarctic Expedition, eleven Bibles and sixty copies of the New Testament. The Bibles are in good type and it is designed that a copy will be in each place in the Antarctic where a number of men may be located. The sixty New Testaments, one for each man of the Expedition, are a small vest pocket edition, India paper, and in clear large type. All the books were lettered in gold on the outside "Byrd Antrarctic Expedition".

When the men are in the far South, far from all civilization, the only reading matter available will be that which has been taken from New York, and it is most appropriate that the New York Bible Society should have furnished copies of the Scriptures for the men who will be so long a time in isolation.

Dr. Lang Opposed as British Primate.

London, Aug. 18.—A protest against royal assent to the appointment of the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, was sent to King George on behalf of two evangelical bodies.

Opposition to the elevation of the Archbishop to the primacy of all England in succession to Dr. Randall Davidson, who recently resigned, is based on Dr. Lang's leadership of the Anglo-Catholics in the Church of England. The authors of the protest are the League of Loyal Churchmen and the Protestant Alliance, which have considerable numerical strength.

The petition says that Dr. Lang generally is regarded as "the real head of that party who have so recently attempted without success to subvert the Protestant reform religion under the cloak of a revision of the Prayer Book.

"It is impossible, therefore, to believe that he will faithfully administer the laws or that he will even refrain from abusing his authority so as to promote the revival of Romanism in the Church of England."

The Sunday Times tomorrow will say that the official minutes of the famous Malines conversations, looking to a reunion of the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church, will be published shortly, probably before the resignation of Dr. Davidson becomes effective.

The newspaper quotes an "anonymous ecclesiastical authority" as asserting that in these deliberations the Church of Rome was prepared to grant "great things" to the Archbishop of Canterbury should he accept the Roman Catholic faith.

Among these "great things" was a special precedence equal to and perhaps above that of Cardinals, the anonymous authority said.

The Malines conversations between leading members of the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church took place at Malines, Belgium, at intervals between 1921 and 1925. A report of ninety-eight pages was issued by members of the English delegation in January of this year. It covered the conversations exhaustively from the British point of view.

Church Army.

At the request of the Advisory Board of Church Army, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, D. D., Vicar of Trinity Chapel, New York, and the Rev. Frank Cox, rector of Ascension Memorial Church, New York, have joined that Board. These gentlemen with the Rev. F. W. Fitts, rector of St. John's, Roxbury, Crossing, Mass., and the Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D., Secretary to the Diocese of New York, have also become members of the Church Army Candidates Selection Committee.

Captain Mountford reports all men fully booked up to the end of the year, and many Missions are already arranged for Epiphany and Lent, 1929. Where Church Army evangelists cannot be supplied, priests will, in certain cases, be spent to preach Missions, several priest-missioners having put themselves at the disposal of Church Army for occasional Missions.

Sewanee Summer Training School.

The Sewanee Summer Training School for Workers began its 1928 session with a Conference on Religious Education, lasting from July 27 to July 31.

The director of this Conference was the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., of Houma, La., Executive Secretary of Religious Education for the Province of Sewanee. The Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., of Atlanta, Provincial Chairman of Religious Education, and the Rev. Willis G. Clark, of Tampa, Fla., alternated in presiding over the sessions.

The object of the Conference was to survey the progress of religious education in the Fourth Province, to consider its problems and to plan for its future activities. All provincial, diocesan and parochial directors of religious education, leaders in educational activities, officers of Church educational institutions, and all persons interested in religious education in the Province of Sewanee were eligible; the meetings were largely attended and were characterized by a spirit of earnestness and efficiency that was prophetic of increased usefulness and broader outlook for the future.

The reports submitted were full of interest and covered many phases of the Church's educational activities. The Province is still in the lead in the number of accredited and diplomated teachers, and interesting charts were presented by each diocese in the Province, indicating the number and standing of its trained workers. These charts formed a valuable exhibit throughout all the sessions of the Summer Training School.

Subjects Stressed.

Among the subjects especially stressed were: Worship in the Church School, Religion in the Home, Teacher Training, Curriculum, Y. P. S. L. activities and programs, the Clergy in Religious Education, Publicity, Production of Literature, Rural Schools, the Church's Educational Institutions, the Possibilities of Cooperation with the Woman's Auxiliary and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Week-day Religious Education, Work Among College Students, and other vital topics.

This Conference has formerly been held during the sessions of the Adult Division of the Summer Training School, and has been severely handicapped by conflicting events. The success of this year's Conference, held in advance, with sufficient time for complete handling of the important subjects and questions involved, was a great satisfaction; and as many of the participants were also members of the Adult Division, the enthusiasm and earnestness of the Educational Conference set a standard for the succeeding meetings that has never before been attained.

Educational Microbe.

The educational microbe was in the air, and an epidemic of genuine application and enthusisastic purposefulness resulted.

The faculty of the Adult Division of the Summer Training School for Workers was an outstanding one, each department furnishing valuable courses. The School of the Prophets, for the second time in its history, admitted women to its classes, and many availed themselves of its lectures. "Christian Mysticism," by Dean Wm. H. Nes; "The Ministry for Today," by Rev. Wm. H. Milton, D. D., and "The Preacher's Use of the Bible," by Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., were the splendid courses offered in this department.

The Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., was dean of the Department of Social Service, in which the Rev. Don Frank Fenn and Miss Jeanette Ziegler gave courses of notable value.

The Department of Missions was presided over by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D., and here again the Rev. Don Frank Fenn made a valuable contribution. Dr. John W. Wood, of the National Council, was a popular member of this faculty, not only conducting classes each morning on "The Mission of the Church", but giving many delightful and helpful lectures and informal talks. Mrs. Marcelline Adams, of Pittsburgh, Pa., was a new member of the faculty, and taught a course on "Leadership in Women's Organizations". She also directed a pageant setting forth the work of the Church Periodical Club, which was impressive and beautiful.

Mrs. John R. Wheeler, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Tennessee, gave a special course on "The Daughters of the King", the keynote of which was personal religion. She also arranged and presided over the interesting and helpful women's conferences, held every afternoon on the campus.

Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, with the cooperation of Dr. Wm. H. Milton, Dr. L. W. Glazebrook and Dr. W. J. Loaring Clark, of the National Commission on Evangelism, conducted a series of afternoon conferences on Evangelism in the Church, with especial reference to lay activity.

Miss Jeannette Ziegler's course on "Organization for Girls" and that of Mr. Morton Mace on the "Work of Parish Secretaries", completed the special courses.

In the Department of Religious Education, of which the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., is Dean, and to which he contributed an outstanding original study of the whole Bible, entitled "The Drama of the Covenant", there was a wealth of good things.

Mrs. Leon C. Palmer, the Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., the Rev. Charles H. Boynton, D. D., Miss Annie Morton Stout, the Rev. Charles L. Wells, Ph. D., Miss Josephine Cockle, Miss Rosalie Wilson, Mrs. Jean S. Knight, Mrs. Frank N. Challen, and Mr. Leon C. Palmer, most of them old favorites at Sewanee, were responsible for interesting courses on vital subjects.

Course in Pageantry.

A course in Pageantry by the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, was an unexpected advantage. This class put on a "Pageant of the Canticles" in All Saints' Chapel, beautifully illustrating Mr. Tucker's teaching concerning the dramatic element in our liturgy, and making a most profound and reverent impression.

The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of North Carolina, acting for the first time as director of the Adult Division, won all hearts and to his ability and versatility much of the success of this year's work is due.

It is impossible to speak particularly of every course in the Adult Division, but the names of the teachers are sufficient guarantee of their excellence.

In spite of the fact that it is Triennial year, when most other conventions are not so well attended, two hundred and twenty-nine were enrolled in this division, two more than were present last year, and many remained over for the Young People's Division, as teachers, counsellors and students. Altogether this has been a banner season, and Sewanee will probably be taxed to accommodate the crowds that will attend next year.

An interesting event during the Adult Division was the rite of first degree or adventure of the "Quest of the Sangreal". The ceremony held in the University Chapel, on the night of August 12. For the first time since the formulation of the ceremonial of the Sangreal a bishop presided in the chancel during the rite. A "degree team" or committee of rites, composed of twelve other priests and laymen, administered the rite to a group of about fifty "pilgrims on the way of living".

Immediately after the close of the Adult Division on August 16, the Young People's Division opened, with a registration of over two hundred. This will close on August 30, and will again be followed by the first Annual Conference of the National Federation of Episcopal Young People, August 31-September 4.

Second Young People's Provincial Summer Conference, Province of the Southwest.

The second Young People's Summer Conference of the Province of the Southwest was held at the Helen Dunlap School, Winslow, Ark., July 20-August 1, 1928.

The Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas, served as Director of the Conference and taught a class on "Personal Religion". Other members of the faculty were the Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman, Bishop of North Texas, who taught a course on the "Prayer Book"; the Very Rev. James Mills, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, who taught a course on the "Introduction to the Whole Bible"; Mr. W. F. Borrman, of Soochow, China, conducted a class on "China"; Mrs. C. S. Quin, of Houston, a class for girls only, and the Rev. H. A. Stowell, of Pine Bluff, Ark., a class for boys only; and Miss Dorothy M. Fischer, Executive Secretary, Province of the Southwest, a class on Young People's Organization.

There was a registration of sixty representing the Missionary District of New Mexico, Oklahoma, North Texas and the Dioceses of Kansas, Arkansas, Dallas and Texas.

Conference Center for the Diocese of South Carolina, Upper South Carolina, East Carolina and Western North Carolina.

The Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, D. D., Manager.

Outstanding Opportunity.

For several years past there has been a movement on foot to purchase the property of Lake Kanuga, four miles from Hendersonville, N. C., and to make of it a Summer Conference Center for the Episcopal Church in the Carolinas and, should they so desire, for the contiguous dioceses of the Province of Sewanee. There has been a strong feeling that such a Conference Center in the eastern section of the Province would fill a need in the Church's life that the present Conference Center at Sewanee, Tenn., can never fill, because of the distance and expense of travel from the coastal dioceses.

The Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, D. D., the Bishop of Upper South Carolina, has been, since the beginnings of the movement, its ardent and recognized leader. At the present time, there is a Board of Directors of the Lake Kanuga Conference proposition, which consists of the bishops, a clergyman and a layman from each one of the participating dioceses, Upper South Carolina, South Carolina, East Carolina and Western North Carolina, within whose borders the property is situated. North Carolina has not, as yet, signified her willingness to become a part of this movement and has, therefore, no representation on the Board of Directors. The participation of this diocese in the movement is of the utmost importance to the purchase of the property by the Church in the Carolinas and to the success of the plan in general, and it is confidently hoped that she will eventually join forces with her sister dioceses in North and South Carolina.

Many Churchmen in the Southland consider that the ownership of Kanuga Lake by the Protestant Episcopal Church is "one of the outstanding opportunities of our Church in this generation". The Bishops of the participating dioceses have expressed their approval in the following terms:

The Bishop of Upper South Carolina: "This property is peculiarly well suited to meet the needs of these dioceses for a place of summer conferences; the possession of which will be a most valuable asset not only to them, but also to the Episcopal Church in general, since it is entirely probable that conferences, including a large part of the country and possibly even national in scope, may be held here from time to time."

The late Bishop of South Carolina: "Needless to say I am deeply and vitally interested in the Kanuga Lake proposition and stand ready to assist you."

The Bishop of East Carolina: "I am satisfied that it would be a wonderful thing if the Church could acquire this property and make it a center for conference activities."

The Bishop of Western North Carolina: "The acquirement of the Lake Kanuga property as a Church Conference Center, for which we are working, must be accomplished. The Church needs such a place and its usefulness is beyond question."

Location.

The property in question is situated four miles southwest of Hendersonville, N. C., at the southern end of what is known as the Asheville Plateau, the gate way of the main highways from the South entering the Southern Appalachian Region. The city of Asheville is twenty-five miles distant. There are scores of points of interest within a hike of one hour to one day from Kanuga, and numbers of other interesting points from one to five hours by motor.

Healthfulness.

The elevation is from 2,100 to 2,500 feet above sea level, in a region having no malaria or mosquitoes. There is a bracing all-year-climate, with winters absolutely free from the rigors of the more northern sections.

Description.

The property proposed for the Episcopal Conference Center has approximately four hundred acres and in the heart of the tract is Kanuga Lake on the shores of which is Kanuga Village. This village has about fifty buildings and was laid out under the supervision of Dr. John Nolen, well-known city planner, who worked with the building architect. The buildings are of the rambling, roomy type and are arranged with reference to beauty as well as to convenience in their relations to each other. The main building and four annexes, connected under one roof, contain one hundred and twenty-five bedrooms, each room fully furnished and with ample connecting baths. Each room has a telephone. The dining room has a seating capacity for five hundred, fully equipped. The kitchen, which was specially designed by a kitchen architect, is arranged and equipped for convenient and efficient service. There is a private dining room which seats twenty and another medium sized dining room that will seat one hundred and fifty, both of these being in addition to the main dining room with a seating capacity of five hundred. The main building and annexes are two stories in height and under the main building is a large, well lighted, well ventilated, cement floored basement for storage supplies, refrigeration, etc. There are thirty-nine- cottages from three to seven rooms each, servants' houses, garages and one cottage designated as "Children's Building". Everything is electrically lighted. The existing lake—which was swept away by the breakage of the dam on August 15, but will doubtless be rebuilt before the 1929 season, contains about thirty acres, bordering the village grounds, and affords a view of unusual beauty and restfulness.

The Executive Committee, handling the Kanuga property, consists of eight prominent laymen of Asheville and Hendersonville, Mr. Harry W. Love, of

BESIDE THE STILL WATERS.

Marie Williams Vandegrift.

Beside the quiet stream I walk
And Jesus walks with me.
He holds my hand within His own
And peace envelops me.

He goes with me through the dark vale,
His voice is low and sweet.
And o'er the rock-strewn pathway guides
My faltering stumbling feet.

Calm water flows in majesty
Across the dry parched land,
And I drink in its healing strength
While I hold fast His hand.

I would not seek the quiet stream
Save that He leads me here,
And when I walk beside these shores
I feel His presence near.

Tired hearts, cast off your yoke of woe,
And seek the Lord's surcease.
Beside the quiet streams with Him
Each walks in perfect peace.

The Word "Amen" Is One of the Oldest in the World.

The word "Amen" which we all pronounce at the end of prayers and hymns is one of the oldest used in the world. A clergyman in London said the following about it:

"On Friday, at the Mohammedan mosques, millions of devout worshippers prayed the prayer which is their equivalent for the Lord's Prayer; and the full toned Doxology rang out from the throats of Islam, Amen.

"Yesterday, the Jewish congregations in the synagogues responded to their minister who, at the close of the great Chumish Prayer, said 'Say ye, Amen', and they all said 'Amen'. Today, throughout the Christian Church this word closes our prayers and praise.

"Few words in the vocabulary of religion are more widely used than the word 'Amen', and few to my mind are less intelligently uttered. This short word is repeatedly continually, until I fear it has become blurred and blunted by usage.

"It is a Hebrew term which has passed unchanged into Greek, Arabic, Latin and English. Wherever the soul of man, Jewish, Mohammedan, or Christian, bows before God, the one 'Amen' comes to the lips. It means 'Truly'—'So be it'. We commonly say Amen in worship to some statement by another person if it is a term of response, meaning that if a statement of God's truth is made in our presence, we say Amen to it if we agree with it.

"In the Early Church, in the fourth century, we are told the word Amen rang from the congregation sometimes like a clap of thunder; people poured their hearts into it. In a number of our congregations today, I mean in some churches, the use of Amen at the end of prayers has been discontinued, which is a real loss."—Canadian Churchman.

The Good In Everybody.

Louis Deschamps.

At a time when the ills of society are attributed to a depraved human nature; when the press reeks with the crimes and scandals of the public; when even learned men and leaders become cynical and pessimistic over the future of religion—the practical observer among the people finds the majority of his fellowmen essentially good, or at least with the love of goodness at heart. Perhaps this results from a freedom that science and theories do not permit. Our common humanity should not be condemned lightly, because there is a malignant power of suggestion in the habit of thought that declares all men depraved. It breeds that despair and pessimism so evident in modern thought, expressed in the dire prophesies of the learned, and in the morbid recklessness of the frivolous. Once convinced that human nature is bad, it is only natural to live accordingly.

Although mankind by nature is inclined to folly and sin. needing the Divine Grace of religion to redeem its nature, yet there must be something inherently good to which religion can appeal. Growth in grace implies a fertile soil. If human nature is to be changed for the better, it is not through disdain, contempt, or cynical condemnation, but through a sincere faith in the innate good in everybody, a love of our fellowman inspired by this faith. And surely God in His wisdom would not have committed to human hands His creation and the success of His plans for the redemption of the world, unless He knew and trusted the good in human nature.

Apart from the more serious aspects of this knowledge that every one has the seed of goodness in his heart, there is the great and wholesome effect it has upon one's personal attitudes and happiness. How much better it is to live sympathetically, hopefully, kindly; than to live disdainfully, cynically, coldly superior to the simply commonplace lives of the so-called masses! After all, it is a matter of understanding and insight. The uncultured, uncouth denizen of the slums has the same fundamental traits as his more fortunate fellowman in the fashionable club. The difference is great superficially, but in matters of life and death, joy and sorrow, the two have much in common. In different ways both feel the common heritage of God's presence within. If poverty and squalor tend to make the one a thief; self-indulgence and power tend to make the other a rascal Both start with a spark of goodness, which is threatened by different dangers. The sun shines and birds sing for both. It can not be mere chance that the purest, most unselfish joys of being alive are free to all. Christianity has survived the ravages of a supposedly depraved human nature largely because it appeals to the good in everybody, offering its salvation freely. One of the greatest factors in making real character is the pride inspired by another's sincere trust, and above all, by God's confidence. The Son of God retained His faith in humanity even amid the agonies of the crucifixion. "Forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do." And subsequent history reveals the interesting fact that they did not know what they did, no more than people know today what they do when betraying their finer nature.

The trend of modern thought toward the conclusion that our civilization is in decay, our morals impossible, and our religion powerless to reform a depraved human nature is entirely too dangerous to be declared so often, so glaringly in the press, so dolefully from the pulpits. It is treason to humanity. Faults there are, serious, flagrant, depressing—but woe to the patient who is told by his doctors that there is no hope for him. Spiritual health begins in the thoughts of the individual mind. Religion teaches to repent and believe; not to take judgment in our own mortal hands and condemn the Creation of God.

As evidence of the inherent good in humanity in general, consider the lives of the millions of poor, whose treadmill existence would seem to ruin their characters. Yet the noble sacrifices of humble parents for their children are none the less glorious for being obscure. The laborer comes face to face with the same verities of life that puzzle the learned scholar, yet he solves them under greater difficulties. Witness the great men contributed by the poorer classes, men whose innate goodness and greatness startle the complacency of sociological theorists. The profound insight into human affairs that enables great writers to describe humanity in lasting classics proclaims not only the worth, but also the universal charm of our common nature. Characters from the pen of Hugo or of Dickens are true to life. Consider the innate thirst for religion in every hyuman heart. The thief on the cross was not totally depraved. Profane and hardened seamen will pray during a shipwreck. Illiterate Negroes often achieve a religious faith, the sincerity of which can not be doubted. Why is it that human experience proves the vanity of all ways to happiness that do not conform with the principles of goodness and love? Mankind finds no lasting peace or happiness in the wrong things. What of those fortunate rich who love humanity enough to establish hospitals, endow colleges, and finance churches? Human nature is not lost as long as social workers forsake lives of luxury to work among the poor. Consider the unheralded heroism of parental love, the lives of parents that are lost only to be found in honest, useful families.

Sometimes one's fellowmen are the saving influence of one's outlook upon life. Who thinks alone, thinks incompletely. It is when one strives to understand and to love his fellowman that the destiny of humanity is encouraging and inspiring. God expects every man to do his duty. Humanity stands or falls together.

"The Doctor."

Now and then an artist paints a picture so full of tender feeling, so accurate in touching the keys of deep emotion, so broad in its appeal to experience, that the whole world takes it to its heart. Such a picture is "The Doctor", painted thirty-five years ago by Sir Luke Fildes, who has just died at the age of eighty-three.

The picture is familiar, through reproductions, to thousands and hundreds of thousands who never saw the original. A grave-faced doctor, his chin resting on his hand, and his elbow on his knee, sits watching a sick child that lies on a tumbled cot. At the head of the cot sits the mother, her head bowed upon her arms, and beside her stands the father, one hand resting on his wife's shoulder. The dress of the parents and the furnishings of the room are of the simplest and poorest.

The story that the picture tells is as old as human experience—the shadow that settles upon a household when the life of a child hangs in the balance, the struggle of hope against fear, the mutually sustaining love of husband and wife, the mute comfort of a friendly hand, the responsibility and beneficence of medical skill.

No wonder that visitors turn away with tears in their eyes! There are feelings that are apart from time and locality and above race, creed and social circumstance.

Why are there so few pictures like "The Doctor"? No American has ever painted one that approaches it in breadth of appeal. Its nearest counterpart might perhaps be considered to be Hovenden's "Breaking Home Ties"—the picture of the family gathered to say good-bye to the oldest son, who is going out to make his own way in the world. That, too, is a common experience, and a trying one, but it is not universal nor always tragic.

The tendencies of modern art are all away from such paintings as "The Doctor". We must have technical brilliance and smartness now, and emotion or the attempt to tell a story is decidedly poor form. A dead fish and a turnip, or a Shanghai rooster in a corner of the barnyard, is sufficient motif if the artist is great enough! Well, may be. But now and then a man comes along who knows the difference between sentiment and mawkishness, and is big enough to say what he feels. Then the generations take a "Christmas Carol" to their hearts or turn with moist eyes from a picture like "The Doctor". —Youth's Companion.

Ol' back bendin' over
  From some years o' toil.

Noise o' hammers striking—
  Swirl o' wheel and plates o' steel—
Years o' toil and labor
  Scarcely buys a meal.

Fingers growing crooked—
  Lines and wrinkles showing care—
Long this ol' man's dear ones

SEPTEMBER.

It's good to remember, the joys of September,
  But better to welcome their glories again;
Red lilies and yellow and apples grown mellow
  And grouse in the woodland and quails in the glen.
With hickory nuts dancing and vistas entrancing,
  Where early frost banners are spread to the sun,
It's good to be living when grapevines are giving
  Their nectar cups, filled to the brim every one.

Though summers are merry with rose, and with cherry
  And song of the robin in hedgerow and tree;
Though spring is a vision that seems half elysian—
  Hepaticas dainty and pinks o'er the lea.
And dream of coasting, 'tis no idle boasting,
  That winter has pleasures that all must hold dear.
Still joy lights an ember that flames in September,
  A star that declares it the queen of the year.

The Pony's Picnic.

Mattie M. Brunson.

George was very much excited as he ran in from school, he could hardly wait to get into the house.

"Mother, Mother, where are you?" he cried.

"Here in the kitchen, dear."

In George rushed, banging the screen door as he came, and throwing his book satchel in one direction and cap in another, "O Mother, are you fixing for the picnic? My, don't it smell good in here; just give me one taste."

"All right, here are some little cakes —mind now, they're hot. Put them in this paper bag and run out and sit in the hammock where it is cool; I'm almost through cooking now."

George was so happy he ran out and climbed into the hammock munching on his cakes. Tomorrow was Saturday and Uncle Tom and Aunt Kate were to meet them down on the creek and all have a picnic together; there would be five other children besides himself, and father would let them fish and would take them in swimming.

George, you see, was a little boy all by himself, and when they went to Uncle Tom's or Uncle Tom came to see them, they did have the best time! Uncle Tom and father were as jolly as two boys, and as for Aunt Kate, she was 'most as good as mother.

The little boy lay there munching a cake and wondering how nearly ready they were at Uncle Tom's and if Rob had remembered to get the bait. It was a warm afternoon, the cow was grazing on the lawn, and he could see old Prince, the buggy horse looking over the fence at Tobe, the mule, who, somehow, had gotten out and was walking down the road. His own little pony, Johnny Jump-up, came trotting around the corner of the piazza, stopped, looked up at George, and—

"Well, and so you are going to a picnic tomorrow, are you?"

George nearly jumped out of the hammock. Why, he never in his life heard a pony talk before!

"Why—why, when did you learn to talk?" he stammered.

"That's not the question; but never mind, I'm going to one myself, and as I'm the committee on arrangements, I must be going; there's lots to do yet, and I must catch Tobe before he gets off."

Hold on a minute, then—" but no, sir, Johnny Jump-up was gone down the road in a jiffy. George watched, saw old Tobe stop, and to all appearances he and the pony were talking very earnestly about something. Tobe flapped his ears, turned around and came back. Going up to the fence where Prince stood, he put his head over and seemed to tell him something, while Johnny J. went to where the cow was grazing—she stopped, raised her head, switched her tail and walked off towards the sheep lot.

"Johnny Jump-up, come here, sir," called our George. The pony came slowly up to the steps. "Now, don't be rude, for this is Animals' Night," he replied.

"What do you mean by 'Animals' Night?' " George asked.

"Well, I don't mind telling you if you will be polite about it," replied the pony. "You see, once a year comes 'Animals' Night', when all the animals have a picnic and a wonderful time it is! This one is to be the biggest one we ever have had on this place. Each one has to do a stunt and there are a lot of visitors to be there.

"Oh, do please invite me; I'm crazy to go!" cried George.

The pony looked at him out of the corner of one eye, and said:

"You never invite me to your picnics; you don't even bring me an apple back, and you know you go to some grand-picnics, so I hear. We animals don't talk much, but we think a lot and we get lonesome when everybody goes off for all day. We like to hear people talk, and we like to be where people are, and we like to be petted and have people say nice things about us, too."

George hung his head. "I didn't mean it yesterday when I said you were getting old and scraggy, and I wished I had a new pony like Frank Jenkins', I wouldn't give you up for anything in the world."

"Oh, we will let by-gones be by-gones. So far as I am concerned you are welcome, but I'll have to see what Beck, the cow, says about it." He trotted off to find the cow. George watched them. The cow tossed her head in the air and pawed the dust, but the pony appeared to plead with her till finally she walked off and left him.

"Well, that cow was certainly hard to manage, said she didn't like boys anyway; they always ran after cows, and she certainly did know how to put up excuses for not inviting you. But when I told her that I would be responsible for you, and if you did anything rude, I would take you home at once, she agreed. Be ready at twelve o'clock tonight, and I will come for you. We have to be back in our places by the first cock's crow, so be on time; but, mind you, not a word of this to any one, do you hear? It's not your picnic, remember."

George had no idea of being left. It was a quiet little boy who went to bed early, though he didn't feel one bit sleepy. All at once he heard a low whinny under his window; he jumped up and peeped out—there stood Johnny J., true to his word. He quickly slipped into his clothes and crawled out the window and landed right on Johnny J.'s back.

"Hold on tight, for I'm going to trot pretty fast," said Johnny J.

Through the yard, down the road, they went. It was a lovely moon-light night. There didn't seem to be any gates anywhere, or if there were they had been left open. On and on, down the pasture lane and way beyond to the woods. It was dark going through the woods, but George did not say anything. Finally they came to a great open lot where the moon shone almost like daylight.

"Here we are at last," said Johnny J., as he dumped George off his back and onto the ground; "you just sit here and watch the fun and when the refreshments come around, I'll have you served."

So George sat down on some moss where he could see everything. And, oh! how odd it looked; several times he wanted to laugh out loud, but didn't as he fancied Johnny J. was looking at him.

First came Johnny J. himself, who walked in and stood in a corner; gave a long whinny, then the rest filed in, each with his or her contribution towards the supper. Here came Beck, the cow, with a bundle of green barley; then Tobe, with a bundle of oats; close behind him came Prince proudly carrying some fodder; then the sheep with a fresh turnip. The sow came next with a large ear of corn.

Now, what was that Rex, the dog, had? For goodness sake—a bone, he had buried and kept for this very occasion. And now Tabby, the cat, not to be outdone, stepped proudly behind with a mouse.

All placed their contributions in the center of the open space, then the festivities began.

Johnny J. called the roll and each answered with some funny stunt. Tobe sang a solo, Beck danced, but the funniest part was, when they all got in a row, Johnny J., in the lead, each holding to the one in front, and all sang, "I Went to the Animal Fair".

George rolled over and over on the grass, to keep from laughing out loud.

Then they all halted around the supper. And how polite every one was, insisting on sharing with one another. Rex with a bow offered his bone to the cow, who with a "No, thank you", turned and offered some barley to the cat. "Thank you," she replied, "I'm well helped," and insisted that the sheep partake of her mouse.

"Oh, I cannot eat another bit!" the sheep said. "But how about that little boy over there in the grass? Has he had anything yet?"

Oh, horrors! thought George, would he have to eat the mouse if it were offered him?

The cat evidently didn't hear, as she swallowed the mouse herself.

Then Johnny J. spoke up. "Why, our young friend hasn't been served a thing!" And with that every one came forward and begged that he have some supper, but how in the world could he eat that stuff?

Johnny J. shook his head at him as much as to say: "You have to take some, anyway, it would be rude not to."

So George chewed a little barley and hoped no one saw him poke the rest under the grass.

After a little the rooster stepped out, flapped his wings three times, and crew long and loud. With that there was a scramble and everybody saying good-night and good-bye till next year, and what a grand time they had had.

"Jump up quick, we have to go now," said Johnny J. George got on his back and off they went back home. They went so fast that when the pony stopped over his head went George, and landed plump on the—he rubbed his head and, looked around. The sun was shining, the dog was lying on the step, the cow grazing as if she hadn't been up all night; and, yes, there was Johnny J. looking as if he never heard of a picnic in his life. Just then mother came out and saw her little boy sitting on the floor rubbing his head.

"I do believe my little boy went to sleep and fell out of the hammock," she said.

Why the Robin Says, "Cheer Up".

Many years ago in the cold Northland, there was a long, long winter. The people thought it would never end. Some said that spring had forgotten them. They did not think she could ever return. Every day they watched and waited, but they watched and waited all in vain. Then sickness came upon the people, and many died. Every one was sad. No, not every one, for the king of that country had a beautiful little daughter. Her name was Heartsease. This little princess was always bright and cheerful. She took a basket of food and clothing and visited all the sick people. Heartsease never gave up looking for spring. "Never mind," she would say, "spring is surely coming. Be brave and get well." Everyone loved the happy princess, and many got well again because of her smile.

One day the happy princess did not visit the sick, she did not come the next day, nor the next. Every one asked, "Where is the happy princess?" "What has become of our little Heartsease?" Some one answered, "Alas! the happy princess is ill." Sure enough Heartsease was ill. Every day she seemed to grow weaker. All the people were now very sad, as there was no one to say "Be brave". The doctor did all he could for her and said, "If spring would only come the happy princess might get well."

Now, where was spring all this time? She was far, far away in the South land. Spring was sorry she could not go to the Northland. She was very sorry she was late. But there was so much work for her in the south, and she could not leave until all was finished. One day spring called all her birds together. "Dear birds," she said, "the people in the cold Northland are very

"THE WONDER OF THE BOOK"

By

Dyson Hague

All lovers of the Bible will find in this book of 95 pp. one of the finest testimonies to the power and blessing of the Bible, as Dr. Griffith Thomas said. A Chinese missionary said that "The Wonder of the Book" was the clearest and most forceful thing of the kind he had found, and a lady valued it so highly than she bought one thousand copies to give to the missionaries and others in India. It has been translated into Chinese, Japanese, Syriac, Spanish, and is being translated into Malayalam in South India for the Syriac Church of Malabar. An American lady said she wished every minister in the world could read it.

It is most valuable for Sunday-school teachers, and for the young people in Bible classes, and makes a splendid gift for a teacher to give the members of a class, or a minister to his workers.

Its closing words are a summary of its substance and standard. "Think not of the Bible as a good book, or even as a better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love, far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, nay, more, as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; and, as St. Paul declares, inspired in totality. Read It Yourself. # The Church School in The Book of Common Prayer

By Bishop C. M. Beckwith

Bishop Winchester, of Little Rock, Ark., writes:

Having heard the late beloved and revered Bishop of Alabama lecture on The Book of Common Prayer, and having studied his Trinity Course on the same, I naturally felt a deep interest in his recently published booklets, 'The Church School in The Book of Common Prayer'. These I procured and have read, with the conviction that our Church needs just such courses for the children, who are not being properly instructed in the ways of the Church in our Church Schools. Teachers need the instruction as much as the scholars. Bishop Beckwith has clearly presented the Church as I learned in my young life, and for which I thank God in these days of drift and doubt.

In the House of Bishops, Bishop Beckwith, in my judgment, was the best informed student of The Prayer Book. When he spoke there was attention given to his words of wisdom. Having been closely in touch with him since boyhood days, I had learned to appreciate his true devotion and sound learning regarding The Evangelical Catholicity of our Protestant Episcopal Church. We shall sadly miss his counsel in the next General Convention. I feel that one of his splendid addresses on The Prayer Book at this time would be most helpful to all of his brethren. "He being dead yet speaketh" through his Course of Instruction, as published by "The Paragon Press," Montgomery, Ala. He has laid down the real principles of Churchmanship we should inculcate in the training of our young people at this time, when the opportunity is before us. I realize that the people of our great country are ready for the positive teaching regarding spiritual things as outlined in his books.

sad, I fear. They think that I shall never return to them. Will not one of my children fly to them and tell them I am coming?" "I will," sang Robin Redbreast, and away be flew.

When the robin reached the Northland all was very still. The little princess was very ill. The Robin Redbreast flew right to the king's palace and straight to the window of little Heartsease. "Cheer up, cheer up, cheer up," he sang in hs sweetest tones. The happy princess heard and smiled. She said, "Ah, I hear a robin. I know spring is coming; that is what the robin is trying to say." "Cheer up, cheer up, cheer up," came the robin again. "Yes, little robin, I will cheer up," said the happy princess, and she did. It was not long before the first mild breezes of spring came through the window. It was not long before the happy princess would sit up, and it was not long before spring herself was there. The skies that had been gray were blue. The trees that had been bare were now covered with beautiful green leaves. The people who had been ill were now well, and the world was bright and happy. The little princess was soon strong enough to gather the sweet violets, and the buttercups and daisies. Oh! how every one loved the little Robin Redbreast, and since that time the people never fret about spring; they always know she is on the way, because Robin Redbreast comes first and says, "Cheer up, cheer up, cheer up."—Isabelle Virginia Freeland.

Like rock house foundations, the essential quality of rock for monuments is durability. Other important qualities are beauty, legibility of inscriptions and adaptability to design. Granite is the only stone that fills these requirements, and many granites do not possess all these qualities.

is a true granite, as pure a granite as is known. It possesses all of the above essential qualities for the ideal memorial, and it contains less deleterious ingredients—iron, lime, water—than other granites It is, therefore, the most durable.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument your purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

RESOLUTIONS.

MISS MARY LEWIS CRENSHAW.

At a joint meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Ladies' Aid Society of Emmanuel Church, Rapidan, Va., on Friday, August 24, 1928, the following resolutions were ordered to be prepared and published in The Southern Churchman, and recorded in the Minutes of the Societies.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in His wisdom, and love, to call our beloved sister, MARY LEWIS CRENSHAW, from her labors in the Church Militant, to the rest and peace of Paradise; be it,

Resolved, That although her passing from us is an apparently irreparable loss not only to Emmanuel Church, but to our whole community; we cannot but realize that for her the change is indeed a happy one, for she daily endeavored to follow in the blessed steps of her Saviour's most holy life.

In all the activities of Emmanuel Church she was always keenly interested, and her leadership was as inspiring as it was exceptional.

In the community, the sorrows and sufferings of all the people ever touched a responsive chord in the sympathetic heart.

Above all, her deep spirituality of thought, her earnest devotion to our Lord in the worship of the church, and her practical Christianity have left an impression that will not be effaced from the memory of the present generation.

That to her sisters, Miss Fannie Crenshaw, and Mrs. Willis, and other members of her family, our loving sympathy is hereby tendered praying that our All-Loving Father will comfort and support them according to their several necessities.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Asheville, being designated as Director, and Judge Michael Schenck, of Hendersonville, the Chairman. This Executive Committee, with an Advisory Committee of prominent laymen of the Carolinas, has undertaken the task of carrying out the approved action of the Church by securing at least $100,000 for the purpose of purchasing approximately four hundred acres of beautiful Kanuga Estate, including Kanuga Lake, the Kanuga Lake Inn and all buildings and equipment, the same to be presented free of debt to a Board of Trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the use of the Church as a Religious, Educational and Conference Center.

The Season of 1928.

Pursuant to the offer of the Executive and Advisory Boards and the consent and approval of the Board of Trustees, the Lake Kanuga property has been used during the season of 1928 as a "demonstration" to the Church of the possibilities open to her through the acquiring of this property. The program has been sufficiently varied to attract a wide variety of patrons. Six conferences and camps have been held. The first for young people with over two hundred and fifty in attendance. This brought boys and girls over fourteen years of age to the Conference Center. The second conference was for Sunday-school workers and for women of the Auxiliary. In some cases these groups were combined for classes and inspirational meetings. Some sixty persons were in attendance at this second conference. During this same period, a camp for boys under fourteen years of age was held in tents across the lake; it numbered about sixty-five. Simultaneously, a camp for girls of the same age was held, the seventy-five girls attending being housed in the annexes of the Inn. Both boys and girls were given instruction during the forenoon of each day, the afternoons being devoted to various forms of exercise and recreation.

The last conference of the series was for the clergy. While only about twenty were in attendance, it was full of enthusiasm and interest. Plans were here made for a better organization for next year when a very much larger attendance is confidently expected.

From the middle of July through the month of August, the plant has been operated as a hotel. Guests have been registered from the Carolinas, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington, D. C., and even the mission field of China. Many are already planning to return next year with their families and friends, if the property is again being managed by the Episcopal Church on the same plan as this summer.

All this is but a part of the "demonstration" that the various camps and conferences can be carried on at practically no expense to the Church. Through the fees paid by those in attendance, and the profits derived from the operation of the plant as a hotel after the conferences are over. Should the property be acquired by the Church various adaptations and improvements will be made. Amongst these will be a camp for the junior girls, so that they may be housed in tents and the hotel and annexes may be used for adult work exclusively. Also an athletic ground will be constructed, suitable for baseball and track events and more tennis courts will also be added. This season the religious services have been held in a grove of trees on the mountain side near the Inn. Later, of course, some sort of a chapel will be constructed, funds for this purpose being already in course of collection.

A considerable interest has been shown by the near-by communities, especially in Hendersonville and Asheville, and those in charge feel more than satisfied with what has been accomplished this first season. In spite of the severe blow caused by the loss of the lake during the hotel period, no serious injury has been felt by the guests and, with one or two exceptions, they have remained and been satisfied in spite of the deprivation caused by the storms. Confidently do the management look forward to an even better record next season should it be found practicable to secure the property permanently.

Carolina Diocesan Cousin of Canterbury.

Much is being written at the present time anent the nomination of the Most Reverend and Right Honorable Cosmo Gordon Lang, Lord Bishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, to the Archbishopric of Canterbury. We are informed that the King has been pleased to approve this nomination and that, therefore, the Most Reverend and Right Honorable Cosmo Gordon Lang will be translated to the See of Canterbury, on November 12, when that See becomes vacant through the resignation of the present incumbent, the Most Reverend and Right Honorable Randall Thomas Davidson. Through this translation, the present Archbishop of York will become the Primate of All England, and consequently the titular head of the Anglican Communion.

Somewhat is also being written these days anent the reunion of the two dioceses of South Carolina, of which reunited diocese, should same be effected, the present Bishop of Upper South Carolina, the Right Rev. Kirkman George Finlay, D. D., would automatically become diocesan.

It will doubtless be of interest to the Anglican Communion, and especially to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, to know that Bishop Finlay, although born and reared in South Carolina, is third cousin to the Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang. A great-grandmother of the present Archbishop of York, on his maternal side, Hannah Struthers, wife of Archibald Buchanan, of "Berskimming", Argyllshire, Scotland, and a great-grandmother, on the paternal side, of Bishop Finlay, of Upper South Carolina, Janet Struthers, wife of Kirkman Finlay, of "Castle Toward", Argyllshire, Scotland, who represented Glasgow for twelve years in the British House of Commons, were sisters.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Episcopal Church Home.

The Diocese of Washington as host next fall will mean to some who come a place, a work with which to become better acquainted. A place to see and to visit. For all those, the Episcopal Church Home on Wisconsin Avenue will make a strong appeal. The Church Home, a place where Episcopalians in the sunset hours of life may be guests and receive the loving care of a real home, may be called the Baby Institution of the Diocese.

It was only on October 15, 1924, that the Home first opened its doors to accommodate five guests. This home was the gift of Mrs. Cornelius B. Jones, who asked the privilege of living there in this the nucleus of large accommodations to come, but formerly her own residence. In the less than four years since that time the family has been increased to thirty-one, and three other buildings or units have been added. These units are all attractive residences which have been acquired by an energetic, devoted group of workers. They have been more or less remodeled and made to connect with each other, so that the Home has naturally and almost automatically fallen into the much approved cottage system plan. The guests pay a small monthly sum which assists with the maintenance and at the same time gives them a home and loving care which they could not receive in any other place, without family and real home ties.

A debt of $30,000 is now carried, by the board, assumed because of the opportunity to buy the adjacent attractive houses, but the successful work of those in charge is indicated by the fact that last year $6,000 was paid on the principal, which had to be met. The next unit looked forward to by the board is one for aged couples and aged men. A large kitchen and dining room and a chapel are also needs, but none of these will be undertaken until the present debt is paid.

The entire working staff consists of a matron, a resident nurse, a cook, two maids and one man servant. A staff of physicians give their services to the home and a clergyman of the diocese is appointed chaplain. The late Rev. James H. W. Blake served as chaplain from the opening of the Home until his death last April, and was much beloved by all the guests of the Home. The Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Blake, with the Rev. Mr. Purdew as his assistant. Each month a Communion service is held in the Home and once a year a service for the Board of Governors and Managers and Home family is held at the Home.

Monthly entertainments are provided at the Home by the Committee of the Board of Lady Managers in charge, and these entertainments vary from music and lectures, to just real fun provided by friends of the Home.

The Board of Managers numbers one hundred and thirty-five, representing thirty-one parishes. Perhaps because of the worthiness and appeal of the work, or perhaps because youth is always enthusiastic and this is the Baby Institution, or again perhaps because of the energy, fire and spirit of its head, Mrs. William Channing Johnson, the Episcopal Church Home is doing ever widening and better work and is meeting with a remarkable response and success, as it goes forward in its care of those of the Church, who so keenly need in their declining years a Home in its best meaning.

Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia

Including Stonewall Jackson's Operations in the Shenandoah Valley 1861-65.

By VIVIAN MINOR FLEMING,
Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

Full account of every battle, and approaches to the same, by the State Highway.

MIRACLES AND THE INTELLECT

He who allows his belief in miracles to be reasoned away or even shaken, by professedly scientific arguments, is, to say the least of it, sadly lacking in perspicacity and would do well to test his conception of an Almighty God, and find out what he really does believe. God is miracle, and he who does not believe in miracles does not believe in God, even though he believes that he believes in Him; that is to say, he is mentally too weak to grasp both. A miracle cannot be grasped by the intellect any more than a sunbeam can be grasped with the hand; it must be seen by and in the spirit. For this reason SMALL NATURES have in all times been inclined to ridicule the idea of a miracle just because it goes beyond their horizon, while in all ages and nations there have been GREAT, DEEP-THINKING and clear-sighted men who believe it.

"LAUNCH OUT."

In days long gone God spake unto our sires:
"Courage! Launch out! A new world build for me!"
Then to the deep they set their ships, and sailed
And came to land, and prayed that here might be
A realm from pride and despotism free,
A place of peace, the home of liberty.
Lo, in these days, to all good men and true
God speaks again: "Launch out upon the deep
And win for me a world of righteousness!"
Can we, free men, at such an hour still sleep.
O God of Freedom, stir us in our night
That we set forth, for justice, truth and right.

"THE WONDER OF THE BOOK"

By

Dyson Hague

All lovers of the Bible will find in this book of 95 pp. one of the finest testimonies to the power and blessing of the Bible, as Dr. Griffith Thomas said. A Chinese missionary said that "The Wonder of the Book" was the clearest and most forceful thing of the kind he had found, and a lady valued it so highly than she bought one thousand copies to give to the missionaries and others in India. It has been translated into Chinese, Japanese, Syriac, Spanish, and is being translated into Malayalam in South India for the Syriac Church of Malabar. An American lady said she wished every minister in the world could read it.

It is most valuable for Sunday-school teachers, and for the young people in Bible classes, and makes a splendid gift for a teacher to give the members of a class, or a minister to his workers.

Its closing words are a summary of its substance and standard. "Think not of the Bible as a good book, or even as a better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love, far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, nay, more, as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; and, as St. Paul declares, inspired in totality. Read It Yourself. Send It to Others.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Those who believe themselves beaten are beaten.

"He who would gather roses must not fear thorns."

Let us not pass our lives in regretting the past, complaining of the present, and indulging false hopes of the future.

"Real happiness is cheap enough, yet how dearly we pay for its counterfeit!"

When death, the great Reconciler, has come, it is never our Tenderness we repent of, but our severity.—George Eliot.

Where we are ignorant, God is wise; where we stand blindly in the dark, He is in the light.

There are problems of life beyond the power of man to exhaust, and in that certainty of uncertainty, it is our privilege to rest. The human may and ought to repose as calmly before a confessed and unconquerable difficulty as before a confessed and discovered truth.—Dean Stanley.

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire that in the heart resides;
The spirit trembles and is still,
In mystery the soul abides.
But tasks in hours of insight willed
Can be through hours of gloom fulfilled."

If you can help it, don't be pious and dry, but pious and cheery; for "the trees of the Lord are full of sap."—Preesford.

"We never stand before God alone, but always in the fellowship of love with all His saints."

Make the place of your daily toil the scene of your Christian service! Bear your brave and faithful witness as you go about your daily business!—J. D. Jones.

Cloud of the Cross, Light of the Crown,
With even and morn my path beset,
Let pride on Calvary's steep lie down,
Let faith arise on Olivet.
—George Matheson.

Whether we be successful or whether we fail is not a matter which concerns us. It is often the failure of the good which have done more for the advance of mankind than their successes. The purpose is in the hands of God. It is ours to do our duty, and generally the duty for any one is clear if we will only be prepared to be loyal to the principles with which we have been inspired. —Bishop of Gloucester (England).

A COMMON SENSE SUGGESTION

On page four hundred and ninety-five of the August 11 issue of The Living Church is an open letter from the Rev. Arthur W. Farnum, of Asheville, N. C., addressed to the Editor of that paper.

The letter is captioned, "A Pessimistic View", but we prefer to call it "A Common Sense Suggestion".

While Mr. Farnum is somewhat caustic in his reference to the "rank and file of the Church", and while we cannot and do not agree with his estimate of those who oppose the present revision, yet in loving charity and utmost good-will, we forgive him, realizing, as does he, that the present controversy raging within the Church is bound to develop a tendency to harsh criticism of one's opponents. However, we both can and do thank Mr. Farnum for his eminently sane, sensible and wholly practical suggestion, to-wit: "Let us drop the whole matter" (of Prayer Book revision), believing with him that the adoption of this suggestion will prove to be the "balm of Gilead" that will heal the ever-widening breach developing within the Church.

It is evident to all men that the present revision cannot be satisfactorily completed this year. Every school of thought within the Church is dissatisfied with it as indicated by the editorials, articles and open letters appearing each week in our various Church papers.

Even the staunchest advocates of the revision are agreed that certain further changes are imperatively necessary. The Prayer Book Commission, we are informed, sought to cure certain of these defects by invoking its power to "edit". As pointed out by our contemporary of The Living Church, this is a dangerous expedient. We cannot afford to establish the precedent of permitting a Commission to thus exercise the "legislative functions" pertaining exclusively to the General Convention.

Certainly none are so eager for this revision that they are willing to override the Constitution of the Church by permitting a Commission, created by that body, to encroach upon the prerogative of the General Convention. "Let everything be done decently and in order."

Peace will not come by the simple expedient of arbitrarily closing the revision and riding rough-shod over those who oppose it. Nor yet will the suggestion to publish a revised book now and a further edition three years hence meet the situation or pave the road to peace.

Neither will peace be promoted by retaining the Thirty-nine Articles in the revised Book for the revised Office in some cases lay the foundation for the teaching of Doctrines that repudiate both the letter and the spirit of the Articles.

Any conflict between the Offices and the Articles will result in a continuing uncertainty concerning the Faith and Practice of the Church. This uncertainty will accentuate, not remove, the controversial spirit already alive and fan afresh the flames of bitterness and strife we all are anxious to quench.

As Mr. Farnum states, "The mass of the Church is not ready for Prayer Book revision". And WHY should they be?

The 1892 Prayer Book had been in use only twenty-one years when this revision was initiated. Surely it is entitled to a longer life than that. Revision at such short intervals does not tend to stability of thought and is detrimental to the best interests of the Church, fomenting a spirit of controversy and partisan strife and bitterness that can easily be avoided by "dropping the subject of Prayer Book revision entirely".

It is true that individuals and groups within the Church, in defiance of her age-long historic position on such questions of Faith and Practice, are today "Praying for the Dead" and teaching the inseparably associated and allied doctrines of Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, Mariolatry, Masses for the Dead, etc., but why arbitrarily impose upon the whole Church prayers, practices and doctrines which are repugnant to them, which will offend the tender consciences of many faithful, loyal, devoted Prayer Book Churchmen, and which they are not prepared to accept.

It must be plain to the members of our General Convention, both Bishops and Deputies that any attempt to railroad through this revision in the midst of a heated controversy will be fraught with disastrous consequences. The "rank and file of the Church are not ready for Prayer Book revision", and are in no mood to be driven.

In the interests of peace and harmony, we appeal to the Bishops and Deputies of the General Convention, shortly to assemble, to "drop this whole subject of Prayer Book revision".

Firmly persuaded that this is the only common sense solution of the situation now confronting the Church and that its adoption will automatically foster the development of the spirit of love, charity and Christian fellowship among us and pave the way for a reconciliation between the parties to this controversy which is daily increasing in bitterness, we urge all other groups in the Church to join us in this appeal.

Using the Prayer Book of 1892, all interests within the Church have grown and developed. That Book has been the outward and visible symbol of unity that has held together groups widely divergent in thought and practice. It has had a short life—all too short. Let's give it a longer lease on life. Destroy that symbol and you will destroy the spirit of unity behind it. Retain it, and the Church will grow and thrive as never before and generations yet to come will sing as we have sung:

"We are not divided,
All one Body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

Let's keep the 1892 Book. Let's cling to the faith of the fathers. Let's drop the whole matter of Prayer Book revision.

MIRACLES

Few of us realize that we live in and are parts of a miracle more stupendous than any of those of which The Holy Scriptures tell us. "Miracle" is defined in the dictionaries as something contrary to and apart from human experience and the course of nature. The definition is timid and inadequate. The radio as we have it or a man flying a hundred and fifty miles an hour in the air would have been an inconceivable miracle fifty years ago, according to that definition, contrary to all human experience, as then known, and to the course of nature. Yet both are easily explicable by natural laws and human contrivance and science.

Both human experience and the course of nature say we human beings may not fear nor love, more than a moment or so, anything unless we can see or hear or touch or feel or smell it. So it is with all other animals, to which we are akin in our bodies. Yet, man from his beginning, has had conception and perfection of the supernatural, of a Supreme, Controlling, All Mighty Power undiscoverable to the senses, known only to and by the mysterious something within him. The evolutionists do not tell us from which fish or reptile or mammal we derive it, nor how.

The conception has been debased with man's debasement. Attempts to translate, or express, it in visible forms have been made through the ages, that worship might see its object, from the beautiful marble representations of Jupiter and Minerva and Mercury by the high artists of Greece and Rome to the cows and crocodiles of Egypt and the hideous misshapen wood and stone images of the lowest savages. As sensuality grew from increasing riches, ease and idleness and the arrogance of spreading conquests and power, the deities of the dominant nations were divested of divinity, in popular imagination, desecrated and degraded more and more with the worst and coarsest of human faults and passions until Olyumpus ceased to be the serene home of ideals of majesty, strength, wisdom, superhuman manly and womanly virtues, became the scene of the villainies, vices and intrigues of dissolute gods and goddesses.

One race, comparatively obscure, poor, weak and remote, sometimes enslaved, many times disloyal, infected with moral diseases, clung through more centuries than we know to faith in an Almighty, All-Wise, Immaculate, Merciful and Loving Creator and Universal Father, after every lapse returned to humble and penitent worship of Him. This people provided the imperishable and only record of its own vicissitudes and wanderings, the punishments justly inflicted, its humble acknowledgments of its own treasons and sins, the forgiveness accorded it, the mercies bestowed, the deliverances, sufferings and triumphs, achievements and humiliations. King and emperors planned and instructed for the extinction of this race, conquered it, slew its young, carried its old into captivity, destroyed its cities and temples, scattered it afar. From the uttermost parts of the then known earth and from many varying conditions the members of this race were held together by the one invisible, soundless bond, the communion of their souls united in prayer and adoration to the Jehovah in whom they believed. When the race was subjugated, despised, driven, divided into groups and colonies separated from each other by vast distances and obstacles, came to its ancestral home land a Being in form of man who died in agonies and amid vituperations, insults and humiliations, young, as we count human life, who taught and preached in His own country three or four years and whose Name and Spirit and Words and teachings rule, after more than nineteen hundred years, a world many times wider than those who lived in His time dreamed, the human race many times multiplied.

Wherever the flags of the earth's conquering, dominant, most powerful, nations fly the Cross stands near. The flags proclaim valor and victory, the glorious courage which in the cruel crucible of defeat has made inspiration to new and more noble endeavor, from the bitter herbs of disaster has distilled higher aspiration and purpose, from adversity gathered the jewel of finer achievement, from the errors of one day acquired wisdom for the next. Each of these mighty nations, the mightiest of all grown on soil and from peoples unknown to Judea, give reverence and worship to the same Jehovah, never seen by any man, who was worshipped as the Supreme and Omnipotent by the obscure and wandering tribe of so many thousands of years ago—and for the gods of Greece and Rome, Babylon and Assyria and Egypt, there are no believers and no worshippers. Each of these ruling, master, nations of now accepts the Cross, instrument of long agony and public shame, as the symbol of its sweetest, dearest, highest hopes, the human life finished on it and the Redemption begun and accomplished on it as the promise for mankind here and in the hidden hereafter.

Grovelling materialistic philosophers, compressing their minds to government and limitations of the senses, laboriously attempting to reduce us to the level of accidentally amplified and slightly improved animals, with enlarged capacities for harm, try to tell us that in this belief and faith, living through so many centuries of changes and development, there is no meaning. They scoff, through feeble, purblind vision, at the events of the present, the fast prevailing Spirit of the Sufferer on the Cross, the wonderfully swift progress toward fulfillment of the Annunciation promise of peace on earth and good-will among all men. Those who look at the facts straightly and honestly, who consider history and reason from the knowledge we have, must see a continuing and magnificent miracle—not only departure from the ordinary course of nature and human tendencies and experience, as we know of nature and humanity, and from the guidance of the senses, but distinct, unquestionable evidence of Power beyond our comprehension. As Addison wrote of the stars in the firmament, so we may regard the past and present as constituting the greatest miracle of all, the long continuing miracle, to reason's ear rejoicing, telling of purposes with which our imaginations may be enraptured but above the compass of our thought; of Supreme Benevolence by which all our faithful prayers shall be answered, we may not know how nor when; of cure and bountiful blessings and fulfilment of promises by Him to whom a thousand years are as yesterday and a watch in the night.

WALKING WITH GOD.

Who walks with God must take His way
Across far distances and gray
To goals that others do not see,
Where others do not care to be.
Who walks with God must have no fear
When danger and defeat appear,
Nor stop when every hope seems gone,
For God, our God, moves ever on.

Who walks with God must press ahead
When sun or cloud is overhead,
When all the waiting thousands cheer,
Or when they only stop to sneer:
When all the challenge leaves the hours
And naught is left but jaded powers.
But he will some day reach the dawn,
For God, our God, moves ever one.

THE TUBERCULOSIS PRAYER LEAGUE

WILL YOU PRAY FOR A CURE FOR TUBERCULOSIS—

THIS call to prayer is sent to all nations by The Tuberculosis Prayer League (an undenomination fellowship of daily prayer). Headquarters, Catawba Sanatorium, Virginia, U. S. A. Motto: "For Christ and the Healing of the Nations".

Thus saith Christ the Son of the Living God: "Without Me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5). Also, "If ye keep My commandments ye shall abide in My love" (John 15: 10). We have every reason to believe that if we keep God's Commandments and try to meet His requirements that He will heal our bodies.

The Bible clearly reveals that distress of nations such as pestilence and famine is to turn the people from unbelief, disobedience and sin ,and draw them closer to God (2 Chron. 7:13-14; Hosea 5:15, 6:10; Eph. 5:6; Zech. 8:21; Luke 13:1-5; Numbers 21:4-8; John 3:14-15; 12:32). The way provided is faith in Jesus Christ and prayer in His Name (John 14:6, 13; Matt. 9:2-6; Mark 10:46-52).

In sincere repentance and with His help let us put away irreverence, indifference and sin and unitedly bow before God. Let us read the Bible praying in Jesus' Name for the Holy Spirit to teach us and prepare us to serve (John 14: 26; 15:7). By doing this we will find the answer to our insistent "Why"? (Note John 15:2.) Affliction becomes a crown of victory when we let it increase our loyalty to God and our love for one another (Rom. 5:3; Heb. 10:35; 36, 38). Let us Like Paul "Thank God and take courage" (Acts 28:15).

God's Word shows us how to win. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33). That is, make following Christ's example and teaching the first thing in life and everything that is necessary for our material and physical welfare will be made available to us. In accordance with this clear teaching the purpose of the Prayer League is twofold.

First: To glorify God.

Second: To bring united, persevering prayer to the support of medicine, scientific research, anti-tuberculosis organizations and all sufferers to aid them in their efforts to conquer tuberculosis; that the people may "bear witness", and finish the work God gave them to do. (See Mark 13:34; Luke 9:2; Luke 10:2; Mark 5:18-19.)

Christ provided for united prayer and gave a special promise concerning it to those who desire to obey Him. "Again I say unto you that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in Heaven; for where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:19, 20).

We are also told, "Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed" (James 5:16).

Pledge of Membership in the Tuberculosis Prayer League:

> I will earnestly endeavor to observe eleven o'clock every morning, or once daily, for silent united prayer in which I will ask the Father in the name of Jesus Christ for the outpouring of His blessing upon every effort to combat tuberculosis; that a more effectual remedy may be added to us, and every sufferer shall be given strength to "overcome" according to His will.

While we pray let us thankfully and conscientiously use every available means for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis; helping the battle against it in every way we can. God will finish the work He has begun. (Note Jas. 1:17; 2:15-22.)

Extension of the prayer depends on the love of God in those who learn of it. Tell others, especially victims of tuberculosis and those interested in them. Also interest churches, missionaries, schools and organizations. Ask them to join us in our petition, broadcast the message, translate it into other languages and send to mission stations and to the press (Matt. 28:19-20; Mark 10:49).

If you are connected with a tuberculosis institution, please notify us if you have a Chapter of the Prayer League there. If not, ask the patients to join in the prayer, sending the appeal where you cannot go in person, and telling new ones as they come. Plead for the prayer bell—just the same old sanatorium bell—to be rung at a definite time daily, as a reminder of the united prayer.

Suggestions for founding a Chapter of the Prayer League will be gladly sent you. Kindly send your signature of membership, also names of all who join you in the promise to try to pray daily until a curative remedy is proven, and thanks returned to God. No funds are solicited in any way.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by L. C. C., of Richmond, Va.:

> "To be spiritual minded is life and peace" (Rom. 8:6).

CROWNED OR CRUCIFIED.

I stood alone at the bar of God,
In the hush of the twilight dim,
And faced the question that pierced my heart:
"What will you do with Him?
Crowned or crucified? which shall it be?"
No other choice was offered me.

I looked on the face so marred with tears,
That were shed in His agony.
The look in His kind eye broke my heart,
'Twas full of love for me,
"The crown or the cross," is seemed to say;
"For or against me—choose thou today."

He held out His loving hands to me.
While He pleadingly said, "Obey;
Make me Thy choice for I love Thee so.
And I could not say Him nay.
Crowned, not crucified, thus it must be;
No other way was open to me.

I knelt to tears at the feet of Christ,
In the hush of the twilight dim,
And all that I was, or hoped, or sought,
Surrendered unto Him.
Crowned, not crucified, my heart shall know
No king but Christ who loveth me so.

—Burning Bush.

A QUIET PLACE.

'Mid all the traffic of the ways—
Turmoils without, within—
Make in my heart a quiet place,
And come and dwell therein!

—A little shrine of quietness,
All sacred to Thyself,
Where Thou shalt all my soul possess
And I may find myself;

—A little place of mystic grace,
Of self and sin swept bare,
Why I may look into Thy face,
And talk with Thee in prayer.

Come!—occupy my silent place,
And make Thy dwelling there!
More grace is wrought in quietness
Than any is aware.

THE LOVE OF THE SPIRIT

By Kenneth Mackenzie

HAVING considered the fruit of the Spirit in its rounded wholesomeness as defined by the Apostle in Gal. 5:22, 23, we now turn to the phase of the truth discerned in the manner of its bestowment. This is not an objective process; the gift cannot be divorced from the Giver. In this lies a vital distinction. When Henry Drummond issued his winsome challenge to Christian love in the memorable essay, "The Greatest Thing in the World", countless unregenerated persons at once avowed, "If that is all there is of Christianity, we may all have it", and forthwith proceeded to establish themselves in this new and easy-going avenue of life. But they assumed the love he was espousing to be a cultivation by the sheer force of will-dedication. The subtlety of this situation was, to many of us, perilous because the foundation of the love of which the Apostle was dilating in First Corinthians thirteen, and from which Drummond took his text, was and is an essential faith in the Son of God as the medium through whom alone the gift could be conferred. That love has its point and pith in the inexhaustible love of God for a lost world, demonstrated in the gift of God's Son to be the Redeemer. The Apostle was directing his words to believers, who had accepted all the counsel of God (Acts 20:27), through penitence for sin and faith in the salvation from sin provided by the Lord Jesus. St. Paul was not offering suggestions about love to those who had refused to acknowledge the sovereignty of the Redeemer, but to the family of God. And this was Drummond's position as well. He did not for a moment suspect that the effect of his plea to living Christians would be so misinterpreted. But the giddy world, the highly moral, the religiously curious reversed the divine order and thought to pluck from the tree of Christian virtues, this especial fruit of the Spirit, regardless of the fact that it could not belong to any but those who are partakers of the entire life of the tree.

We are beset by a baffling perplexity all about us in the lives of those who aspire to exhibit in such lives this manifestation of the fruit of the Spirit, which is the most plausible to human nature, the most facile of expression. The demand is pressed upon us, "Why should not these excellent folk, who shame many Christians by their exemplary lives, be uncounted in the sight of God"? He alone can answer that; it is not within our province. All we know is that there is a life "hid with Christ in God", the source of which is the Cross of Calvary, the unction of which is the resurrection of the Son of God, the possession of which comes alone from the illumination of that Holy Spirit which He promised and did send into the world on that long-ago Pentecost. We have no disposition to establish a philosophy as to the status of those who repudiate the method by which the Lord Jesus leads His willing ones into the world of spiritual union with Himself. They may speculate, throw out their intellectual deductions, defy any contradiction of their postulate that the man who does not have faith in Christ as a Saviour is just as good as the man who does. We must be silent; we know what we believe; and simple as unquestioning children we abide in our Father's order for us. We are guileless enough to know what the love of the Spirit is, to the exclusion of any controversy as to who does not have it. We are not concerned with the counterfeit, while we have the joy of the possession of the genuine.

Let us be certified that this is by no means a position of self-righteousness. The very Spirit whom we honor as the spring of our new life forbids such an attitude. Humility becomes us. Any other frame would be a grief to Him. And the very fact that we sense danger is proof to us that we have His indwelling. For He cannot permit the gendering of pride in the possession of the gifts which are in His province to bestow.

So then, the fruit of the Spirit, demonstrated in love, the love which is His own essential quality, must proceed from vital union with Him. And the fruit of that life may not be appropriated separately from Him as the very life which we live. He will not, cannot humor us in looking for things when He has brought us to a place where He Himself is revealed to us as the exclusive prize. The inherent character of our holy faith is that it involves a passion for a Person. As an ethical system, Christianity may be commended by those who look upon it from the viewpoint of cold, self-generated criticism, or a warm appreciation of the life and character of the Founder. The man in Christ is the man who cries in exultant conquest, "For to me to live is Christ". But that forbids such a man to look for anything apart from the Provider. Therefore one cannot have a loving spirit unless there is union with Himself, the personification of love. Our Lord can have no portion with those who claim to have been coworkers with Him in self-appointed fellowships. Scathingly has He uttered His pronunciamento to all such (Matt. 7: 21-23), "I never knew you". He has shown us the door; and He minces no words in His description of those who would imitate His way and deny Him (John 10:1-10). He can no more avoid this seeming arrogance than He can nullify the processes by which, in the good pleasure of God, He has become the One pre-eminent (Col. 1:18). And we stand loyally with Him in this. If the highly moral, who would have the gospel without the Cross and all that follows the Cross, audaciously holding to the standard that the love they show to the world must be as commendable as that which we would vindicate as the fruits of the Spirit, present an unanswerable contention, we look alone to Him. There is nothing in us. There is everything in Him.

Therefore, the love of the Spirit is a divinely imparted quality. While we may bless God for the manifestation of love, human-wise that seeks by all means to alleviate suffering, to uplift a fallen world, to inspire with high ideals the sincere seekers after truth, we know what we have believed; wherein we stand; how strong is our confidence; how sure our inheritance. And we accept the test of the love of the Spirit furnished by the Apostle in the catalogue of dispositions enumerated in the matchless thirteenth of First Corinthians: It was a love, which like the Lord the Giver, suffers long; and is kind, as it suffers (Gal. 5:22; Luke 6:35); envies not (Luke 12:15); makes no parade (Matt. 11:28-30); is not puffed up (Luke 14:11); is not rude (Eph. 5:1, 2); is not selfish (John 4:34; 6:38; 8:29); is not easily provoked (2 Cor. 10:1-5); bears no malice (Eph. 4:31, 32); rejoices not in wrong-doing (1 Cor. 6:9-11); rejoices in the truth (John 14:6); knows how to be silent (Matt. 26:63); is trustful (Mark 11:22); is hopeful (Rom. 11:13); is patient (Rom. 15:5); is enduring (1 Peter 1:6-9); never fails (1 Cor. 13:4-8).

Therefore, when we speak of the love of the Spirit, as a part of the fruitage of His indwelling, we conclude that love is an indissoluble part of Himself. He can never be anything else. The love of the Spirit (Rom. 15:30) is not a divine provision, as one would take from a stock of earthly materials. He Himself is love; and having Him we are made partakers of Himself, for all that He can be to us and for us. And He gives us Himself that through our eyes He may look upon a world hungry for His love; that through our members He may serve a needy humanity, radiating through our contacts with others the inestimable light of His unquenchable love for a lost world and His unspeakable devotion to all who are the lovers of the Son of God.

GET A TRANSFER.

If you're on the gloomy line,
Get a transfer;
If you're inclined to fret and pine,
Get a transfer;
Get off the track of doubt and gloom,
Get on the sunshine train, there's room;
Get a transfer.
If you're on the Worry train,
Get a transfer;
You mustn't stay there and complain,
Get a transfer;
Get a transfer;
The Cheerful cars are passing through,
And there's lots of room for you,
Get a transfer.

UNIVERSAL PEACE.

We sleep and wake and sleep, but all things move
The sun flies forward to his brother suns;
The dark earth follows—wheeled in his eclipse;
And human things, returned on themselves,
Move onward, leading up the golden year.

Fly, happy, happy sails, and bear the press;
Fly happy with the mission of the cross;
Knit land to land, and blowing heavenward
With silks and fruits and spices, clear of toll,
Enrich the markets of the golden year.

But we grow old—Ah! when shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land
And like a lane of heaven across the sea
Through all the circle of the golden year!

—Alfred Tennyson.

THE LAST RESORT OF OPPONENTS OF CHRISTIAN MARAIAGE

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D.

Secretary of the Sanctity of Marriage Association.

1. The Witness of the New Testament "Mutilated, Unhistorical, and False".

THE latest illustration of the extreme to which the opponents of the indissoluble character of Christian marriage are driven is a bold attack on the accuracy of St. Mark's account of Christ's teaching in 10:2-12, and incidentally that of St. Paul and St. Luke, by a prominent clergyman of the Church of England (Divorce and Nullity, by Dr. R. H. Charles, Archdeacon of Westminster, T. and T. Clark, Edinburgh, 1927).

The particular purpose of this volume is to "prove", from St. Matt. 5:32 and 19:9, (1) that "fornication" in the same sentence with "adultery", means adultery; and (2), that "when the husband is disloyal to his wife, or the wife to her husband, the marriage is ipso facto dissolved"; and "the state in issuing the decree of divorce is not putting asunder those whom God hath joined together, but is only recognizing the already existing fact, that, by the disloyalty of either or both, the persons in question have already put themselves asunder" (Pp. 2, 3).

Without going into the special pleading with which the author reaches this conclusion, it is only necessary to call attention to the extraordinary dogmatic way in which this thesis is "proved". It is little less, in fact, than a series of unsubstantiated assertions that St. Mark's account of our Lord's words in 10:2-12, dealing with the same incident as that recorded by St. Matthew in 19:3-9, is entirely wrong, "mutilated, distorted, untrustworthy, unhistorical and false, obviously rewritten to prove a dogma" (passim). A few quotations, strung together, as they are, by a slender thread of argument, will show the short and easy way in which this is made "obvious".

"Let us now compare the narratives in the first two Gospels which are so hopelessly at variance on this question" (p. 6):

"These eight verses (Matt. 19:3-9) ought not to be taken in connection with the three that follow (10-12)" (p. 8).

"The question put by the Pharisees is authentic in Matthew, but unhistorical in Mark—and put in a form impossible for any sane and self-respecting Jew" (p. 9).

Referring to the question of the Pharisees, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause"? the author writes, "In Mark this question has been mutilated, and the form in which it has been transmited is unhistorical and false" (p. 10).

"In this much edited and distorted narrative in Mark these words make it clear, etc." (p. 15).

"Mark's narrative contains another misrepresentation of fact is ascribing to Christ the wholly gratuitous and unhistorical statement that the wife was not to divorce her husband" (p. 17). "It is unhistorical," he adds, "in other respects. First, it contains another gross mis-statement of facts. Second, it assigns to the Pharisee words which were uttered by Christ, and assigns to Christ words which were used by the Pharisees" (p. 17).

"The disordered text of Mark compared with the clear and logical order of Matthew. The former untrustworthy from start to finish" (p. 22).

"But we have not yet exhausted Mark's inaccuracies . . . Mark represents our Lord as weakly asking, 'What did Moses command you'?" (p. 24).

"Thus the entire narrative in Mark is false in its statement of fact, and hopelessly feeble in its style" (p. 25).

In his "Summary of conclusions", Dr. Charles writes: "It is my aim to show that Matthew deliberately (italicized in p. 6) rejected the narrative in Mark as unhistorical", and that his report of Christ as teaching "that marriage was indissoluble under all circumstances", was due to a "falsifier of the text"; and that "it follows that there is no evidence in the Gospels of any kind to prove that marriage is indissoluble" (Pp. 30, 31, 34). Again, he writes, "The conclusion that the bond of marriage is severed by disloyalty is (apart from the untrustworthy record in Mark 10:2-12), that of the entire New Testament (First, Third and Fourth Evangelists, and 1 Cor.)" (p. 4, note).

He is forced to confess indeed that "the aim of the Second Evangelist is clearly to prove that, according to the teaching of Christ, marriage is absolutely indissoluble" (p. 31).

He confesses also, that the statement of St. Luke (16:18), the most scholarly and historically accurate of all the Evangelists, "standing alone and severed (why "severed"?) from its context, could be taken as declaring the indissolubility of marriage". He tries his best also to get rid of the plain teaching of St. Paul, whose record is earlier than the earliest of the Evangelists, when he writes, "Not I command, but the Lord (Jesus)", that the separated wife must "remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband" (1 Cor. 7:11). Then, with strange inconsistency, he confesses this to be "a true logion, a true saying of our Lord", while he proceeds to becloud with a wholly irrelevant argument about the Jewish law (though the Apostle, like St. Mark, is writing for Gentiles) which allowed a woman to forsake her husband, but not to divorce him (Pp. 32, 21, 22, 28).

So, after getting rid, by this short and easy method of St. Paul, St. Luke and St. Mark, Dr. Charles finds in St. Matthew, with its "except for fornication", and his deliberate rejection of the Marcan record (p. 6), that marriage is only a contract, subject ipso facto to instant dissolution, "when there is an absolute breach of its essential conditions" (p. 2); "and that the guitless has the right to contract a fresh marriage" (Pp. 4, 5).

2. Two False Assumptions.

(1) As to the first assumption, it is true that fornication and adutlery are synonymous. Both passages testify plainly that adultery is only used to define the sin of a married person, or of an unmarried person who marries one who is divorced. In St. Matt. 15:19, also St. Mark 7:21 and 1 Cor. 6:9, the two words are used in the same sentence, as they are used here, in evident contrast or contra-distinction. Adultery in a loose way may be called fornication as including all illicit intercourse, even incest (1 Cor. 5:1). But fornication of itself can no more be forced to mean adultery than to mean incest.

It was only carelessness, and haste, and lack of scholarship in the General Convention of 1868 that permitted "fornication" in St. Matthew to be transformed into "adultery" in the canon. If the word "fornication" had been put there as the first premise of all that follows, the falsity of the argument would have been so evident, that the fatal proviso and exception would have been removed long ago.

(2) As to the second assumption, it needs only to be said that, whether "except it be for fornication" be our Lord's own words, or else the editorial explanation of a Jewish editor of the first or second century, for the benefit of Jewish readers, it cannot possibly be made to mean permission for re-marriage for either innocent or guilty. For, while the grammatical construction definitely allows "putting away" under certain circumstances, as does St. Paul, it just as definitely condemns re-marriage as adultery.

We have then in this little book of less than one hundred pages, of which only thirty-four are devoted to "Divorce", a long series of unsupported assertions and assumptions, concerning which the whole Church of the first three centuries was living in absolute ignorance, as shown both by her definite teaching and by her discipline. It was to that age, when the unwritten tradition of "the mind of Christ" from the lips of Apostolic and sub-Apostolic men, and the written tradition of at least two of those centuries, was fresh and clear, that our English reformers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries confidently appealed for confirmation of the faith. That also is our only safe rule of interpretation today.

Yet it is this series of assumptions which the author makes the basis of his final and sweeping assertion that "the narrative in Mark stands alone, and is unhistorical, being obviously written to prove a dogma". And then he adds: "This dogma, therefore, is a human fiction (p. 34)". This kind of criticism of a Greek text that has stood the test of 1,800 years, especially of the keen, and often hostile, scrutiny and research of the last hundred years, suggests rather the methods of the butcher than of the skilled hand of the surgeon, or the thoughtful diagnosis of the physician. It may be safely left, however, to the sane and unprejudiced judgment of humble disciples of our Lord to decide upon its merits.

For those who are so fortunate as to possess a copy of Archbishop Alexander's "Leading Ideals of the Gospels", it would be enlightening to read there the many remarkable signs of accuracy, "the life-like details" which are found only in St. Mark, in spite of his Gospel being the briefest of all; a very "picture gallery of memory" of the looks and feelings, and even the thoughts of Christ (Chapter 3). And this is the Gospel that is singled out as bearing false witness to Him![1]

It is to be remembered that St. Mark, the author of the earliest of the four Gospels, was the nephew of St. Barnabas, and that the home of his mother, Mary, was the centre of Christian life in Jerusalem, while the Apostles were still gathering there (Col. 4:10; Acts 12:12). He was an early companion of St. Barnabas and St. Paul (Acts 12:25), and later, companion and beloved "son" of St. Peter (1 Pet. 5: 13), the friend of his mother in his youthful days in Jerusalem. All early tradition testifies, and internal evidence confirms the fact, that it was directly under the eye and preaching of St. Peter that he wrote the story of our Lord's life and teaching. (See Eusebius 2:14 and 6:14.)

Such criticism, if applied to other things besides divorce, the divinity of our Lord for instance, would soon leave us, not merely the rags and remnants of what St. John calls "The Everlasting Gospel", but no Gospel at all—a merely human and fallible Christ, and a new and easy morality adapted to the low and selfish desires and fancies of the moment.

3. "Companionate Marriage" Unintentionally but Logically Stimulated and Taught by the Canon.

This process of Dr. Charles is so easy. With the witness of St. Mark "proved" to be "mutilated, distorted, untrustworthy, unhistorical, a human fiction, and false", the central fortress is taken, and victory is complete. Thus, "the whole problem of divorce" under consideration by the Joint Commission of 1925 is simplified. It is not now the interpretation of an apparently, but not really, obscure "exception" in St. Matthew that is at stake, but rejection or acceptance of the text of the New Testament as it has stood against the attacks of unbelievers and real critics alike, for eighteen centuries.

It is well that this challenge should be made thus openly, and that, not only the great Council of our own Church, but "all who believe and call themselves Christians", should understand the REAL ISSUE. They must choose one or other of two things: Either (1) "The Everlasting Gospel", the only Gospel that we have, with its unchanging morality, as it has been handed on in the Church of all the ages, bringing peace and joy and hope, and life itself, to every generation, and the essential foundation of family and home and nation. Or (2) they must discard this Gospel as a shadowy "ideal", at best a body without bones, a bundle of uncertainties and inconsistencies, and as the teacher of a "new" and very different moral.ty.

In brief, the union of man and wife is either "the profound and matchless oneness of Christian marriage", as Gladstone expressed it, and as every Anglican Prayer Book, as well as our own, still teaches it; or, it is in logical effect "companionate" or "trial" marriage. That is, it is only a contract depending on an "if", subject to the whim or fancy of one or both of the parties, and that by the easiest possible method, a single act of passion or deliberation, or even only the pretense of it.[2]

4. "Conditions" of Divorce are not "Causes".

One other issue needs to be made clear to the Church and the Convention alike. In the resolution under which the Joint Commission was appointed it is specified that the purpose is "to study the whole problem of divorce, its conditions and causes". If by this definition is meant that conditions and causes comprise "the whole problem", it is very important to understand that, while conditions may influence for good or evil the growth of the disease, in themselves they are not causes. Every age, even every generation in this fast living age, has its own conditions.

Israel, a little nation of believers amidst a whole world of pagans, had its own peculiar conditions. Athens and Rome had theirs. The breaking up of the Roman Empire, the days of feudalism, the Renaissance, the sixteenth century, all had conditions of their own. Ours are different, that is all. They may be dangers to avoid or overcome, but they are not causes. When we have exhausted the whole list of modern conditions, social and economic—the effects of war, excessive wealth or poverty, idle rich or crowded poor, nerve-racking business or feverish pleasure, new inventions, the bicycle and auto, Friday evening dances and week-end parties—we have not reached a single cause. The root of the disease is not there, and there is danger of wasting time and thought on that aspect of the problem.

The real causes of divorce and its rapid increase today lie deeper than any or all of these everchanging conditions. Conditions may be less or more favorable to religion and morality as the generations come and go. With similar conditions to ours all about Him—worldliness, paganism or semi-paganism, wealth or poverty, in that "evil and adulterous generation", the Lord Jesus, like a wise physician, distinguishes clearly between surface conditions and causes. He singles out the quality of each human heart as the prime cause and source of sin. "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications" (Matt. 15:19).

5. The Only Possible Cure.

It follows, therefore, that the only real cure for this as for every other form of sin must be sought, not in improved external conditions, but in the power and grace that can only be found in Christ and in obedience to His command. No matter what improvements we may effect, the causes will continue. It follows also that if the Church has been untrue to her trust, one chief and prolific cause of this appalling disease, this cancer that is eating out the very life of family and home in America, will be found in her failure to teach and preach, in pulpit and canon, in school and home, the truth as taught by Him, and clearly expressed in her office for "The Solemnization of Holy Matrimony", where we find no "except" whatever nor any uncertain voice.

On the contrary, so far has this American Church failed to do this, she has been preaching and teaching by her canon for the last sixty years to most willing ears, silently but most effectively, that, in despite of her warnings against entering this holy estate "unadvisedly or lightly", nevertheless, her children need not be so very careful after all. For there is one simple and easy way, she declares, by which she will, in certain circumstances, permit a second marriage, and a third, or even a fourth, if the first should prove a failure or a disappointment.

Nor is this interpretation of her cause mere conjecture or possibility. As every parish priest of experience, and every intelligent layman or laywoman, who has knowledge of what young people are talking about today, knows full well, this kind of teaching by the canon, evasive and conditional as it is, is discussed freely among them, and acted upon.

6. The Fatal Harvest of Untruth.

And with what result? Why wonder that our forty-eight civil legislatures with complete logic have added to the canon's one cause (and that the easiest) fifty other causes, many of them in the eyes of both God and men of greater weight than this sin of passion? Why wonder also that we see this giant nation in earthly wealth and power, with its "head of fine gold", but its "feet of iron and clay", its vast multitude of broken homes (nearly two hundred thousand every year), and its fatherless or motherless children, or with three or four "fathers" or "mothers", deprived of that home influence and Christian training which form the only possible basis of enduring civilization?

Our latest official report (for 1926) shows one divorce to exery six and a fraction marriages in the United States, while our neighbor, Canada, with Christ's law in the Church, and a very few causes for divorce in the State, has only one divorce to every one hundred and twenty-one marriages! In view of such conditions we may well ask, with something akin to despair, "What shall the end be for our children, and our children's children?"

Here is what is called the sure test of pragmatism as taught by our Lord Himself, when He said, "By their fruits ye shall know them". It has been truly said that both "The Church and the world today are face to face, not so much with a question of Scriptural exegesis, as with a condition so horrible that it must be dealt with by heroic measures."

[2]There has been much said recently about our Lord having held an "ideal" of marriage, a mere counsel of perfection, and that He never "legislated" on divorce or anything else. Such writers and speakers seem wholly to forget that His supreme test of true religion, in addition to the Ten Commandments, as summed up in the duty to God and our neighbor, is this: "If ye love Me keep My commandments." Have they not also forgotten that He gave to His Church in the most authoritative manner the keys of His Kingdom, to open or close, to bind or loose, not contrary to, but in strict accordance with, His commandments. If all this is only "idealism", then why have any laws at all, civil or ecclesiastical? Why not have an "ideal" of love, and honesty, and truthfulness, and dispense altogether with the Sixth and Eighth and Ninth Commandment as well as the Seventh?

Our Lord did not forbid separation for urgent cause. But He did demand that, no matter what trials or wrongs have been endured before separation, there shall be no remarriage while the other partner lives. In His loving severity and mercy, He knew that such an allowance even to the most innocent sufferer would only open the floodgates for infinitely greater unhappiness to countless multitudes.

Sympathy with the sufferer every Christian feels and approves. Sympathy even with the guilty sufferer is a virtue, if there are signs of repentance. But sympathy must never be allowed to become a maudlin sentiment. "The sentimentalist," writes Dean Inge, "is kindly only to be cruel, and unwittingly promotes precisely the results he most deprecates."

The crucial question to ask ourselves is, "Have we any right to allow our sympathy to go beyond its proper bounds of heart and affection, where alone it belongs?" One Apostle bids us "speak the truth in love". Another bids us "love in truth". For untruth can never be love. He who spake those stern and unmistakable words, that remarriage after divorce is adultery, was not only infinitely wise, but also infinitely loving. To claim, then, that any law of the Church that only complies with His "commandment" is cruel, is to condemn Him as cruel. There is no escape from this dilemma.

FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty and Everlasting God, Give unto us the increase of faith, hope and charity, and that we may obtain that which Thou dost promise, make us to love that which Thou dost command; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE petition bases the obtaining of the promises on loving God's Commandments. A loving obedience is a prime condition of happiness in this life, especially in home-life of the child; so in our heavenly Father's household, either here or hereafter, no mere perfunctory obedience will avail for real happiness, which depends on full sympathy between child and parent, or between servant and master.

The petition for "increase of faith, hope and charity" is a wide petition indeed; yet wider than the promises justify which are ours, if we learn to love God's commandments. As old John Newton sings:

"Thou art coming to a King;
Large petitions with thee bring;
For His grace and power are such,
None can ever ask too much."

"Ask too much!" No, we can never ask too much of such spiritual blessings as Faith, Hope and Charity. The only limit is our capacity to receive. Too much for our good we often ask, of temporal blessings and fail to receive, because He knows our needs and gives more wisely than we ask.

St. Paul says (1 Cor. 13:2): "Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." So the petition of our collect seems wise in adding to the prayer increase of hope and love, especially love, the greatest of the three.

THE Epistle for the Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity is Gal. 5:16-24, and tells of the life-long warfare the Chrstian must wage, if he be a true follower of his Lord and Master, setting forth the seventeen "works of the flesh", and the nine "fruits of the Spirit". It is well to note that four of these works of the flesh are sins of impurity, and are put first, in one group, and justly so, for they are Satan's favorite means af assailing "Man-soul", and by them he oftenest prevails, and shuts out his victim from the Kingdom of God. Of the other works of the flesh, hatred, wrath, and envyings are the worst; and they are always rampant in the world.

We do well to consider that from the right and proper gratification of our appetites, desires and affections, through the five senses come the fruits of the Spirit and from their improper and excessive indulgences arise the works of the flesh. They are the "springs of action" of the soul, and must be rightly guided for happiness. All efforts to deaden them or crush them by ascetics and hermits have failed. The results of such efforts have never been true happiness, and often disastrous to character. Our Epistle teaches this guidance: "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh," and teaches also that we cannot do the things that we would, save by the power of "God, the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth us and all the people of God". For those who "walk in the Spirit", i. e., are led by the Spirit, there is no law to control or compel. Such are no longer under the law in the way Paul considered himself before his conversion, when he knew "nothing against himself, yet was not thereby justified" (1 Cor. 4:4). With the fruits of the Spirit enumerated in this Gospel comes the consciousness that the bearer of them is not under the law; against such there is no law". His life is no longer a struggle to keep the law and win salvation so; but a life "hid with Christ in God" (Col. 3:3), a struggle still, for we must ever "strive to enter in at the straight gate" (Luke 13:24); but no longer a fruitless, hopeless one, having Jesus as "the Author and Finisher of our faith" (Heb. 12:2). With His help, through the gift of the Comforter, "we lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us", and "run with patience the race that is set before us" (Heb. 12:1). That laying aside the besetting sin and that patient running are unspeakable gifts of Jesus to His loved ones. "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift" (2 Cor. 9:15).

The last verse of our Epistle must have encouraged many a monk, a nun, and hermit in ascetic devotion, vain efforts not merely to control, but to kill and crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts. Such isolation of texts has led to much wrong-doing by many good men. Exodus 22: 18 has caused many murders of innocent folk, by good men, thinking they were obeying God's command, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live". Crucifying the flesh should not be taken more literally than Luke 6:29, touching resistance to evil, or Luke 14:26, which enjoins one who accepts Christ to hate his nearest and dearest. Crucifixion of the flesh means complete self-control, like that which enabled Jesus for our sake to "endure the cross, despising the shame" (Heb. 12:2). Such complete self-mastery is not for us in this time of trial, but the goal will be reached, if we resist unto blood, striving against sin (Heb. 12:4), resting on Him who promises grace sufficient in time of need.

THE Gospel for this Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity is Luke 17:11-9, and gives Luke's account (the only one) of the healing of the ten lepers, of whom only one seems to have been grateful. It has long been a "hard saying" to me, this ingratitude of the nine who "as they went were cleansed". I'd fain think that they merely put off the expression of their thanks to God, and to His Son for the cure, till they had done Jesus' bidding, and "showed themselves unto the priests", and received their testimony to the healing, and offered the gifts required by the law. But Jesus who knew men's thoughts says plainly: "There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger". Is it possible that they (the nine), being Jews, were so narrowed by Levitic ceremonial as to think that it must take precedence of everything, even to the natural outburst of thanksgiving that took possession of the Samaritan? If so, Jesus may have meant simply to condemn their ritualism, and not to stamp their behavior as base ingratitude. It is easier to suppose this than nine out of ten men could be entirely devoid of gratitude for such gracious kindness. We see here the utterly wretched state of a leper in those days; a misery so great that all differences of caste are forgotten; even the Jews and Samaritan forget the national hatred of centuries, and beg together. Jesus' testimony to this man's faith, "Thy faith hath made thee whole", naturally leads us to consider in what respect the Samaritan's faith differed from that of the other nine. They surely had faith also, for they had appealed to Him, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us", and had been healed. How far we may believe their faith was a saving faith, we cannot determine. We know nothing of their life after this, nor indeed of the Samaritan's; but we may be sure that this "stranger", with a heart full of gratitude, went away a far happier man than the nine. "Bonum est confiteri," "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing prises unto Thy name, O Most Highest" (Ps. 92:1); and again Ps. 147: 1): "Oh, praise the Lord; for it is a good thing to sing praises unto our God, yea, a joyful and pleasant thing it is to be thankful." But Jesus does not say to this stranger as He said to the sick of the palsy: "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee" (Matt. 9:2). Of this repentance and faith, those requisites for salvation, we have no proof; only gratitude appears, and he gives God the glory; it does not appear that the Samaritan recognized the divine power of healing in Jesus; so we are left much in the dark as to the spiritual state of this stranger. Yet gratitude is so near akin to love that we would fain think that love also abounded in the heart of this poor outcast (which Paul tells us (1 Cor. 13:13) is greater than faith and hope), and that this Samaritan who now fell on his face, giving only thanks to Jesus, and glory to God, soon learned to give the glory of his cure, as well as thanks, to Jesus, as God the Son.

FAMILY PRAYERS

COLLECTED BY THE RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM MEADE—

FROM BISHOP WILSON—EVENING.

O LORD and Heavenly Father, we acknowledge Thy great goodness to us in sparing us while we deserve punishment, in continuing to us the good things of this life, and setting before us the happiness of a better. In the midst of life we are in death. Grant, O Lord, that this solemn thought may make us careful how we live, that we may escape the bitter pains of eternal death. O Merciful Lord, pardon our offenses, correct and amend whatever is amiss in us, that as we grow in age, we may grow in grace, and the nearer we come to our latter end, the better we may be prepared for it. Give us a true knowledge of ourselves, of the corruption of our nature, and the necessity of Thy gracious help to save us from ruin. Take from us all ignorance and hardness of heart, and too much carefulness for the things of this life. May the spirit of Christ ever live and rule in us, possessing our souls with a sincere desire of pleasing Thee, and a great dread of offending Thee. Deliver us, O Lord, from the sin that does most easily beset us, from the lust of the flesh, from the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, from all unprofitable and sinful thoughts, from lying lips and deceitful tongues, from uncharitable hearts and wavering minds. Let Thy love, O God, be shed abroad in our hearts by the power of the Holy Ghost; and grant that it may appear in our whole life and in our conversation, to Thy honor and glory.

Preserve in our souls, O Lord, such a constant and clear sense of our obligations to Thee, that, upon the receipt of every favor, we may immediately turn our eyes to Him from whom cometh our salvation. May Thy manifold blessings fix such lasting impressions upon our souls, that we may always praise Thee joyfully here on earth, until it shall please Thee, of Thy unbounded mercy, to call us nearer the place of Thy heavenly habitation, to praise our Lord and Deliverer to all eternity. In like manner, we pray Thee, O Lord, to remember all our friends and relations, making them partakers of the same blessings which we ask for ourselves. And we pray for our enemies, if such there are, not for vengeance, but for mercy; that Thou wouldst change their hearts by Thy grace, or restrain their malice by Thy power. Thou hast been all mercy to us, O God; grant that we may be so to all others. Bless, we also pray Thee, all whom Thy providence hath set over us, whether in Church or State; and give us grace to obey them for conscience sake. Look down in pity and forgiveness on the world which Thou hast created. Overrule the commotions of the earth. Bring order out of confusion, and light out of darkness. Establish the reign of peace and righteousness upon the earth, and let the Saviour's kingdom be set up in every land and every heart. These our prayers we offer up in the all-prevailing name of our great Redeemer, in whose blessed words we would pray, as He hath taught us: Our Father, who art in Heaven, etc.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

SECOND—THE NEW TESTAMENT, OR COVENANT.

Subject.—The revelation of redemption, as fulfilled in the Person and Work of Christ (Matt. 1:1; Rev. 1:1).

The New Testament is enfolded in the Old, and the Old is unfolded in the New.

The subject of the Old Testament is Anticipation, and of the New Realization.

In the Old we read the Promises, in the New the Fulfillment.

Who Jesus is, what He has done, is doing, and will do is the subject of the New Testament (Heb. 9:26, 24, 28).

Purpose.—The New Testament was written to make us wise unto salvation, by preaching, reproving, correcting, and instructing us in righteousness (2 Tim. 3:15-17; Rom. 16, 17; Eph. 2:10; 2 Cor. 9:8; John 15:16; 17:18, 20; Acts 1:8).

Divisions of the New Testament.

I. The Gospels.

Subject.—The history of the incarnation, life, ministry death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of man. The Gospels reveal Christ in the flesh, the historical Christ, while the Epistles reveal Christ as risen and glorified.

Purpose.—The Gospels were written to reveal to us how God actually accomplished the work of redemption for us. They were written as the basis of the doctrinal portion of the New Testament, that is, the Epistles. They tell us of the One who in all His words and works, as God incarnate in the likeness of sinful flesh, fulfilled the work God gave Him to do, in making known to us the Father, and in bringing us to the Father through His finished work (John 1:14; Rom. 8:3; Mark 10:45; John 17:24; 19:30).

II. The Acts.

Subject.—What Jesus continues to do and to teach since cension (Acts 1:1).

The blessed ministry of redemption, which our Lord began when here on earth, in revealing God to men, in order to bring men to God, He has continued to do since He ascended to the right hand of the Father (Heb. 2: 3, 4; Eph. 2:19-22).

Purpose.—The book of Acts was written to reveal to us God's purpose and plan for this age, and how it is to be fulfilled (Acts 1:8; 15:14).

Before His ascension as our High Priest, Jesus Christ was pleaded to reveal God's purpose for this age, which had been hidden from the ages and from the generations (Col. 1:26). Purpose, Plan and Power.

This purpose was not that of establishing His Kingdom in power and glory here on the earth, for that had been fully revealed (Isa. 9:6, 7; Luke 1:31-33), but this hidden purpose revealed in the book of Acts, and also in the Epistles, is to witness of the Risen and Glorified Christ.

Before God's counsels can be fulfilled in setting up the Kingdom of Christ on earth in power and glory, His Son must have His Helpmeet with Him.

The Holy Spirit was sent down to earth at Pentecost to win a Bride for God's Son, from among Jews and Gentiles, by witnessing of Christ as the One who died for us, who is now seated in glory as our High-Priestly Representative.

This purpose to witness of the Glorified Christ unto the uttermost part of the earth is being fulfilled by the Holy Spirit, through those who believe the Gospel (Acts 1:8, 2:33, 38, 39; 4:31; 13:2-4; 20:28; 26:16-18).

GOD'S WAY OF SALVATION

Difficulties Met.

By A. Marshall.

III.

"Can a Man Be Saved at Once?"

THE same hour of the night that the jailor asked, "What must I do to be saved"? witnessed his conversion and baptism: and it is likewise added, he "rejoiced, believing in God, with all his house". In one short hour, the whole household believed, were saved, and baptized. It is of no use people saying that "No one can be saved at once", for Scripture clearly shows that those mentioned in the New Testament, whenever they believed, were saved. Some have supposed that conversion is a gradual process, requiring much time and earnest prayer. How long does it take one to "believe" what his father says? A moment. Another figure is employed—"looking". "Look unto Me, and be ye saved" (Isa. 45: 22). How long did it take a bitten Israelite to be cured? The one moment he was dying, the next, by simply looking at the brazen serpent, he was completely healed (Num. 21:9; John 3:14-15).

The very moment you "believe" in, or "look" to, Jesus the one One who bled and suffered for you, you are saved.

"There is life in a look at the Crucified One,
There is life at this moment for thee.
Then look, sinner, look unto Him and be saved—
Unto Him who was nailed to the tree."

"I Have Not Repented Enough."

What do you mean? "I am not sorry enough for my sins."

And if you were very sorry, would God be more willing to save you than He is now? "I think so." Then you are completely mistaken.

"But does it not say, unless we repent we shall perish?"

Yes; but what do you think is the Scriptural signification of "repentance"? If you say "sorrow for sin", you are wrong. It does not mean sorrow for sin; it means a change of mind (Matt. 21:29). This change will doubtless produce sorrow; but sorrow and repentance are two very different things (Heb. 12:17, margin, and 2 Cor. 7:9). When God calls on you to "repent, and believe the Gospel", He wishes you to lay aside your wrong thoughts, and believe the glad tidings that He proclaims to you. Formerly you may have imagined that you required to feel very sorry before being saved. Change your mind. You may have supposed you must first "feel" some great change in order to know you were saved. Change your mind. First believe in God's great love to you, as revealed in His Gospel, and you will know that you have eternal life (John 5:24).

"I Cannot Love God."

A lady became anxious about her soul. She prayed and labored earnestly to "love God", in order to obtain the forgiveness of her sins. Instead, however, of doing so, her heart seemed to get harder.

Meetings were being held in the district, and one evening the preacher said: "Some imagine that God requires them to love Him in order to be saved. They begin to examine their hearts, and they cannot find there one particle of love to Him. If," said he, "we were not to be saved till we loved Him, we would never be saved at all; but the blessed truth is, He loves us." "Herein is love, not that we love God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins" (1 John 4:10). The moment she saw that God had so loved her as to give Jesus as a propitiation for her sins, peace and joy filled her heart, and she could not help loving Him who had done so much for her. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love" (1 John 4:8). Have you been trying to love God in order to be saved? If so, give it up. It is true you ought to love Him, but so long as you are unsaved you will not do so. Meditate on His love to you, and you will be able to say, "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John 4:19).

"I Don't Feel Anxious Enough."

Numbers, when awakened to see their danger, get occupied with their feelings toward God, instead of with His feelings towards them. They never seem to consider this question—"Whether does my salvation depend on how I feel toward God, or on how He feels toward me?" Again and again, we hear the remark, "I don't feel anxious enough", or, "I don't feel sorry enough". Such have read or heard of some who were in great darkness of soul, and they imagine that they must go through a similar experience. They are very unlike the woman who, when asked how she got through the "slough of despond" (mentioned in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress), replied, "I did not go that road at all; I went straight to the Cross".

Don't think of your anxiety, or want of anxiety, but ask yourself—"Is God willing to save me now?" Again and again, in His Word, He declares that His desire is that you should not perish, but be eternally saved (Ezek. 33:11; 1 Tim. 2:4-6). Cease occupying your mind with your feelings. Think of His wondrous love to you, as manifested in the gift of His only begotten and well-beloved Son. On the ground of what He did and suffered, you can be saved even now. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved".

"I Could Not Hold On."

This is what many a one says. In fact, it is a very common difficulty with those who are exercised about their soul's salvation.

"I have often tried to be Christian, but have failed. Sometimes I thought I was one, but soon the happy feelings were gone, and I was just as bad as ever; so there is no use in me professing." You need not be troubled about your "holding on". What you are now required to do is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and the moment you do so you obtain eternal life (John 3:36), and the assurance that you will never perish (John 10:28). Then as to how you will "get on" after you are saved, the same Christ who "saves from wrath to begin with, saves from sin to go on with, and will keep you safe to glory to end with". "His name shall be called Jesus: for He shall save His people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21); and He "is able to keep you from falling" (Jude 24), and has promised never to leave nor to forsake those who put their trust in Him. The moment you believe on Jesus you are His; and He has pledged His word to guide, guard, and keep you, and to give you strength and grace to live and work for Him. "I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, fear not" (Isa. 41:13).

"Would It Not be Great Presumption?"

Presumption to do what? "Presumption in any one to say that he knows he is saved."

But if God declares you may be sure, and tells you how you may be saved, would you call it "presumption" to believe Him? "Assuredly not." Then listen to Him: "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life" (1 John 5:13).

Instead of it being "presumption" to believe what God says, to doubt Him is to be guilty of the greatest sin a man can commit. "But I cannot say that I am saved." Then you do not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ? "Oh, yes, I do!" You must surely be mistaken; for the Scripture states that "He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life" (John 3:36); and if you are not saved, you cannot possibly believe on Jesus.

"I believe on Jesus, but I cannot say I am saved."

Then you are making God a liar; for He again and again asserts that every one who believes on Jesus has eternal life (John 6:47). But "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the record God gave of His Son" (1 John 5:10, 11).

"I Don't Feel Any Change."

Of course not. How could you, so long as your mind is occupied with your feelings toward God, instead of with His feelings toward you. If you continue to look into your cold, wretched heart, you will become more and more miserable. By dwelling on its coldness or hardness, your want of love or want of sorrow, faith or feelings, you must be unhappy.

Peace is not to be derived from looking within: it is only to be found by looking unto Jesus, by thinking of what He has done and suffered for us, and not by anything that we have done or suffered for Him.

"Look to Jesus, weary one, look and live:
Look at what the Lord has done, look and live!
Though unworthy, vile, unclean, look and live:
Look away from self and sin, look and live."

So long as you do not believe on Jesus you cannot have that love to Him you ought. You must first believe in His love and death for you; and the moment you know that the mighty work has been finished, that justice has been satisfied, peace will fill your heart, and love will flow out and over to Him who loved you, and gave Himself for you (Isa. 43:21; Rom. 5:1).

"How Am I to Come to Christ?"

A Scotch shepherd, in a state of great anxiety of soul, asked a preacher if he could tell him what was meant by "coming to Christ". "I have been hearing," said he, "a most earnest discourse; we have been urged and entreated to 'Come to Christ'; and I felt as if I had been sitting on nettles all the time, for he never told us how to come to Him. Can you tell me?"

"Can you fly to Him?" "No, I cannot do that." "Can you walk on your feet to Christ?" "No." The preacher then told him that Christ, though in heaven, was beside him on earth, loving him with a deep, strong, and tender love, eagerly anxious to save him. He was shown that with his mind and heart, and not with his body, he was to go to Jesus—in other words, he was to believe on Him who died that he might live. "Is that it? It is so simple? I see it now," he said, and went on rejoicing.

"I came to Jesus and I drank of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched, my soul revived, and now I live in Him."

Has the reader come to Jesus yet? If not, come to Him Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." No one can feel that now. Believe in His love and death for you, and you will know, on the authority of Him who cannot lie, that you are saved, and have eternal life.

"I Cannot Realize It."

What do you mean? "I see that Christ has borne my punishment, and that God is perfectly satisfied with what He has done; but, somehow or other, I cannot realize that I have everlasting life."

Your mistake is, you are taken up with the realizings of your mind instead of with the realities of God's salvation. Suppose for some crime you were sentenced to a term of imprisonment, with the option of paying a large penalty. A friend pays the amount in full, and brings you a receipt; would you then be afraid of going to jail? "No." Why not? Because of your "realizings" or "graspings"? "No." Why would you not be afraid? "Because the ransom had been paid." Would you not require to "realize" or "grasp", or "lay hold" of the money in your mind? "Certainly not."

God in His Word tells you that Christ has given Himself a ransom for you (1 Tim. 2:6), and on the ground of what He has done you may be saved. Do not think of your "realizings", but believe in the reality of His death for you, and you will then know that you are saved, and all your sins forgiven.

"I Cannot Feel Saved."

Martin Luther, in one of his conflicts with the devil, was asked by the arch-enemy if he felt his sins forgiven. "No," said the great Reformer, "I don't feel that they are forgiven but I know they are, because God says so in His Word." Paul did not say, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt feel saved"; but, "Believe on the Lord his sins are forgiven. Ask that man whose debt was paid by his brother, "Do you feel that your debt is paid?" "No," is the reply, "I don't feel that it is paid: I know from this receipt that it is paid, and I feel happy because I know it is paid." So with you, dear reader. You must first believe in God's love to you as revealed at the Cross of Calvary, and then you will feel happy, because you will know that you are saved.

A happy old Christian, on hearing persons speaking of their feelings, used to say—"Feelings! Feelings! Don't bother yourself about your feelings. I just stick to the old truth that Christ died for me, and He is my surety right on to Eternity, and I'll stick to that like a limpet to the rock."

"Be my feelings what they will, Jesus is my Saviour still."

"God Says I Am Saved, and It Must Be True."

Such were the words uttered by a young convert on the night he found peace. Reader, can you truthfully adopt his language? "I wish I could." Then there is nothing to hinder you from doing so now. Jesus has died on Calvary. He has "suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust", and Jehovah has declared that those who believe on Him have eternal life (John 5:24; vi., 47). If, therefore, you really believe on Him who bore the wrath and curse for you, you have God's Word for it that you are saved.

"I don't feel I am saved." Neither do I, but, thank God, I know it, simply because He says so in His Word, and I am confident He always speaks the truth. Salvation is not through our feelings, but through faith in what Jesus did for us (Rom. 1:16). Jesus felt the weight of sin when He exclaimed, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me"? (Matt. 27:46). Now, as you read these lines, believe on Him who bore sin's penalty, and with the young man you will be able to say, "God says I am saved, and it must be true".

Time Enough Yet."

Allow me to ask you, in closing, are you saved?

"I intend to be, but there is no great hurry." What! "No great hurry," and the messenger of death at your very door! The man-slayer, fleeing into the city of refuge, with the avenger of blood on his track, did not think so. When asked why you despised His pardon, and neglected His great salvation, what answer will you give? Don't, oh! don't allow Satan to lull you to sleep in the cradle of a false security. Time is short and Eternity is at hand. Will you, can you, dare you, one moment longer remain unsaved? "Now" is God's time. "Tomorrow" may be too late. The dark thunder-cloud of God's wrath is hanging over your head, and if you remain in your present position the voice from heaven may sound forth, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee". Delay not another moment. Don't be perplexed about the future. He who saves poor sinners has promised to "keep" them; and the moment you receive Christ into your heart by faith, He will grant you power to overcome sin, self, and Satan, and give you strength to live for Him who died for you.

(End.)

SOME RULES FOR PROPER READING.

1. Open the Mouth—Peter opened his mouth and spake. Give the Voice a chance to be heard; keep it up, as in talking. Indeed good reading is good talking.

2. The Voice Follows the Eye.

The ball goes to the boy looked at, who catches it, if gaze fixed, or fumbles it if gaze unsteady or uncertain. The golfer misses his ball if gaze distracted in making stroke. If you want to hit the nail on the head, keep your eye on head of the nail. And this is very important let me repeat—The Voice Follows the Eye. Hence, first of all, in reading pause and look steadily at the person farthest away. Let the eye measure the distance. Then read. The voice will reach the person farthest away and those in between will hear. Practice this for awhile and find out its truth.

3. Look out for the Consonants.—Take good care of them and the vowels will take care of themselves. Consonants are the skeletons of words. Enunciate them properly and the vowels will not be mouthed or emphasized unduly.

4. Don't Neglect the End of the Word—Take heed particularly to the last letter or syllable in a word. It will greatly help to prevent fast reading and the bad habit of dropping the voice at the end of words of more than two syllables, but it does not mean slow, droning reading which is worse than fast reading; that keeps the audience awake at least.

5. Note Well the Meaning to be Conveyed.—If it is a question, ask it; if a statement, make it; if a prayer, pray it. For instance the first part of the General Confession is a statement—We have sinned. Make it: the voice goes down. The second part is a prayer—Have mercy. Pray it, with the voice up.

6. Practice Reading When Alone Silently and Aloud.—For this exercise and in applying rule five, read the Psalms. They change in a twinkling from prayer to praise; from question to statement; entreaty to eversion. They afford a splendid field for testing good reading.

Remember the note in good reading is B natural. Avoid affectation in voice, or pose, or poise. Read as a good talker talks with the eye now and then searching for the person farthest away; let the voice do its natural part—always remembering the consonants and the ends of words; then there will be no difficulty in being heard and what is more—understood.

The Rev. Churchill Gibson Accepts Call to St. James, Richmond.

The Rev. Churchill Jones Gibson, now rector of St. Mary's Church, Ardmore, Pa., has accepted the call to become rector of St. James' Church, Richmond.

The Rev. Mr. Gibson is expected to come to Richmond late in September, and will occupy the pulpit the first Sunday in October.

Mr. Gibson is the son of the late Bishop Robert A. Gibson and is well-known in Virginia. He was formerly rector of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, where he served for some time. He has been in Ardmore only about four months.

He will succeed the Rev. Dr. G. Freeland Peter, who resigned several months ago to become canon at the National Cathedral in Washington.

Completion of Residence for the Archdeacon of Panama.

It will doubtless be remembered by some of the readers of The Southern Churchman that about two years ago Archdeacon Sykes, of the Panama Canal Zone, visited the United States for the purpose of raising funds for the erection of quarters for the Archdeacon on a site in New Cristobal, donated to the Missionary District by the Panama Railroad Company.

So generous were the responses to Archdeacon Syke's appeals that it has not only been possible to complete this building without any indebtedness, but also to construct it of the hollow concrete tiles rather than of wood, thus rendering it immune, in so far as the exterior is concerned, from the ravages of the wood ants, so destructive to frame buildings in the tropics.

There has always been a scarcity of quarters on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus. During the first seven months' stay of Archdeacon and Mrs. Sykes they were obliged to move four times, being unable to secure other than vacation quarters. Finally they secured a comfortable apartment, but no sooner had they begun to feel permanently located than it was learned that their apartment would ultimately be taken over by the American government.

It was in anticipation of this contingency that the Archdeacon made the canvass in the States for funds for a residence for himself and his successors, to be owned by the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone.

In this instance the Church moved more swiftly than the government, for the Archdeacon and Mrs. Sykes were domciled in their comfortable and commodious new quarters about two months before the government took over the old quarters they had vacated.

The Archdeacon, through this medium, begs to thank those whose contributions made possible the erection of a building which will mean much to the Church's work on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus, as well as to the rest of this Missionary District.

Beautiful Gifts.

Because he did not wish "to be entirely left out of the great Cathedral work", the Rev. Hobart B. Whitney, seventy years old, rector of Trinity Church, Athens-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., has donated his mother's engagement ring, his confirmation ring and his wife's wedding ring to the Washington Cathedral. In donating the rings the aged rector wrote:

"These rings may at any time become my own memorial as well as that of my wife and mother. They represent the beginning, course and close of my life's voyage." The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, wrote Dr. Whitney a letter of acknowledgment and gratitude for his offering.

More Doctrinal Sermons.

In a recent sermon the Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Washington, declared that there is need in the Episcopal Church for more, rather than less, doctrinal preaching. He dwelt especially on the doctrine of the Virgin Birth, saying the life or speedy death of Christianity is wrapped in it. "The Creed," he said, "is the anchor of the soul."

For Women Missionaries at the General Convention.

Churchwomen of Washington City are being called on to open their homes and provide for the care and entertainment of seventy-five women missionaries who are expected to attend the General Convention of the Church, at Washington, in October. The total number of women missionaries to be present is more than two hundred, but all but seventy-five have been provided for. These visitors will come from work in Aalska, Haiti, Japan, China, Liberia, the Philippines, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands.

Episcopal Clergy on Prohibition.

Daily newspapers have been printing prominently alleged results of an enquiry on the prohibition law, said to have been conducted by "The Church Temperance Society", New York, among Episcopal clergymen. The society has issued a pamphlet of one hundred and fifty-nine pages, promptly given the secular press, the general purport of which is that the great majority of the Episcopal clergy believe prohibition has had a fair trial and has failed and that such modification as will permit free sale of beers and wines. The percentage of the clergy favoring modification of the law is stated at seventy-five. Replies to questionnaires are said to number 2,980. So far as is known, there has been no check-up of the published statements.

Missionary Bishops Coming.

Among other distinguished attendants at the Forty-ninth Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, to be held at Washington in October, will be Bishop McKim, now seventy-six years old, and in service in Japan since 1879, master of Japanese language and literature and survivor of earthquakes, storms and revolutions, and Bishop Graves, seventy years old, thirty-five years Bishop of China, in which country he has been a missionary forty-seven years and one of few Americans able to speak Chinese fluently. Both bishops now are on their way to this country.

Among other notable persons to be present at the Convention, are Bishop William Lawrence, seventy-eight years old, formerly Bishop of Massachusetts, and since his resignation in charge of all Episcopal Churches in Europe, and Samuel Mather, of Cleveland, Ohio, a lay delegate, manufacturer and regarded as one of the richest men in the world.

Church Bequests by Miss McDonald, of Cathedral School.

Miss Jessie C. McDonald, Principal of Cathedral School, Washington, attended by many Virginia girls, died in Canada, August 12, and in her will included several bequests for Episcopal Church purposes. Her entire library goes to Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation, which also is given $10,000 cash. Her real estate in Massachusetts Avenue and Seventeenth Street is given the foundation to create an insurance fund for teachers at the girls' school. This last gift is in memory of Miss McDonald's mother, Lydia P. McDonald, and Anna Ellis, who founded the first college preparatory school for girls in Washington. All residue of the estate, after payment of bequests and establishment of trusts provided for, will go to the foundation for the benefit of the National Cathedral School for Girls. Miss McDonald left also $10,000 to be used in research for the causes and treatment of tuberculosis, $10,000 to Wellesley College, in memory of her mother and Anna Ellis, and $25,000, after the death of Alice McDonald Nelson, to Wellesley for the scholarship fund.

Final Showing of Religious Census.

Practical conclusion of the religious census for 1926 is announced by the United States Government. It shows that of the approximately 80,000,000 persons in the country, not including foreign possessions, more than fourteen years old, 60,000,000 are members of churches. This compares with Church membership of 40,000,000 in 1916, when the population more than fourteen years old was around 64,000,000. According to census bureau estimates, the population of Continental United States increased 17,000,000 in the ten years and Church membership 20,000,000. This, however, is not exactly accurate, some of the apparent increase being due to changes in methods of return. The Protestant Episcopal Church, for instance, in 1916 reported as members none but those confirmed, while in 1926, under instructions from the department, all baptized were reported as members. This may explain excessive percentage of gain over all other denominations shown for the Episcopalians by the official figures, heretofore published. With the new system, the Protestant Episcopal Church in America is credited with membership, in 1926, of 1,858,966 in Continental United States.

The largest membership for any single denomination is that of the Roman Catholic Church, 18,604,850, showing the Church membership of the country to be more than two to one non-Roman Catholic. The Jews report for 1926 membership of 4,087,357, apparent increase of nearly a thousand per cent, explained by the fact that in 1916 none but pew holders in synagogues counted as members, while in 1926, under instructions from the bureau, all professing the Jewish faith, whether ever attending a synagogue or not, are included.

It is a close race among the Protestant denominations for leadership in numbers between Methodists and Baptists. Each of these has a number of sub-divisions, making accurate computation difficult. The nineteen Methodist bodies have total membership of 8,069,870. The Baptists also have nineteen bodies and returns from the Southern Baptist Church are not yet complete, but figures already in hand indicate that their total membership in the country will exceed that of the Methodists by a few thousands. The Baptist membership includes more than 3,000,000 colored people, the Methodist, 1,200,000, of the estimated 10,600,000 colored people in Continental United States.

The nine divisions of the Presbyterian Church report 2,625,284 members, more than half in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, to which most Southern Presbyterians belong. The Lutherans, comparatively few in the South, have twenty divisions and branches and number, altogether, something over 4,000,000. Congregationalists, Reformed Church, Mormons and Evangelical denominations are listed as with from 500,000 to a million members each, United Brethren, largely in Pennsylvania, Church of Christ and Eastern Orthodox, about 250,000 each.

Statistics Concerning Colored Work.

The statistics are given by Provinces, the first set of figures under each Province being the total amount of the receipts of the Colored congregations of that Province, the other, being the total amount contributed by such congregations for diocesan and general purposes:

Province 1.—Seven congregations, six Negro clergy, 2,284 communicants. Receipts, $34,565.40; diocesan and general, $1,330.93.

Province 2.—Thirty-six congregations, thirty-two clergy, 11,523 communicants. Receipts, $154,009.06; diocesan and general, $6,985.02.

Province 3.—Eighty congregations, forty-three clergy, 10,764 communicants. Receipts, $145,779.96; diocesan and general, $10,226.58.

Province 4.—One hundred and thirty congregations, fifty-six clergy, 8,247 communicants. Receipts, $68,319.89; diocesan and general $10,039.34.

Province 5.—Twenty congregations, thirteen clergy, 4,512 communicants. Receipts, $51,096.54; diocesan and general, $6,041.28.

Province 6.—Six congregations, four clergy, six hundred and sixty-nine communicants. Receipts, $12,802.80; diocesan and general, $517.11.

Province 7.—Twenty-one congregations, one Bishop, ten clergy, 1,262 communicants. Receipts, $22,299.72; diocesan and general, $3,037.33.

Province 8.—Four congregations, two clergy, five hundred and twenty-three communicants. Receipts, $5,442.22; diocesan and general, $590.30.

Total of congregations, three hundred and four. Total active clergy, one hundred and sixty-six. Grand total of receipts, $494,415.59; grand total of contributions for diocesan and general purposes, $38,772.83.

The financial figures of three or four of the New York congregations, and those of the following dioceses, are not included in the above summary, answers to our communications not having been received in time, or not all: Delaware, Atlanta, Florida, Mississippi, Kentucky, Ohio and Nebraska.

As to the matter of clerical support, thirty-eight receive their entire support from the local congregation; six, two-thirds or more support; twelve, one-half or more support; twelve, one-fourth or more support; forty receive less than one-fourth support from the local congregation.

This enumeration of clerical salaries is far from being complete, as it is difficult to get all the necessary information. Some of the clergy do not answer letters.

Thanksgiving For Treaty.

Diplomatic representatives of seven of the fifteen nations signing the Multilateral Treaty in Paris August 27, heard the Rev. Dr. William Foster Pierce, President of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, declare that the application of the Golden Rule in the political sphere is the mission of America at the Thanksgiving Service for the Signing of the General Pact for the Renunciation of War at the Peace Cross, Washington Cathedral, Sunday afternoon (August 28).

Acting Secretary of State Francis White represented the United States Government at the Thanksgiving Service. Among the other diplomats present were Mr. Laurent Beaudry, charge d'affaires of Canada; Mr. Jaroslau Lipa, charge d'affaires ad interim of Czecho-Slovakia; Sir John Broderick, Commercial Counsellor of the British Embassy; Herr Johann C. Lohmann and Herr Wolfgang zu Putlitz, representatives of the German Embassy; M. Sbrigenori Togo, First Secretary of Japanese Em- First Secretary of the Japanese Embassy, and M. Hubert Dussel, Counsellor of the French Embassy.

The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. G. Freeland Peter, Canon of Washington, and great-great-great-grandson of Martha Washington, assisted by Canon Raymond L. Wolven, Chaplain to the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington. Despite the threatening weather hundreds of persons attended the Thanksgiving Service.

Bishop Praises Byrd as Hero "Daring Depths".

Commander Richard E. Byrd and his South Polar expedition exemplify the teachings of Jesus Christ, according to the Right Rev. John Poyntz Tyler, Missionary Bishop of North Dakota, who preached a sermon against conservatism at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

"God be praised for raising up these aviators, bold heroes who dare the depths," he declared. "I rejoice in Commander Byrd's expedition and the great souls who thirst to reach out into the unknown."

Using as his text the story of Christ and the fishermen, Bishop Tyler deplored the tendency of many business men to stand pat and not venture from the conventional business methods. He said that God is interested in the investment of money and the legitimate return from honest labor.

"Christ told Simon Peter to go into the depths and cast his nets. Don't be shore fishermen and remain in the places fished by your fathers and grandfathers. Reach out into the deep," he urged.

"It a lamentable state of affairs on this planet as long as any of God's children are diseased, deformed or suffering," said Bishop Tyler. "There are many who have so much money that they are killing themselves by overeating and over-indulgence, while thousands are living outrageously narrow lives. I don't believe in this half-fed, half-housed, half-lived Christianity. It is a humbug and a stench in the nostrils of God."

Deploring the use of cosmetics by men who try to give themselves color and life by false means rather than by living like a man should, Bishop Tyler foretold the passing of masculinity if the need for men of vision and strength were not supplied.

"I believe that Jesus Christ came out of the bosom of God to show me what a man should be," he declared. "He was a man—a perfect man and not a weakling. We need more men who are not satisfied to fish in coves and bays, but who sail out into the unknown depths."

In conclusion the Bishop suggested that men dare to learn their lessons by reading the Bible themselves, not leaving it to others.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Ordinations Increase.

Having just closed the books as Recorder of Ordinations, preparatory to making up my report to the General Convention, I thought it might be of interest to the membership of the Church to have a few statistics as to what the Church has been doing in supplying a ministry in the past triennium, and by comparison with the past to know whether we were growing or decreasing. Though the report is published every three years in the Journal, so few have access to it that it is only an inappreciable per cent that see it.

Every diocese and missionary jurisdiction except Marquette (from which no report has been had for six years) and South Carolina (a partial report, due to the tragic death of the diocesan, has been gotten) has made report, and the Recorder takes this opportunity of thanking the Bishops for their ready and, in most cases, prompt responses to the questionnaire sent out, which had to be done, as with a few, a very few exceptions, none of the Secretaries of the Councils or Conventions of the dioceses or missionary jurisdictions were aware of Canon 51, Section IV (i, ii), on pages 139 and 140 of "Constitution and Canons for the Government of the Protestant Episcopal Church, etc.", of the edition of 1926.

Without further airing of the difficulties experienced by the Recorder in obtaining this information, and again expressing my appreciation of the unfailing courtesies of the Bishops of our Church in their responses, I will give the statistics:

1905-1906-1907, 505.
1911-1912-1913, 513.
*1914-1915- , 309.
1916-1917-1918, 498.
1919-1920-1921, 353.
1922-1923-1924, 472.
1925-1926-1927, 528.

*Finding it impossible to continue the ordinations up to September 1, of each Convention year, as my predecessor, the Rev. Dr. H. C. Duncan, had tried, in vain, to do, I closed the Report of Ordinations to the Diaconate with December 31 of the year preceding the Convention, but have kept open the ordinations to the Priesthood so that the following report will not have to repeat as was the case with the previous reports by Dr. Duncan.

It will be noted with gratification that this report for the past triennium shows an increase of almost exactly fifty per cent over that of 1919-1920-1921, the figures being 353 and 528, despite the absences noted, the dioceses not reporting.

Almighty and everlasting God, give unto us the increase of faith, hope and charity; and, that we may obtain that which Thou dost promise, make us to love that which Thou dost command through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE NEW WORLD.

These things shall be! a loftier race
Than e'er the world hath known shall rise,
With flame of freedom in their souls
And light of knowledge in their eyes.

They shall be gentle, brave, and strong,
To spill no drop of blood, but dare
All that may plant man's lordship firm
On earth, and fire, and sea, and air.

Nation with nation, land with land,
Unarmed shall live as comrades free;
In every heart and brain shall throb
The pulse of one fraternity.

Man shall love man with heart as pure
And fervent as the young-eyed joys
Who chant their heavenly songs before
God's face with undiscordant noise.

New arts shall bloom of loftier mold,
And mightier music thrill the skies,
And every life shall be a song
When all the earth is paradise.

Treasures.

Louis Deschamps.

In the vast underground vaults of great banks, piles of gold bullion are carefully guarded. It is the gold basis of a nation's currency. It is treasure. Yet gold is only a worthless metal to many savage tribes who gladly trade it for beads of colored glass. Treasures are determined by human standards of value. This is evident in moral and ethical matters. Man chooses his treasures, and mysterious laws of human nature decree that his treasures in turn affect him. Whatever is treasured and cherished inspires devotion, and thereby becomes a motive power of human behaviour. One tends to become like the object of his devotion. "Where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." An individual without a treasure, other than momentary interests and passing pleasures, is the victim of monotony and boredom. Treasures inspire enthusiasm, pride, and zeal. Many happy lives consist of a series of treasure hunts in the enchanting realm of invention, visions, and ideals.

Every one must have a treasure, though false treasures lure men to disillusionment and sorrow. Cynics and pessimists are unhappy because they find nothing worth the effort of treasuring. Real treasures represent the heart's sincere disires. The inspiration of treasures is the same, but they vary greatly as to moral value and ultimate satisfaction to the individual. A man may find zest in cherishing the treasure of wealth and fame alone, devoting his entire time and energies to becoming rich and prominent. Yet once the treasure is attained, his soul still hungers, and disillusionment casts its sickly pall over his sated desires. Napoleon treasured power, only to end a life of thrilling events amid the bitter thoughts of an exile. It is too often the misfortune of youth to learn the relative values of treasures by trial and error, with the resulting scars of skepticism. There are treasures that breed selfishness, hardness of heart, and frivolity. Responsibility of choosing one's treasures is implied by the knowledge of good and evil.

Before giving one's self to the magic spell of any particular treasure, it is wise to consider merits and consequences. A rich, full life should have many worth-while treasures, because vicissitudes may deprive one of most cherished treasures, and woe to him whose only treasure is perishable. Circumstances, talent, and environment determine many minor treasures available to all who truly seek them, but there is one universal treasure. It is a treasure beyond the blows of misfortune. Mystic, religious, and inspiring, it satisfies the deepest yearnings of the soul. Like a staunch lifeboat, it keeps one afloat though everything goes down in the storm. This treasure sustains the soul silently and calmly in the presence of Death. It is the Treasure of God, the Spirit indwelling, the piety of an abiding Faith.

It fires the imagination, inspires the will, and comforts the heart with the consciousness of God's love. All that man lacks, God offers in infinite abundance. Inherent in every heart is an undying love of beauty, virtue, and strength, though constantly threatened by the sordidness, sin, and frailty of human nature. Religion proclaims God's presence in man like the mysterious life that passes from the vine to the branches. One's greatest treasure should be religion. However obscured by the fogs of theological controversies or the clouds of supposed denial of life's pleasures, it should receive fair consideration from all.

The treasure of an ardent faith in the power and destiny of the Christian religion in human progress is rarely appreciated by those who have never known it. The greatest aid to "finding one's self" is a sincere religious experience. Religion is not merely membership in an organization, nor primarily a compliance with prescribed formalities. It can be treasured only as it is vividly real and personal, for it comes from the experience of an individual alone with his God. In addition to churches, creeds, ritual, and organization, religion means direct, personal community with God in every human crisis. This greatest of all treasures makes one good company for himself, broadens the vision, fires the imagination to appreciate the great significance of humanity's progress toward God. In silent night watches, it keeps one's company like the glow of the binnacle to the lone helmsman, showing the course at all times. It permits no restless flight from one's self, no dread of the inevitable moments when one finds himself alone with his thoughts. It offers the only satisfying answer to the mysteries of life and death. All Nature enriches the religious heart with the solemn beauty and silent glory of God in growing things. To cherish this treasure is to avoid the exaltation of empty form over living spirit. One strives to:

". . . see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
And eternity in an hour."

In September.

Today many young mothers are kissing tiny boys and girls good-bye, sending them off for their first day at school. She ponders many things in her heart and her eyes are full of tears, and makes an attempt to sing as she goes about her duties, but somehow the little song sticks tight in her throat. But she thanks God for her child's development and for the opportunities before him, and goes on, smiling.

Then we see the older mother. She is saying good-bye to her boy, her big boy, who is going out into the world for the first time, his first year at college. Her heart is full of tears, prayers—and joy, too. Tears, because it means home only on visits from now on through the years. She yearns to keep him a little longer, to protect and shield him from some of the hard things in life, and to smooth somewhat the rough places. But he must fight his own battles, and be a man, stronger for the struggle. But, oh! it has been such a little, little while since she held his tiny body in her arms, and kissed his little hands and feet and now—now, he must walk life's pathway without mother. His packing is finished and the stillness of night has settled over all. Wth a tugging at her heart, that only a mother can know, she slips noiselessly into his bedroom and kneeling beside his sleeping form, she opens her heart to one who never fails to comfort.

"Go thou with him, dear Lord, since now no more
I may beside him walk the road of life;
Keep Thou his heart courageous as of yore,
Through sun and storm, be smooth the way or rough,
With joy or grief his cup to overflow,
If Thou art with him, it is enough;
He will be safe with Thee, dear Lord, I know.
Once were his little hands clasped fast in mine,
Once did he look for me to show the way,
Dear little footprints in the sands of time,
Now he is gone—I have my yesterday,
A tiny while, a precious bit to keep,
A rosary of memory to wear,
An altar where my soul may hide and weep,
A trysting place to meet Thee, Lord in prayer."

—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The Longed For Pet.

Under the title, "Daydreams", our local paper has been running a series of small boy cartoons. In one of them the lad is represented as having brought home a very scrawny, unkempt dog. Both the boy's mother and a crisp, gingham little sister beam their welcome while mother declares that of course he may keep the stray!

Who can say how many children have dreamed a similar dream about some real dog, only to meet with pathetic disillusionment? Indeed that picture suggests one of the major tragedies of childhood, though it is a sorrow that might always be lightened, if not averted, by thoughtfulness and sympathy.

Few homes can extend hospitality to every animal the children would like to adopt, yet it is exasperatingly difficult to convince a boy or girl of the reasonableness of our objections. They do not even understand what problems arise from the meager limits of a city apartment or the exactions of landlord, janitor and fellow tenants. What, to them, is our prudent care to avoid dirt, vermin and disease?

The very fact that children view the matter so differently should be a challenge to our sympathy and tact. How careful we are, how lavish of cost and effort to meet fittingly some situation that will leave little impress on these childish hearts, while we fail even to recognize the significance of moments that are destined to hold a large place in their memories.

That is because we have forgotten too much. We look at things through dull, grown up spectacles and it is the fresh vision of youth that is needed. Children cannot shift at will to the viewpoint of maturity.

We know by observation, if not by personal experience, how much a pet can mean to a child. The stray dog or cat appeals also to innate childish chivalry, so that the discussion of the creature's fate becomes a great occasion. Let us recognize it as such and curb any temptation to impatience or seeming heartlessness.

When other people ask our agreement to something that we feel is out of the question we take to us words of courteous explanation and regret. Why should it not be so when the petitioner is a child we love desiring what seems to him or her a perfectly natural privilege?

The very effort to see the child's side of the question has led many a parent to welcome an animal that would otherwise have been driven sharply away; and it was usually a fortunate relenting, for most boys and girls, if not their elders, need the spiritual influences that come from caring for something that is alive and enjoying its companionship. Many a selfish only child has been made into a social being through tending dependent pets.—M. S. Stover.

A PRAYER.

Florence Radcliffe.

Take Thou from her, dear Lord, this day
All sorrows and all tears away;
Make Thou her troubles all to cease;
Smooth Thou her path and give her peace.

Nay, nay, dear Lord, a cross to bear;
Some burden for love's sake to share;
Give Thou to her through tears to see;
Through sacrifice to climb to Thee.

That belief in the Spirit of Christ as the very centre of his spiritual life led him through his career of heroic and splendid self-sacrifice, and it is that belief which has been, whatever we may think to the contrary, the really inspiring and the central fact in the Christian life from that day to this.—Dean Inge.

I'M GOING TO BE HAPPY.

I'm going to be happy today;
Though the skies of the morning are gray,
I have made up my mind that whatever I find
I'm going to be happy today.

I'm going to be happy today;
Who knows what I shall find on the way?
A smiling new friend or a lily to tend;
I'm going to be happy today.

The Dream Gift.

Little brother sat in the library reading a book about the strange brothers and sisters that we have in other lands. But sometimes, his mind wandered from his reading to thinking of the lovely new pencil case that his father was to bring him when he came home that day.

Little Brother must have fallen asleep as he sat on the library couch, for such a queer thing happened. The door was pushed gently open and in walked the strangest boy. He wore a loose gown and had a red fez cap on his head. He spoke to Little Brother, and Little Brother spoke to him; but the boys could not understand each other.

Little Brother knew that the boy had come from Morocco, Africa, because his picture was in the book. He handed Little Brother a beautiful leather pencil case. For the nicest leather in the world comes from Africa. Then the boy sat down on the couch; and although the two boys could not understand one another, they smiled, for they could understand that.

Then it was but a minute until there came another little visitor. LittleBrocame another little visitor. Little Brother recognized him, too. He was a dark-skinned Indian lad from South America; and he smiled and gave Little Brother a nice, big rubber eraser. The rubber had come from the rubber trees of his native country. Then he sat down to wait.

Again the door opened, and this time two children entered. They were both white children. One was a boy from far-away Australia, and the other was a little girl from Europe. And together they had brought Little Brother a knife. The girl's father had a knife factory where the finest steel knife blades in the world are made. But it takes more than just blade to make a nice jackknife. It takes a handle, too. And this is what the Australian boy had given toward the making of a knife. His father was a diver, and from the shells of oysters that his father had gotten at the bottom of the sea a beautiful pearl handle had been fashioned for the knife.

Little Brother thanked the children with a smile, and then there came a boy from his own dear country of North America. He handed Little Brother a pencil that had been made from wood and lead taken from the forests and mines here at home.

Little Brother put his pencil and eraser and jackknife into his leather pencil case. Just then another child came into the room. This was a little girl dressed in a baggy gown with a veil over her face. She had come from far Asia and she brought Little Brother a lovly paint brush made from the hair of the camels in her country.

How thankful Little Brother was for all these gifts! He sat on the library couch with these queer children from far-away lands. And they all looked at one another very shyly and smiled.

Then bang! the door had opened and closed very suddenly and Little Brother's father stood in the room. He had been fast asleep and all these children from other lands had been only dream children.

Little Brother's father brought the boy a lovely pencil case filled with things just like his dream. He told his father about the dream children, and they both thought that the pencil case was ever so much more interesting now that they knew where it really came from. For he saw that these brothers and sisters of other lands were all necessary to help with even so small a thing as a pencil holder and what it contained. So he knew that truly he was a little brother to the big world; and his smile had been smiled back at him by the children of the world, because "A smile is the same in all languages".—Presbyterian Banner.

Are You a Yes-er?

"I think Mary Drew is a very foolish girl. She says yes to everything; doesn't know how to say no, I guess," said Ruth, as she came home from the business meeting where she had spent the evening.

"Is it as bad as that, Ruth?" asked her grandmother. "I don't think of Mary as a weakling."

"No," answered Ruth, "she's not that; but she does let them impose upon her most awfully."

"What has she done now, dear?" asked grandmother.

"Oh, nothing, but just be an easy mark. Tonight she let them elect her president of our league."

"That's quite an honor, isn't it, Ruth?" asked grandmother. "I should say that it speaks well for her ability."

"Yes, I know it does," responded Ruth. "But it's not a honor, it's a lot of hard work. The whole thing almost falls on the president."

"How do you account for her being chosen?" asked grandmother.

"Mostly because she always says yes to everything and it saves them from looking farther," Ruth answered shrewdly.

"But she has ability, hasn't she?" persisted grandmother.

"Yes, but she does more than any of them. I wouldn't work so hard," said Ruth, with spirit.

"How long have you known Mary, dear?" thoughtfully asked her grandmother.

"Oh, for a long time."

"When you first knew her," persisted grandmother, "could she have been president of your league?"

"I should say not," said Ruth. "When I first knew her," she reflected, "she was a very shy and timid girl and never had anything to say, not even an idea most of the time."

"Doesn't it seem very strange to you, then, Ruth, that this shy girl should now head your society? How did it come about? What was the first work that you remember that she did?" persisted grandmother.

"First, as I remember it," said Ruth, "she helped one of the older girls at a social, and I remember, afterward, that they were surprised to find that was so much help. She seemed to give her whole thought and self to making it go."

"Then what followed?" asked grandmother.

"Then," continued Ruth, "she was asked to be recording secretary, a job everybody hates."

"And what did Mary say to this?"

"Why, of course, she said yes. That's what she always says."

"And was she a good secretary?" prodded grandmother.

"I should say so," generously acceded Ruth. "At first she used to read her minutes very timidly, sounded sometimes as though her breath wouldn't hold out until she got through. But when she finished, you knew just what happened at the last meeting. You could almost see it. She put meat on the dry bones of the pros and cons of the business, all right."

"Was she secretary very long?"

"Oh, a couple of years, I guess. Anyway, until they needed a chairman for the prayer meeting committee, another job no one wants."

"And again she said yes?" queried grandmother.

"Of course," assented Ruth affirmatively.

"And again she was the best chairman they ever had, I suppose," said grandmother.

"Why, yes," said Ruth, surprised, as she recalled it. "Yes, she was. Seemed to know just what to do to make the work a success."

"First, a helper at a social, then secretary, then chairman of an important committee, then president," grandmother enumerated. "It was her yesses that did it, dear," she finally said.

"What do you mean, grandmother, dearie?" asked Ruth.

"Just this, girlie," said grandmother. "When any one will undertake a responsibility and give it thought and make it a success, she gets more out of it than any one else. It is an education that fits her for the next job higher. When you think of those young people who refused to be secretary before Mary took it, could they be president now, do you think?"

"No," said Ruth, "none of them. They have never tried to do anything."

"They are just where they were years ago, then," grandmother commented.

"Yes," said Ruth thoughtfully.

"Why did you say that, grandmother, dearie?" Ruth finally asked.

"Just this, dear, to show you that while Mary may have seemed to you to be the butt of their imposition, she has grown, through her years of service, from a timid, colorless girl to a capable leader of an organization. The lesson is plain, Ruth. You learn by trying. The yes-ers always grow."—Girls' World.

TOO MANY DOLLS.

I have a little pussy cat;
I have a doggie, too;
And so many, many dollies
I scarce know what to do.

But—say! a little girl I know
Has not a single one;
I'm going to give her two of them—
Oh! it will be such fun

To see how happy she will be
With these two dolls of mine.
I'll go right now and dress them up
So they will look just fine.

The Gate at Home.

James and Mary stood at the gate looking far up the street. A fire engine had just passed and turned the corner.

"Come, Mary, let's go to the corner and see where it goes," said James, and soon they were running as fast as their little feet could take them.

Now, mother had told them not to go far from the gate, for it is not safe for children to be on the street, but they wanted to see the fire engine again. They stopped at the corner, but the fire engine was not in sight!

"It must be up at the next corner," said James and away they ran. And around that corner they went, but no engine in sight! Then they became frightened.

"Why, which way did we come?" said Mary. They did not know. Mary felt like crying. James knew that he should not have gone so far. Just then the lady who lived next door came along and took one by the hand and took them home.

James and Mary were very happy now. When they reached home she said, "Come children, we will sit on your step and I will tell you a story."

"Oh, please do!" they said.

So she began, "Once upon a time there were six little pigs living in a nice little house all painted white, with a little white fence all around it. It was a lovely place to live. On one side was a larger pen for the older pigs, on another side was a large barn, on another side was a big green cornfield,

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes. "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer. writes in part: ". . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

and on the fourth side they could see great big trees and a steep hill.

"A little black pig said, 'I am tired staying in this pen all the time. I want to see the world'.

" 'Grunt, grunt,' said the other pigs. Then they walked around until they came to a little hole under the fence. They dug their noses in the dirt and worked until the hole was large enough for them to crawl through. And away they went. As they came around the barn they heard a dreadful noise.

" 'What can that be?' said a wee little pig. And they went around to see. It was some geese, and they came running towards the little pigs with their great wings opened wide, and they were making a dreadful sound.

" 'Come,' said the black pig, very much frightened, 'this is no place for us, these are not pigs,' and away they ran up the path towards the big white house.

" 'We will see what kind of a house these pigs live in,' they said. They reached the white fence and walked in the gate. But what was that big black thing standing out there by the house making a dreadful noise? Just then a man came out of the house, got in the big black thing and it began to move. The four wheels went round and round so fast it made them dizzy. And before they had time to turn around, a big shaggy thing came towards them.

" 'These are not pigs, either,' they said, and ran down the hill as fast as they could go, with the big shaggy thing coming behind them, growling and barking.

"When they reached their own fence and had crawled through, they were so tired they could scarcely walk, but the little black pig said, 'We have been out in the world and have found many noisy things in it besides pigs, and I think our home is the best place after all'.

" 'Grunt, grunt,' said the other pigs, meaning, of course, that they did too, and off they went to a cool, shady place to rest."

When the lady next door had finished her story, James and Mary were very quiet for a while, then James spoke.

"I think our home is the best place, too!"

When they told mother, they promised her never to go so far from the gate again.—Selected.

A lady was reproaching Mr. William Warren at a reception for going so little into society. "You ought to let us lionize you a little," she said. "I never heard of but one man," replied the veteran actor, "who was not spoiled by being lionized." "And who was that?" "Daniel."

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

Unity Convention Discussion.

Renewed efforts to achieve Christian Unity following the World Conference at Lausanne a year ago, are urged in the Report of the Episcopal Joint Commission on Faith and Order to the Forty-ninth Triennial General Convention of the Church, which will assemble in Washington, D. C., October 10.

The Report, which was made public at 281 Fourth Avenue, yesterday, and is sponsored by Bishop Charles H. Brent, of Western New York, who presided at the Lausanne Conference, Bishop William T. Manning, of New York, President of the Commission; Bishop James De Wolf Perry, of Rhode Island, its Executive Secretary; George Zabriskie, of New York, its Treasurer; Bishop Thomas F. Gailor, of Tennessee, former President of the Episcopal National Council, and other noted leaders of the Church, recommends that the Continuation Committee composed of representatives of one hundred participating Communions, "be informed that in the judgment of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church, the World Conference should be continued, care being taken to preserve its educational nature by excluding schematic action; and that when the opportune time arrives this Church will gladly participated in another meeting of the Conference."

Request Commission Be Continued.

The Convention is also requested to continue the Commission with instructions "to appoint in the near future a special committee of theologians and scholars—not confined to the members of the Commission—for the purpose of assisting the Commission to consider and report to the next General Convention on the Lausanne Report, and to confer as opportunity occurs on questions of Faith and Order, with other Christian Communions".

Noting the fact that it was a resolution of the Episcopal General Convention of 1910 which launched the movement for Christian Unity, the Report details the successive steps which led to the Lausanne Conference, through the constructive work of the Continuation Committee representing one hundred separate participating communions. A business committee of which the Hon. Charles E. Hughes, was Chairman, supplemented the efforts of this Continuation Committee, and the Lausanne Conference followed in August, 1927.

Report of Commission.

Discussing the results of this first general world conference on Christian Unity, the Report of the Episcopal Commission says:

"Considering the numerous differences, some very acute, which had to be faced, the success of the Conference in finally receiving for transmission to the churches six of its reports without a divided vote, was amazing. None the less, these reports are registers of discussions rather than committals of the individual members to the specific propositions affirmed in them. They are not transmitted to the churches as formal agreements or resolutions to be ratified, but as material for consideration, discussion, and further conference. It is to be remembered that the expressed purpose of the World Conference which your Commission was appointed in 1910 to bring about was educational. Its aim was to promote mutual understanding between Christian communions throughout the world, both of their agreements and of their differences, faithfulness to convictions was clearly promised; and in order that no communion might be deterred from sending delegates through fear of compromising committals, it was stipulated that the Conference should be limited to 'study and discussion without power to legislate or to adopt resolutions'."

"In other words," the Report declares, "the Conference was educational rather than determinative, and initiated rather than completed the study and discussion for which it was assembled. In thus initiating such study and discussion, it accomplished its true aim, and, by the grace of God, accomplished this in surprising degree."

Conclusions of Report.

Summarizing the Report concludes:

"Two conclusions are obvious. The first is that the reports transmitted to this Church and to other churches, do not require, or recommend, the adoption by the General Convention of any of the statements contained in them; but they constitute a body of highly important material for the deliberate consideration of their respective subjects, to which the Conference invites us. The second is that the Conference should go on, and should carefully retain that freedom from schematic proposals and official committals which made the Lausanne Conference so successful."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Doing Great Work.

Obscure in its general plan, the Episcopal City Mission of Washington is doing a great work quietly and more or less silently, the result of which may not be measured by present-day standards, but which will mean more and more the building of character, the righting of wrongs and the putting into actual practice that for which a Christian mission really stands.

M. M. W.

Diocese Under Inspection.

Washington, the home of the General Convention of 1928, will be more or less under inspection in October, when as a Diocese, its several departments will operate in the presence of thousands of people, coming from all parts of our country and from other nations. Of these, perhaps none is so little known and yet of so much value as that work officially designated as the Episcopal City Missions. The office or desk headquarters of this work will be found at Diocesan House, 1329 K Street, N. W. and the Superintendent is the Rev. Geo. W. Dow. From the amount of work accomplished, one could hardly believe that Mr. Dow and his secretary are the only paid workers in this field of activity, but then Mrs. Dow, in her sympathetic and untiring way, works with her husband all the time and helps to bring about such splendid results.

National Cathedral School.

The twenty-eighth academic year of the National Cathedral School for Girls on Mt. St. Alban, Washington, D. C., will open on October 4 with first class sessions on October 5, according to an announcement authorized by the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

The school enrollment this year represents thirty and forty states and several foreign countries. Miss Bertha A. Morgan, former dean and registrar at Bradford Academy, Mass., has been named Director of Studies at the National Cathedral School. She arrived on September 1 to take up her duties.

Miss Morgan is a graduate of Boston University, received her M. A. from Yale, and done special graduate work at Columbia University and the University of Chicago. She was at one time academic adviser at St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C., therefore, has had experience in the Church boarding school field and her recent experiences at Bradford and The Gateway in New Haven acquainted her with school questions and college entrance requirements. She understands, therefore, the relation between the secondary school and the college.

The National Cathedral School for Girls was founded in 1900 by Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, of California and Washington, because of her intense interest in the development of Christian womanhood.

Among the trustees of the school who are also trustees of the Cathedral Foundation, in addition to the Bishop of Washington are: the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington; the Rt. Rev. James Dewolf Perry, Bishop of Rhode Island; the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander; acting warden of the College of Preachers at Washington Cathedral; the Rev. William L. DeVries, Canon and Chancellor of the Cathedral; Canon Robert Johnston, rector of St. John's Church, Washington; Charles C. Clover, Charles J. Bell, Dr. William C. Rives; Corcoran Thom, James Parmelee, Dr. William Holland Wilmer, former Senator George Wharton Pepper and General John J. Pershing.

Personal Notes

The Rev. William Porkess, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., has returned to his parish, after an absence of three months in Europe. While there he visited England and was the preacher at Lincoln Cathedral and Grimsby Parish Church, the latter being built in 1190 A. D., and the mother of ten churches in that city.

The Rev. W. L. Kinsolving preached at Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., for the Rev. C. H. Holmead, rector, Sunday, August 26.

Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia

Including Stonewall Jackson's Operations in the Shenandoah Valley 1861-65.

By VIVIAN MINOR FLEMING,
Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

THE BIBLE AND EDUCATION

Everyone who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, among Europeans and Americans, can take its place. Western civilization is founded upon the Bible; our ideas, our wisdom, our philosophy, our literature, our art and ideals come more from the Bible than from all other books put together. It is a revelation of the divine and the human; it contains the loftiest religious aspiration along with a candid representation of all that is earthly, sensual and devilish. I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women; but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible. For in the Bible we have the nature of boys and girls, of men and women more accurately charted than in the works of any modern novelist or playwriter. You can learn more human nature by reading your Bible than living in a great city like New York.—Human Nature in the Bible, p. ix, x. By William Lyons Phelps.

The Organ Completed

The pipe organ is the accepted musical instrument for churches not because it is a big instrument, capable of filling a large auditorium with music, but because its tone-quality, expressive power, variety, and richness stir up deep spiritual emotions. The range of the organ extends from the swelling ground tones of the diapason up through all the levels of harmony to the chimes and other percussion stops that suggest echoes of heavenly music.

These percussion stops have a large share in giving "soul" to the organ. They are called "percussions" because they are played by the striking or the percussion of scientifically constructed hammers with ball-sharped composition heads against metal bars or tubes. The percussion stops are so essentially different in construction and tone quality from all the rest of the organ that the best organ builders depend upon firms specializing in them for this part of their equipment. Percussion stops can be installed in any organ, new or old. They will blend harmoniously with the rest of the organ or stand out in rare purity when used alone.

The custom of presenting a set of church chimes or organ Celestes as a memorial is growing in popularity. There is no more fitting memorial than the mellow tones that these percussions add to the beauty and richness of Sunday morning worship. Leading organists now maintain that no organ is complete without a balanced selection of such stops. Modern organ specifications more and more frequently include a set of Chimes, Harp, or Celeste.

"THE WONDER OF THE BOOK"

By

Dyson Hague

All lovers of the Bible will find in this book of 95 pp. one of the finest testimonies to the power and blessing of the Bible, as Dr. Griffith Thomas said. A Chinese missionary said that "The Wonder of the Book" was the clearest and most forceful thing of the kind he had found, and a lady valued it so highly than she bought one thousand copies to give to the missionaries and others in India. It has been translated into Chinese, Japanese, Syriac, Spanish, and is being translated into Malayalam in South India for the Syriac Church of Malabar. An American lady said she wished every minister in the world could read it.

It is most valuable for Sunday-school teachers, and for the young people in Bible classes, and makes a splendid gift for a teacher to give the members of a class, or a minister to his workers.

Its closing words are a summary of its substance and standard. "Think not of the Bible as a good book, or even as a better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love, far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, nay, more, as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; and, as St. Paul declares, inspired in totality. Read It Yourself. ## Thoughts For the Thoughtful

So long as we love we serve.—Stevenson.

God hurries not nor makes delay;
Who works for Him will get His pay
Some certain hour, some certain day.
—H. J. Hamilton.

I should prefer a firm religious belief to every other blessing.—Sir Humphrey Davy.

As I do my Father's will Within me grows the immortal part,
I have the power His gift to still
And never more my soul to chart
In quest unto the holy hill.
—British Weekly.

Nothing else is so interesting as religion when it is properly presented, and it is by far the most popular subject in the world today.

"There is a destiny that makes us brothers:
None goes his way alone:
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own."

"Worship without work becomes aimless and vain; work without worship is tedious and ineffectual; but when the two are properly balanced life is rich in experience and full of power."—Gilbert T. Rowe, in "Reality in Religion".

Did we but look out upon the world with our own eyes—the eyes wherewith we saw Christ and were made glad—and not through the glasses of custom and prejudice, the common path would become a shining trail whose end is God and every meeting with our fellowmen a tryst of love.—Mrs. Herman.

"At the core of every man's soul, deeper even than consciousness lies the hidden man of the heart, who can hear God speak. And if in our own selves that inmost shrine is a temple of the Holy Ghost our words and actions will show from whence they come."

If indolence be the besetting sin, we must watch against slovenliness in little things; if selfishness, we must lay ourselves out to consider and gratify the wishes of others; if vanity, we must secretly bless God in our heart for all mortifications of it; if discontent, we must review the many bright points of our position.—Dean Goulbourn.

A PREACHER WHO PUZZLES

One of the classic stories of secular journalism is that an editor, now dead, once of some distinction, wrote a criticism of Edwin Booth's rendition of Hamlet. The editor published the opinion that Mr. Booth probably possessed some talent and that it was deplorable to see him waste it on such a play as Hamlet, filled as it was with crudities, obsolete expressions and improbable incidents. The editor further remarked that this man Shakespeare was absurdly overrated as dramatist, poet and writer; that the pretence of admiration of his work was mere habit, tradition, superstition, inherited from the dark ages of Queen Elizabeth and King James. The editor also expressed belief that at least a dozen playwrights, poets and writers of the editor's time—this was about 1882—were as far superior to Shakespeare in intellectual power and literary product as the steam locomotive was to the stage coach as means of transportation.

This incident is recalled by the reading of criticisms of the Holy Scriptures, of the habit of Bible reading and of preaching from the Bible published by Harry Emerson Fosdick, a Baptist clergyman, and enthusiastically echoed and endorsed by Guy Shipler, ordained priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church and editor of The New York Churchman. Mr. Fosdick is one of the choice fruits of the Union Theological Seminary, but with him I am not concerned. At imminent risk of boring readers, I present some observations regarding Guy Shipler.

Here in this Bible Belt of the South we hold certain old-fashioned notions regarding the sanctity of pledges and promises and obligations of loyalty and honor. Therefore, the Rev. Guy Shipler is to us the object of fascinated, if somewhat contemptuous, curiosity. The secular editor, above referred to, had the excuse, if we may call it so, of being temporarily but excessively and crazily drunk and obesessed with the idea of saying something startling, daring, advanced, smart, liberal, progressive, He sobered in time and was heartily ashamed and penitent, although he was guilty of nothing worse than conspicuous and mortifying folly. The Rev. Guy Shipler, however, apparently continues to be proud of himself and his theological and editorial achievements, and manifests and displays symptoms of that almost incurable disease called "Enlargesis of the Cocoa".

We of the Bible Belt can understand changes of opinion, however grotesque, and mental distortions and perversions, however repulsive. What puzzles us is the mental and psychological processes by which a man may induce himself to retain ostensible membership in a religious organization while rejecting and deriding its most cherished and important principles and guide book and to accept advantages and emoluments from it while fighting with all his capacity, however feeble, to destroy that organization and the foundation on which it stands; wearing its uniform and living in its camp while working for its ruin. We can understand the possibility of treason, but it is difficult for us, with our age-worn standards of honesty and candor, to comprehend the person guilty of it proclaiming his own treason, boastfully, blatantly, continually—as Junius wrote of a certain Englishman who had betrayed his cause, "infamous and content".

When the Rev. Mr. Shipler was ordained a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America he was asked by the bishop, in presence of the congregation, these questions:

"Are you persuaded that the Holy Scriptures contain all doctrine required as necessary for salvation through faith in Jesus Christ? And are you determined, out of the said Scriptures, to instruct the people committed to your charge?"

Guy Shipler answered:

"I am so persuaded and have so determined, by God's grace."

If he had not so solemnly pledged himself he would not have been ordained.

In the preliminary exhortation, before ordination, the bishop charged Mr. Shipler:

"And seeing that ye can not by any other means compass the doing of so weighty a work, pertaining to the salvation of man, as with doctrine and exhortation taken out of the Holy Scriptures, and with a life agreeable to the same; consider how studious ye ought to be in reading and learning the Scriptures."

This was seventeen years ago. So far as recollection goes, the Holy Scriptures have not been changed in the interval in any respect. In The New York Churchman of August 18, Guy Shipler, the editor, published an editorial headed "Knowing the Bible". He congratulates the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of the Baptist Church, on having pointed out the futility of the "old-time sermons", including expositions of the meaning of Bible verses and narratives, "especially in an age which has abandoned the worship of the Bible as a fetish". "Birds of a feather flock together" and "Misery loves company". The word "fetish" means the idol, or image, worshipped in Voodoo saturnalia of the most backward black savages of Africa. As a considerable majority of the membership of the Episcopal and Baptist Churches in this Bible Belt continue to regard the Holy Scriptures as really holy and the inspired Word and Message of God Almighty to men, we are further puzzled to understand how Shipler and Fosdick reconcile themselves to continued membership and even nominal association with people so benighted, who know that our Bible is God's greatest gift to man. We laymen of the Episcopal Church especially are inclined to feel distinct repugnance to further acceptance and recognition by our Church as a spiritual pastor and master of a man flippantly repudiating his ordination vows, apparently without comprehension of his own indecencies, writing, as he does, in this same article, mournful regret that "even some Liberals" continue under the ancient hallucination that

"however our views of inspiration have altered the Bible remains the text book of the Christian, the pillar and ground of the truth".

And just seventeen years ago Guy Shipler told his bishop he was fully persuaded that the Holy Scriptures contained all doctrine required as necessary for salvation.

The ordination service has not been changed; and we of the Bible Belt are faintly curious to know how Guy Shipler would go about advising a member of his congregation thinking of entering the ministry—supposing such a contingency possible—to seek ordination.

"Of course," Mr. Shipler, ordained priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church, continues in his editorial, "the reader (of the Bible) must be taught how to interpret it, particularly the troublesome crudities of the Old Testament, but, for some reason or other, it will do him far more good to read of the pugilistic exploits of Samson than of those of Mr. Tunney." Then Guy Shipler gives his readers, of a Church paper, more sarcasm of the same kind, especially ridiculing the psalms, which Episcopalians of the Bible Belt are accustomed to read at each service, responsively and standing, in token of respect for the revealed Word of God.

The Rev. Mr. Shipler makes some concessions. "Of course," he writes, "we should know our Bible, but the reading of it as an end in itself has done more harm than good. We believe it should never be taught, or read, or preached about, except as the account of the expressions and the ideas of folk very much like ourselves."

And the Book of Common Prayer, accepted by Guy Shipler as his guide and method of worship, provides for the reading, at each service, of Gospel, Epistle, first and second lessons and the psalms for the day—five selections from the Bible which the Rev. Mr. Shipler—vowed and ordained clergyman of the Church and editor of a Church paper—thinks never should be read or taught, except in some rather indefinite circumstances.

To us of the Bible Belt, blest and gladdened with a generally dignified and deeply loyal clergy, the utterances of Rev. Shipler seem more appropriate for the professional wise cracker, funny man and sceptic of a village pool parlor than an ordained priest of our Church. He appears to be assiduously trying to thrust on us a hard, dry, mechanical kind of religion, strictly business, drained of all beauty and love, sweetness, tenderness, grandeur, promise. We cannot avoid the thought that presently he may be offering, with glib and loquacious salesmanship, some kind of apparatus from which we may be promised so many inches, or ounces, of moral uplift, spiritual renovation and consolation for our sorrows by dropping a quarter in the slot and pressing a button.

Which might be entirely right and satisfactory for some other denomination or for some new kind of cult; but which, if suggested for the Episcopal Church would bring to mind the worn quotation, used more than a hundred years to describe the kind of man who claims membership of a religion while false to its fundamentals—

"Who stole the livery of Heaven
To serve the Devil in."

It seems to us that the whole situation will be improved if the Rev. Mr. Shipler, editor of The New York Churchman, should resign from the ministry of the Episcopal Church and unite with some denomination that does not accept the entire Bible as the infallible inspired Word of God and the only safe 'Guide Book" for Life's journey.

III. THE EPISTLES.

Subject.—The Holy Spirit's message to the Church concerning the glorified Saviour, and our relation to Him (2 Cor. 5:16, 17).

The twenty-one Epistles give us a doctrinal statement of what Christ accomplished for us in His sacrificial ministry; what He is doing in His Priestly service; and what He will do when He comes as the Bridegroom of the Church (Heb. 10:5-17; 7:25; 1 John 2:1, 2; 1 Thess. 4: 13-18).

Purpose.—The Epistles were written to give us the basis of faith, both for salvation and service. What God has done for us through the finished work of Christ, gives us a sure foundation for faith, as to our salvation. We are saved from the guilt and penalty of sin by what another has done for us, even by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:8, 9; 1 Cor. 15:3, 4; Rom. 3:21-26; 4:5, 25; 5:1-11).

We are separated unto service and enabled to do that service because of what God is doing for us through the Priestly ministry of Christ, and by what He is doing in us by His Word and Spirit (Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25; 1 Cor. 12:1-11; Phil. 2:13; Eph. 3:16; 5:18).

What God will do for us when Christ comes to catch us up into glory, gives us continually a mighty incentive to lay down our lives for Him, assured that not the least service done as unto Him will ever be forgotten by Him or lose its reward (Heb. 6:10; Eph. 6:6,7; 1 John 3:2, 3; 2 Cor. 5:10; 1 Cor. 9:25; 2 Tim. 4:8; James 1:12; Rev. 2:10; 1 Thess. 2:19, 20; 1 Peter 5:4).

IV. REVELATION.

Subject.—The theme or subject of this wonderful book of prophecy is Judgment. It reveals to us the Person and Work of Christ as the Judge (John 5:22, 27).

As the One to whom the Father has given authority to execute all judgment, His glorious Person is prophetically revealed in chapter 1:13-16. Before this One all must stand to be judged in their own order, first those that are nearest to Him, His own Church, and last those farthest removed from Him, the wicked at the Great White Throne.

Having borne the judgment of our sins on the cross (ch. 1:5), He judges our ways as witnesses in Chs. 2,3.

In chapter 4 at His Judgment Seat in Heaven, He will reward His redeemed for all the service accomplished by the Spirit through us on earth.

Receiving the sovereignty or right to judge the earth in chapter 5, He opens up in chapter 6 the book of judgment, which will bring upon the unbelieving ones of earth three series of judgments, increasing in intensity, during the day of God's vengeance—first the seals, then the trumpets, and then the vials of wrath (Rev. 5:8, 9, 15, 16; Isa. 61:2).

When Christ comes to establish His kingdom, He will judge the beast and the false prophet, as well as the unbelieving of the nations and of Israel (Rev. 19:11-21; Matt. 25:31-46; 2 Thess. 1:7-9; 2-8).

After His millennial reign of righteousness He will judge Satan and the wicked, which will be the last judgment (Rev. 20:7-15).

Purpose.—The Holy Spirit has written this last message to reveal or make known to us what shall be the end or consummation, the fulfillment of all of God's redemptive counsels.

The One who cannot lie has spoken and He will make it good. His Word shall not return unto Him void, but shall accomplish that which He pleases, and prosper in that whereunto He hath sent it (Num. 23:19; Titus 1:2; Isa. 55:11).

THE BIBLE UNDER FIRE

By Dr. John L. Campbell

THIS is the title of a book by Dr. John L. Campbell, Professor of the Bible at Carson and Newman College, Jefferson City, Tenn.

Purpose of the Book.

"Several years ago a dinner party was given to a company of friends in the home of one of the most prominent Christian families in Chicago. Around the table the conversation turned to the religious agitation now going on throughout the Christian world. The lady of the house remarked, "People generally, but especially the young people, are perplexed and bewildered. They do not understand what all this trouble is about. The answers to the attacks on the Bible are abundant and convincing; but they are scattered in different publications. It is difficult to get at them. We need some book not too large nor too difficult, which will enable them to understand the questions involved and indicate the answers".

Attackers of the Bible.

Dr. Campbell deals with three movements that have attempted to destroy the Bible. They are Higher Criticism, Modernism and Evolution.

Higher Criticism Is With Us.

Dr. U. M. McGuire is the Assistant Editor of The Baptist. This is the official organ of the Northern Baptist Convention. The assistant editor is nobody's fool. He speaks from wide observation. He is particularly intimate with those who are officially guiding the convention. In a recent utterance he says, "When you and I were young, the methods of historical criticism were taboo. Now they are becoming standard".

Hazy Ideas.

The ordinary garden variety of preacher loves his Bible and is against anything that calls itself "criticism". But he has very hazy ideas as to what "higher criticism" claims to be. He knows that it is unbelief parading in the garb of scholarship. Dr. Campbell tells what it is and how it started.

Jean Anstruc.

"The modern founder of what is known at the present time as the Higher or Destructive Criticism of the Bible was a French physician of Jewish race, named Jean Anstruc, who was born in 1684 and who died in Paris in 1766, aged eighty-two years.

His Theory.

He noted a peculiarity that every reader of the Bible has observed, that in Genesis 1 to 2:3 the name of God (Elohim) is alone used. But beginning with Genesis 2:4 we find Jehovah God or Jehovah Elohim. Anstruc went through the book of Genesis noting these differences of names and then inferred, supposed, guessed, imagined, that the book of Genesis had been compiled from two already existing documents. In addition to this, Anstruc claimed that Moses used also ten minor documents relating chiefly to foreign nations and not immediately affecting the Hebrew people."

His Life.

His life has been written by Dr. Howard Osgood. "He (Anstruc) was a man of very bad character and amassed his fortune out of harlots and brothels. He was one of the most decried men in Paris. Voltaire sneered at him as a miser and debauche. Anstruc was a lascivious liver and the physician for the lascivious life of the wicked and drew his gain therefrom to his latest hour."

The Theory Developed.

Dr. Campbell shows that from this small beginning others carried on the work. The system demanded more and more authors for the writings of Moses.

"Thus the number of authors and editors went merrily on until the critics supplied eight, then ten, then eighteen, then twenty different hands that were employed either in furnishing the documents or in splicing them together. Wellhausen assures us that there were twenty-two different authors for the first six books of the Bible. Cornell makes the number twenty-six.

The Rainbow Bible.

"But we have something more astonishing and representative than this. The critics undertook to make a new edition of the Old Testament, printing in different colors the parts that they supposed were written by different authors. It is known as the Polychrome, or many colored edition of the Bible. Thirty-nine of their ablest scholars were on the committee that undertook this work. The critics have never produced a more scholarly body of men, chosen as they were, from their best institutions of learning in Europe and America. Only a few of the books of the Polychrome Bible have been published in this country. The work has been ridiculed out of court. Klosterman of Kiel derided the whole business by calling it the 'Rainbow Bible'."

Wonderful Editors.

To this Dr. Campbell says, "If the Scriptures are made up of the clippings and tatters and fragments that the critics tell us, then we have in this book something without a parallel anywhere in all the world's literature either ancient or modern. Alexander Hamilton and James Madison wrote for the Federalist a powerful journal of their time. But no one has been able to tell what writing is the production of Hamilton and which of Madison.

Religion and Progress.

"The critics would have us believe that a knowledge of God did not come until late in human history as man gradually developed. Genesis is full of references to God. This knowledge of one Supreme Being, the critics tell us, was 'utterly unknown until long after the days of Moses'.

Religion Deteriorates.

"It is just the reverse of truth. Belief in God is a native conviction of the human soul. It comes first. The farther back we go, up the stream of human history, the purer the worship becomes. After man left God, decay followed. Christianity was at first a pure and spiritual worship. Decay set in. We meet with Madonnas and patron saints, with images, with holy wells and shrines. So it was in the early history of humanity. Man started aright, but sin set in and darkness and death followed.

Modernism and the Virgin Birth.

"The modernists would have us believe that it is of no importance whether we accept the records of the virgin birth or not. It is a matter of vital importance involving the truthfulness of the Scriptures; the purity of Mary; a stain on the life of her Son; the fulfillment of prophecy; the relation of Jesus to His ancestors; the incarnation; and the whole question of the supernatural. Those who reject the virgin birth not only reject the veracity of the Scriptures, but logically they end with the rejection of the Deity of Christ. The drift is certain. All Unitarians reject the infancy records of Matthew and Luke.

Why Not?

"He who lived as never man lived, who taught as never man taught, who died as never man died, who ascended as never man ascended—if we knew nothing more we would conclude that—that He was born as never man was born. Miracles at the cross, then why not at the cradle? Angels at the tomb, then why not at the manger? A sinless life required a sinless origin. A supernatural life required a supernatural origin. The parts fit. Calvary demands Bethlehem, and nothing else would do. The Cradle, the Cross, and the Throne are all linked together.

Modernism and the New Birth.

"The Modernist knows nothing of this. One confesses to a sense of humiliation and shame as he finds the critic associating regeneration with 'adolescence' and the 'growing and expanding of the personal self'. This is naturalism instead of the supernatural, and this again is not Christianity at all. Without it (the new birth), we can know nothing of the Christian life here, nor of its blessedness hereafter.

"The Bible accomplishes the things that it professes to do. It has taken men of the mightiest intelelct and transformed them—men like Paul and Augustine, Martin Luther, John Bunyan and others. It has also gone down into the slums of sin and taken the very outcasts of Satan, and washed and cleaned them and made some of them stars of the first magnitude to shine forever in the firmament of God. Its signs and wonders have never ceased.

"In the church of which the writer was last pastor, there were half a dozen men whose united testimony, in any competent court, would send any man in that city to the electric chair. Men of known probity, intelligence and worth, who could not be led about by anybody. These men gladly came forward in our devotional services and voluntarily testified to the new power and blessedness that came into their lives when they accepted Christ as their personal Saviour and Lord.

"In that city, among the various evangelical churches, he could find a hundred or two like men, who could testify to the same thing. He could pass over this continent and find hundreds of thousands of men of similar character and worth, who would joyfully testify to the same blessed experience. The number of witnesses could be extended to all classes, to all ages, to all lands, and over all the centuries wherever the gospel has been preached and accepted."

The Critics and Prophecy.

"The religion of the Bible is the only one that has based a claim of divine origin on prophecy.

When Frederick the Great of Prussia asked his court chaplain to furnish a proof of the truth of Christianity in a single sentence, he received the prompt reply, 'Sire the Jew'.

"For eighteen hundred years these descendants of Abraham have been without a country, and yet they are found in every country. Throughout the Christian civilized world, in the cities of China, in the heart of Africa, amid the snows of Siberia, treading the burning sands of the desert, everywhere we find the wandering Jew.

"The Hebrew race has remained distinct from all other peoples. In a few generations people of different nationalities that meet and mingle together lose their separate identity. The various races that come to our shores soon blend into one American people. Not so, however, with the Hebrew race. Black as a Negro in Abyssinia; yellow as a Mongolian in China; white as a Caucasian in Europe and America, yet the Jewish people remain as separate as when they hung their harps on the willows by the rivers of Babylon. Empires have passed away as a shadow, leaving behind them only a name, but the Jews are still there, standing apart from all other races as in the days of Jesus Christ—rich though a thousand times despoiled; increasing in number and more united than ever, though scattered by a tempest of eighteen centuries to the extremities of the globe'.

" 'Kept' is the word to use. Through thousands of years the Jewish people have been held distinct and apart for a great purpose. A wonder such as this the world has never witnessed. Look at the prophecies of men moved by the Holy Spirit and then look with awe on the unfolding drama of their fulfillment. The Jew is the standing miracle of the ages.

"They are yet to be restored to their own land (Isa. 1:26; Zech. 1:17). Is there not something significant in the movements now going on in Palestine? This testimony of prophecy in favor of the Bible and its supernatural origin has never been answered and never can be."

A DIAGNOSIS

By Nelson Page Dame

I.

THAT there is something radically wrong with the Church, is the oft-expressed conviction of its enemies and its friends alike. To find out what it is, and to discover the cause and the cure for its illness, must be the deepest concern of all those who love her best.

Here is a diagnosis of her case offered by one of her best friends.

I suppose that we all agree, more or less, on these fundamental principles of the Christian Religion:

1. That God loves the whole human race, "the world", and proposes to save it from all its troubles, and to bring it eventually into a "Home", the "Kingdom of God", a righteous social order, which He will, one day, establish here upon the earth.

2. That, before this can be done, men generally must be convinced that sin, "transgression of the law", is the source of all their sorrows, and be induced to repent, to stop sinning, to keep the commandments (the Ten), and to do right towards God and man.

3. That in order to carry out this great enterprise, God Himself has come down to earth in the Person of our Lord Jesus Christ, to be the Saviour of the world, its King, its Teacher, its Life Power: the great "Shepherd of the Sheep", the "Commander and Leader of the people."

4. That Christ's plan is to collect and organize, in each community of men, a small company of His disciples and friends, who, seeing something of His vision and believing in it, will give themselves wholly and unreservedly to Him that He may use them as His body, His instrument for carrying out His purposes in that community.

Now, it is on this little body of men, in each community, that I want to fasten your attention. For here, I think, is the weak spot in the Church's life and work today.

I. It is not necessary to be a member of this body in order to be "saved" from hell and damnation, nor even from sin and its consequences. This company of Christians stands in the same relation to the community as the army stands to the whole body of the people in time of war. No one would think of urging the timid, the fearful, the weak, who want to be saved from the violence of the enemy, to go into the army as a place of refuge. The army will fight for them: but here we want the strong, the valiant, the fearless, who are ready to face hardship, grinding discipline, danger, wounds and death in order to save their people.

II. This little body of Christ's people is meant to be as conspicuous in each community as a "city set on a hill", a "light shining in a dark place". It must stand apart, be separate from the rest of the community as uniformed soldiers are from the civilian population around them. They are to be in the world but patiently not of it. They are "a colony of heaven", living by the laws and principles, following the fashions and standards of another, and totally different, social order: the "City of God". To allow the lines of demarkation between this little company of Christ's people and the community around it, to be obscured or obliterated would be to defeat the whole purpose of Christ, to hide or put out the light that is meant to lead them to safety and blessing. The Christians who are called to help Christ save men, will remain separate and distinct from the body of the saved, even when the Kingdom of God shall have fully come. The "Sons of God" will always be distinct from the "servants of God".

III. This little company of Christ's disciples must be so organized that, as a visible body, seen and known of all men, it can speak for Christ to the community around it: with "one mouth," one voice, declare the "mind of Christ" on any subject on which He has seen fit to speak. His Church is His only messenger, His only means of communication with the community which He proposes to lead out of its ignorance and error, its sin and suffering, into the land of liberty and light and life. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare him for the battle?" All the more if it do not sound at all.

IV. Membership in this little body demands the total surrender, the entire consecration of one's self to Christ. Once He called men to leave their homes, their occupations, their property and possessions, and follow Him about the country of Judea and Galilee. There was no other way in which He could teach and train them. Only by personal contact with Him, by literally "walking with Him", by seeing His works, and hearing His words, could they learn of Him and catch His Spirit. He does not now necessarily ask all His people to leave their homes and give up their occupations (He does ask some of us to do this); but He does demand of all those who would be His disciples, the entire surrender of themselves to Him, the subordination of all other claims upon their time and attention, their energy and their means, to His claims upon them. He will have no divided allegiance here. Family, society, business, the state; comfort, convenience, health, life itself, must stand aside for Him. He will be the "Lord of all", or nothing. It is as true today, as it was of old that "if any man love father or mother, wife or child", or anything else "more than me, he is not worthy of me". "He that hateth not" (in some sense) "father or mother", &c., "He that forsaketh not (in some sense), all that he hath, cannot be my disciple".

V. Every such body of Christ's disciples has two kinds of work. A man must eat and drink and sleep; minister to himself; his own needs of mind and body; so as to store up energy and strength for his work. But, of course, eating and sleeping, etc., are not the man's work. His real business is the expenditure of that energy and strength for others in his calling or occupation, whatever that may be.

So the Body of Christ; every congregation of the Church.

(a) It must minister to its own needs.

(1) It must make disciples, add to its numbers (as an army recruits its strength) by "preaching"; calling men to "come to Jesus", not merely to be saved but to enlist in His service, join Him in His great enterprise of saving the world and building a heavenly social order on the earth.

(2) It must equip and feed these recruits that they may grow into the likeness of their Lord by the ministration of the sacraments and the use of the other means of grace.

(3) It must instruct them in the "truth as it is in Jesus", and in the ways and plans and purposes of Christ by persistent teaching in its schools and classes and in "discourses" to the whole congregation; as Jesus "taught" His disciples of old.

(4) It must train them to work together under the orders of Christ, to cooperate with each other in carrying out the will of their Lord.

(5) It must discipline its members; direct and guide them in their lives and work, and settle the differences that may arise between them, in the way that Christ has prescribed. And

(6) It must develop in them the spirit and practice of unity and cooperation in the service of Christ for the community, for, of course, that body can do nothing for the community until it is at unity in itself and can work together in carrying out our Lord's will.

Of course, most of this work, all of it except the "preaching", must be done in private. It is not meant for the public and should not be done in the presence of outsiders.

(b) Now, having such a body of disciples in any given community, fairly united in their loyalty to their Lord, and in their love for each other, what would its work be? What would it be called on to do?

(1) It would be a body of witnesses in that community to the truth as it is in Jesus.

(2) It would be a company of Demonstrators of the righteous life; the way Christ says all men ought to live and act in the family, in society, in business, in relation to the state, its laws and its officials, etc.

(3) It would be a priestly body, on earth, to cooperate with Him, our great High Priest, in the heavens in "making prayers and supplications" for all the people of that community who may seek His help and blessing. And

(4) It would be a company of soldiers of Christ, to fight manfully under His orders and with His weapons, wearing His armor against the forces of evil in that community.

VI. The members of such a body in any community may well expect persecution in some shape or form. Indeed, our Lord has said that persecution is the evidence that the Church is living His Life and doing His work. "Blest are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake," etc. "They persecuted me, they will also persecute you."

Take the Church's work as the witnesses and soldiers of Christ. That work is:

(a) Officially to proclaim the beautiful truth that Jesus has revealed to us about God; His lovely character and His incredibly kindly purpose toward all mankind.

(b) To protest against, reprove, rebuke, deny, the falsehoods, the errors, the malicious lies about God of which the world is full today and some of which are proclaimed as God's truth from "Christian" pulpits. And

(c) To testify to the community around it that "its works are evil". Since its philosophy of life, its conceptions of God, of His plans and purposes are false, it is inevitable that it should sin against the fundamental laws of life and so bring trouble upon itself and others.

Now, if any one imagines that this can be done, even in the kindest spirit, without arousing bitter resentment, let him try it. Suppose in any mountain or rural community a small company of earnest Christian people, organized as a congregation of the Church, were to be convinced that our Lord's "mind" is that it is all wrong for men to "take God's name in vain"; that profanity (not saying "damn" and "devil" and "hell", etc.; that is not profanity, it is often only vulgarity, but) "taking God's name in vain" is insulting to God, and injurious to the community, and were to give notice publicly that they would not allow it to be done in their presence without a protest, what do you think would happen? Or suppose they were to publicly protest against evil speaking, malicious gossip, or dirty talk, or a married man's paying lover-like attention to some woman not his wife, or a married woman's receiving lover-like attention from a man not her husband, or the violation of the laws of our country against illicit distilling, or "bootlegging", or the sale of "moonshine", or the hatreds of feuds in which their neighbors are often involved, or the intolerable wrongs which some husbands sometimes inflict upon their wives, or gambling, playing games for money, or money's worth in prizes, or any other evil thing. Let the protest, the reproof, the rebuke be specific enough to indicate the evil doers or the evil deeds, and hold them up to public condemnation, what would happen? Anything from jeers and derision to curses and violence. It would require the nerve and courage of soldiers to face such resentment. An individual could hardly do this alone; nor any number of isolated individuals. But if a body of Christian men and women stood together as a company of soldiers of Christ, speaking the mind of Christ, in the spirit of Christ, using the weapons of Christ (protest, reproof, rebuke, the "sword of the Spirit", the "Word of God", the "tongue of fire", the cross: the willingness to suffer for the truth's sake, if need be), they would arouse the resentment and suffer the persecution, but they could put down the evil, and, in the end, win the praise and thanks of God and man alike. And there is no other way in which Christ can put down sin and transgression, and turn the world to God BUT this way: the effective, courageous work of His witnesses, and His Soldiers.

Here, it seems to me is the task laid upon the shoulders of those in authority in the Church: the collection and organization, the instruction and training of such a little body of Christians in each community of men, and the use of them in the service of them in the way that our Lord has prescribed, as His witnesses, intercessors, His soldiers and servants.

And that is about the only thing that the clergy are not even trving to do. They are so obsessed with the importance of numbers that they are filling up the Church with fairly well meaning people who make no pretense of meeting the terms of discipleship as our Lord has laid them down. They have not, and never had the slightest lives, and direct all of their activities as He demands of intention of letting Christ be the Ruler and Guide of their all His disciples. The clergy are trying to make a great many people slightly "Christian", when, what Christ wants, is a few people intensely, wholly Christian.

Many of the clergy seem to think that it is necessary to get people into the church that they may be saved from hell and damnation and "go to heaven when they die" and, as far as they can they are crowding the Church with people who have no more business there than the women and children and cripples have in the army in time of war.

IMMORTALITY.

Who hath not learned in hours of faith
  This truth to flesh and sense unknown;
That life is ever lord of death.
  And Love can never lose its own.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

FAMILY PRAYERS

MORNING I.

ALMIGHTY and Everlasting God, who dost rule and govern all things by Thy power and might and wisdom; who hast made us for Thy service, and art always doing us good; we humbly thank Thee for Thy loving care during the past night, and for all Thine unspeakable and never-failing mercies to us. Make us deeply sensible of Thy Divine Majesty and of Thy kindness and forbearance to us, and help us to feel our weakness and unworthiness. Incline our hearts to keep Thy law. Instruct us and teach us in the way in which we ought to walk, and guide us by Thine eye. Make us to be the people of Thy pasture and the sheep of Thy hand. Direct, sanctify and govern our bodies, souls and spirits. Enlighten our minds. Quicken our consciences. Cast out of us every evil thought and low desire and unworthy fear. Deliver and keep us from the power of evil habits and associations. Give us grace to present ourselves willing and living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to Thee through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Make all sinful affections to die in us, and all things belonging to the Spirit to live and grow in us: may we have power and strength to triumph over all evil: may we be endued with all heavenly virtues from on high and everlastingly rewarded.

Send us Thy blessed Spirit, and make us purely and perfectly Thine own. Help us to be faithful to the solemn vows of our baptism; to renounce the devil and all his works, the pomps and vanity of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh; to believe all the articles of the Christian faith, and keep Thy holy will and commandments: manfully to fight under the banner of our Crucified Lord, and to continue His Faithful soldiers and servants to our life's end.

Help us to love Thee our God with all our heart and mind and soul and strength, to worship Thee and give Thee thanks, and put our whole trust in Thee, and call upon Thee, and honor Thy Holy Name and Word, and serve Thee truly all the days of our life.

Help us to love our neighbor as ourselves, to do unto all men as we would they should do unto us, to love, honor and succor our father and mother; to honor and obey the civil authority; to submit ourselves to all our governors, teachers, spiritual pastors and masters; to order ourselves lowly and reverently to all our betters; to hurt nobody by word or deed; to be true and just in all our dealings; to bear no malice nor hatred in our hearts: to keep our hands from picking and steeling our tongues from evil speaking, lying and slandering. Help us to keep our bodies in temperance, soberness, and chastity; not to covet or desire other men's goods, but to learn and labor truly to get our own living and do our duty in that state of life in which Thou art pleased to place us.

We beseech Thee, bless and keep all who are dear and dear to us. Cleanse and defend Thy Church. Bless all ministers and teachers of Thy Truth, and Thy servants everywhere. Direct and control the hearts of our rulers and magistrates that they may execute justice and maintain peace and good order among us. Comfort the bereaved and sorrowing. Relieve all who are sick and in trouble. Deliver the oppressed. Enlighten the ignorant. Change the hearts of the wicked, and make Thy righteousness to prevail in the earth.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

By W. R. Chapman, A. M., Ph. D., D. D.

Text, John 9:17—"What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes?"

MAY I give another translation? "What do you say concerning Him, seeing that he opened your eyes?" I have, as you see, changed the wording a little, but have not changed the real meaning. I have simply made the words more modern; and, therefore, made the entire clause more modern.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery gives us this translation: "What have you to say about Him, now that He has opened your eyes?"

This is the modern English, but I think it is beautiful English. It is a very direct and pointed question. The blind man's answer is: "He is a prophet." The answer, too, is true and to the point.

What do you say of Jesus? Let your answer be what it may, you cannot get away from him. You can say He was inspired or simply a good man; a great Jew or Divine; a genius or a common carpenter. You can accept Him or reject Him; you can befriend Him or betray Him; you can love Him or hate Him; you can die for Him or you can again crucify Him. But I want to tell you, and emphasize it, that you cannot ignore Him.

When Jesus died, Joseph took down the body and placed it in his tomb which had been hewn out of the solid rock, and those in authority had it sealed, and put soldiers there to guard; but as a Christian of the first century very forcibly said, "It was not possible that He should be holden". That judgment has been often confirmed during the ages and centuries that have come and gone since that judgment was given voice.

A Strange Thing About Jesus.

But do as you may, bury Him if you want, but you can never permanently bury Him. It is impossible that He should be held in the tomb. He will roll away the stone which closes the door and go out. When you think you have institutioned Him, He reappears in a Luther, a Calvin, a Knox, a Wesley, a William Booth. You just cannot really do it. When you think you have gotten away with Him, He reappears in a Wilfred Grenfell or Mahatma Gandhi who appeals to your very soul, spirit and imagination; you see, you cannot push Him out of sight and keep Him there. It is a strange thing about Jesus Christ, but it is true, that although He is always being crucified, yet you do not kill Him, He is always very much alive.

What Do You Say About Him?

So the great question is, "What sayest thou of Him?" Some of the Jews asked this very question of a man born blind. Did this blind Jew answer the question? Yes. He said: "He is a prophet" (John 4:19; 6:14). This was a very personal question then. It is such now. But it must be met and answered by all of us. Every one of us must answer it. There is no escape. The question is before us. We had just as well answer it and answer it honestly. You must give an answer; and whatever answer you give to this inescapable question will be burdened with exceedingly important and weighty consequences. The question comes to you and me, and our answer will, for one thing, certainly pass judgment upon ourselves. And there is no escape from this; for "with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged". Our judgment of books, of men, of music, of art, of plays, and indeed of whatever else, we pass just such judgment upon ourselves. In the doing of this we show by our preferences what manner of men we are. And let me say this: that no man passes quite so significant a judgment upon himself as he does when he answers this question, What think you of Christ?

An American traveler hurried into a famous European art gallery, and hurried out, pausing just long enough at the door to contemptuously say to the venerable watchman, "Not a thing here worth seeing—not a thing". To this ignorant visitor the gray-beard door-keeper replied, "If you please, sir, these pictures are no longer on trial—the spectators are". That American was on trial with reference to art; and found wanting. So, friends, remember when you answer the question that Jesus Chhrist is no longer on trial, but you are, and I am. When we form opinions about Him, we show clearly that we are on trial. Even during the life of Jesus, when men passed judgment upon Him they judged themselves. You remember that certain Jews accused Jesus of being a friend of publicans and sinners, which was true, but in doing so they demonstrated the non-love and the hardness of their own stony hearts. At the cross many Jews sneered at Him and said, "He saved others; Himself He cannot save". No, He could not save Himself; He had to die for men. But as He did that, those men's sneers but revealed their own shame.

I tell you, that even men today judge themselves by passing judgment upon Him. Oh, that I could say this truth, and say it so strongly, so forcibly, so powerfully, and so convincingly that "There is no name under heaven given among men by which we may be saved"! That is only one way. Jesus is the way. Is this clear? I hope it is clear. Do you grasp it? I hope you do.

The answer you and I give to this momentous question will lay bare our very souls and spirits. Our answer will reveal what manner of men and women we are; and even more, it will emphatically reveal and determine what manner of men and women we are to be when we step out of these scenes into the great realms of the beyond.

Jesus Christ possessed a great power, which enabled Him to call forth the best in man and woman: if they had the quality which might be termed the best. In Peter and John He called forth the very best that was in them. And as a result these men became great in the Church, great as Bible writers, and great as Christians. This influence of Jesus has been thus affecting men and women down through all the centures that have come and gone since that time.

Personality of Christ.

Jesus Christ exhibited to the world an example of the greatest and sublimest personality that the people of the world have ever seen and appreciated. Men and women who have responded to the personality of Jesus Christ have grown sweeter, kinder and better with the advancing years. Their vision upon life here and upon the life to come has been increasingly clear, their soul-spirits increasingly noble, and their lives increasingly sublime and more like their Lord's.

Our answer to the question, "What think you of Christ"? does more than I have mentioned; even far more. It determines the sort and kind of civilization which shall rule in this world of ours. And the answer to this question determines the civilization that shall predominate in those who shall come after us. Our answer to this question and the judgment we pass do far more than affect ourselves. They pass sentence upon children yet unborn—yes, upon our posterity. Such influence never dies. It cannot die.

Let us consider well, then, what is involved in the judgment we pass upon Jesus, our Lord. In their judgment of Christ men and women do indeed judge themselves. There is no getting away from this. This question and our answers determine the type and kind of civilization that shall be enabled to survive and uplift humanity, or sink humanity to a lower level. If our judgments favor Jesus Christ this will form a great support of a civilization in which spiritual values will be given a chance to develop and ripen into the best fruit. Such judgment will affect all sorts and conditions of men and women. Such judgments, such good influences, such noble answers to my question, will be such that the horrors of war will cease, immorality will be blotted out, sin will soon be no more; and then will dawn that brighter, nobler, and better day, for which all good men and women are longing and ceaselessly praying. Then let our judgment be always for Jesus Christ, our Lord. The personality of Jesus Christ will and does influence us to render our judgments for Him and not adverse to Him. That personality has come down to us through the ages, centuries, and years that intervene between us and Jesus, our Lord. That personality influences us to be like Him and to do as He did while here, and to be like Him for eternity. It is the greatest personality that has ever pervaded mankind.

FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Keep, we besech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy perpetual mercy: and because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fail, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable, to our salvation; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THIS collect is for the Church, Thy Church. The framers of this collect probably meant the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and for that surely we do well to use these prayers; but I love to use these collects also having in mind that Church of which Samuel John Stone sings so lovingly and sweetly.

"The Church's one foundation
Is Jesus Christ her Lord;
She is His new creation
By water and the Word."

The second part of the petition of this collect, "keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable, to our salvation", recognizes the fact that we, His "elect", the "called according to His purpose", though in a state of grace, and assured of final salvation, have about us in this state of probation "things hurtful" and "things profitable", to our salvation and need constant help to choose between them, if we would "grow in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18).

THE Epistle for the Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity is Gal. 6:11-18, and its chief theme is warning against formalism and ritualism, that tendency so strong in weak human nature to lay too much stress on the outward form, and too little on the thing signified, on the "outward and visible sign", rather than on the "inward and spiritual grace given unto us" by that sign, when rightly and duly used.

The Revised Version translates the first verse of the Epistle. "Ye see with how large letters I have written you with mine own hand". If this be what Paul wrote, it tends strongly to show that his "thorn in the flesh" was some form of ophthalmia, that compelled him usually to employ as amanuensis; and indeed the six chapters of the Epistle would hardly have made Paul speak of it as a "large letter".

The sacrament whose formal and ritual use Paul criticizes here is circumcision; but the argument is equally strong against the abuse of any sacrament, as Baptism or the Lord's Supper. The circumcised Jew gloried in his circumcision, not only as the seal of his salvation, but as separating him from the Gentiles, cutting them off utterly from any hope of salvation, and when the Jew accepted Christ as his Saviour, who had Himself been "circumcised and obedient to the law for man", he found it very difficult to believe that this circumcision and obedience to the law for man by Christ, could be all-sufficient for the Gentile Christian, and relieve him of all obligation to and dependence on, this rite, so long established, and so strongly enjoined by Abraham and Moses. This exaltation of the rite, the cutting of the flesh, over the circumcision of the spirit, that we pray for in the collect for the first day of the year, was the besetting sin of the Jew, just as now Baptism by immersion is by some made of far too great importance, regarded as necessary to salvation; as if any washing of the body, however thorough, could "be of sin the double cure; save from wrath and make me pure", and accomplish that mortification "from all worldly and carnal lusts" for which the collect prays, "that we may in all things obey Thy blessed will, through the same Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord".

And even more has the Eucharist been exalted and abused to the great injury of the simplicity of the sacrament, and its beneficent use.

When we read of its establishment and first celebration in the upper chamber in Jerusalem by Christ Himself, as described in the three synoptic Gospels, and by St. Paul, and the great simplicity of it, with no ritual beauty whatever, we wonder at the way in which it is generally celebrated now. No command of our Lord is more neglected than "This do, in remembrance of me". And what was it that He did, and made us do. Take St. Matthew's account: "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said: Take eat, this is my body. And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them saying: Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

Could anything be more simple? more unadorned by ritual. There is no kneeling to receive the bread and wine, no reverence to the elements. 'Tis needless to call attention to the great additions that have been made to the simple eating of bread and drinking of wine, in the vast majority of Churches in these days, and we need not wonder that these additions attract so largely the attention and devotion of great numbers of those who come to a Lord's Supper so different from that instituted by Jesus of Nazareth, and that many come who, relying more on the ordinance, the outward and visible sign, do not receive the inward, spiritual grace, and fail to get the benefits which the Catechism speaks of in answer to the question, "What are the benefits whereof we are partakers thereby"? viz.: "The strengthening and refreshing of the soul by the body and blood of Christ, as our bodies are by the bread and wine."

St. Paul calls attention to those who glory in circumcision and in winning over converts to their views as to the importance of the rite to the Christian as to the Jew, and cried out, "God forgive that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world; for in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature!" The outward, visible sign is of no value whatever, except in so far as it brings with it the inward, spiritual grace. Observe the forcible words Paul uses to emphasize the separation of the Christian from the world. The Christian is crucified on the cross of Christ (by a figure) to the world; and the world to the Christian. His cruel death on the cross separates us from our sins, a separation even wider than that of the Psalmist: "Look how wide also that east is from the west; so far hath He set our sins from us" (Ps. 13:12); and by such an abyss should it also separate us from the world.

THE Gospel for the Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity is a part of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 6:24-34), and gives us some of the sweetest words of Jesus. "Consider the lilies . . ." is an anthem of unsurpassed beauty. I do not think Jesus of Nazareth was a "man of genius" in the ordinary sense of that term. Regarding the incarnation as intended to give us a typical perfect man, Jesus would not have been such, had He been a man of genius. Such a man towers above his kind, and Jesus, had He been such, could not have drawn close to His heart those whom He sought to save. But, if not a genius, these verses show a soul with all a genius' love of nature, fully responsive to it and its creations; and no wonder, as He was the Creator of it all, not only the lilies that He bids us "consider", but all creation, from the atom or ion, the least we know, to Sirius and Arcturus and the upper limits of His vast universe; yes, "by whom all things were made", as we often say in the Creed, too often, alas; said without due thought of His wondrous work. Meeting Jesus in the Gospels, in great humility, making Himself "of no reputation", "emptying Himself", taking "the form of a servant", even submitting to death at the hands of such weak instruments, 'tis hard to bring ourselves to believe Him to have created "all things, visible and invisible". The Nicene Creed is helpful here, beginning, as it does, with the declaration of the Oneness of God who made heaven and earth and all created things: yet goes on to declare that by the Son "all things were made". We are brought face to face with the mysterious Trinity, and can only bow in awe of its majesty. "The Father of an infinite majesty; Thine adorable, true and only Son; also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter."

When Jesus bids us in this Gospel, "Therefore I say unto you, Be not anxious for your life", as to eating and drinking and clothing, He evidently teaches that such anxiety for creature comforts, for material things, is in a way, service of Mammon; yet how hard it is for the Christian to avoid such anxiety; to be entirely satisfied with today's daily bread, leaving tomorrow's cares till tomorrow comes. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof"; what heavenly wisdom in this teaching of the Sermon on the Mount! Here is the key to true happiness in the Christian life. "Be not anxious for the morrow; for the morow shall be anxious for the things of itself." And the way to do this is plainly set forth by another precept: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness," laying emphasis on first; for we may be sure that He does not wish us to be careless in providing all that is really needful for a life of reasonable comfort. The command to seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness is suggestive of the prayer He had given in the former part of His discourse: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Dr. Schofield (in his Bible notes on this Sermon) distinguishes between the two Kingdoms, viz.: of heaven and of God. In the Lord's Prayer it is the former, of less scope than the latter, being limited to earth, while he regards the Kingdom of God as embracing all moral agents in God's creation, in heaven and earth, wherever they may be. When this age passes away, the less, the heavenly kingdom, will be merged and lost in the greater, the kingdom of God.

Jesus then urges us here to seek that universal kingdom of God; but we may do so now, in this dispensation, only by the progress of His Church, militant now, but destined to triumph in the glory of the Kingdom of God when He shall have put all things under His feet, even the last enemy, Death (1 Cor. 15:25-26).

The second part of the petition, "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven", corresponds with "Seek His righteousness", which those who seek will obtain and do His will on earth in large and larger measure, as grace is given them, not as in heaven, but approximating it more and more, as they strive for that "holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14). In this command, to seek God's righteousness, we begin to see more clearly the difference between our "filthy rags" of righteousness (Is. 64:6), and that "wedding garment" of the parable of the "marriage of the King's son" (Matt. 22:11), the "marriage garment" in which we may come, "holy and clean", to the heavenly feast, the Holy Communion.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by The Reverend Frank Cox—

THE newspapers of a few days ago told of some life guards who could not swim. They had been on the force for some time, had made splendid appearances and had even been able to pass their paper examinations, but they lacked the thing essential in time of danger.

There are too many in the Church like these life guards. They know everything except how to swim. They can discourse very eloquently on what they think about religion, but they do not know God, nor do they know their main task which is to win men to their Master, to save men's souls.

Many of our Sunday-school teachers are in the same fix. They may be better prepared on the technique of teaching than were the teachers of a former generation, but they do not know how to lead their pupils to Christ, nor even how to fill them with a knowledge of the simple facts of Christianity. Any one who has had to do with the pupils of our Sunday Schools knows that there is widespread ignorance of the plainest facts of the Gospel. The writer heard what was supposed to be a picked group of young men questioned as to what was the Gospel. They did not know. Many think that the Gospel is a general exhortation to be good and to do good and have no idea that the Gospel is the annunciation of the tidings of a Saviour. "Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." That is the Gospel—"God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish but might have everlasting life." How many of our scholars know that that is the Gospel mesage, yet ignorance at that point is fatal in Christianity?

In any other business than religion we would immediately discharge those who do not know their main jobs. No man can stand to see the lives of his loved ones endangered by inefficient life savers. We would not permit men to practice in medicine who knew nothing about drugs and their healing qualities. We think that in religion we can reverse the ordinary laws of cause and effect and can impart religious truth by those who do not know God and are ignorant of the methods by which men may be won to Christ.

Nor is the trouble confined to the lay members of the Church. There are clergymen who have never led a man to Christ. There are too many who, when they preach or when they visit or have personal contacts have not the slightest idea that there are men before them who need to be won to Christ.

We are accustomed to take things too much for granted. Many men who preach Sunday after Sunday to their congregations do so as though the men and women before them were all everything that they ought to be. They never touch upon individual sins and bring the conviction of sin to the consciences of their hearers. They are like the colored minister who asked a visiting brother to refrain from preaching on the subject of stealing because he feared that it would cast a wet blanket over the whole congregation.

In a church of which we recently heard the tenor singer, a married man had run off with the soprano, also married, and had almost destroyed the influence of the church in that community. These people had been listening to sermons for years and yet not one of the sermons had been searching enough to convert them to Christ. We need more sermons along the line of St. Paul's discourse—"Have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed?"

You cannot blame the members so much when they have been listening to so much milk and water preaching if they are somewhat ignorant of the elementary truths of the Gospel. We need deeply consecrated men with lives Spirit-filled who are not afraid to preach plain truths about plain sins, otherwise we shall be "like unto Sodom and like unto Gomorrah".

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite pasage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Mary E. Birckhead, of Proffit, Va.:

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth make you free" (St. John 8:32).

BOOKS REVIEWED.

WHAT PRICE TOLERANCE? By Paul M. Winter. Illustrated. Cloth. Pp. 350. Price $3.00. Published by the All-American Book, Lecture and Research Bureau, Hewlett, Long Island, New York.

This book, an enlargement of "Proof", reviewed in this column some weeks ago, contains a mass of information disclosing the purposes and methods of the Roman Church in its quest for political domination in the United States. It is unblushingly a campaign document, directed against the nominee of the Democratic party. We could wish the former volume had been sufficient for the present crisis. For it devotes two-thirds of its substance to quotations from Roman Catholic authorities, confessing the intention of that vast politico-religious organization which has its tentacles out in all directions to control Protestant America.

Just now this more elaborate effort, with much extraneous matter, couched in vitrolic and hatred-producing terminology, isi n danger of acting as a boomerang. There is always a law of expediency that cannot be wantonly ignored. There are times and seasons which determine the value of any such undertaking. The hour has not been wisely set. At present a ferment is being generated through the espousal of Mr. Hoover by a syndicate of newspapers with several millions of readers. That has called forth frantic remonstrance from Mr. Hansbrough, former representative from South Dakota, and for twenty years a Republican, now chairman of the Smith Independent League. His temper is stirred over the allegation in these papers that "a vote for Smith is a vote for the Pope". And he demands that Mr. Hoover check this libellous charge; he further avers that if Mr. Hoover remains silent, he will be guilty of attaining to the Presidential chair by means of religious bigotry. In this Mr. Hansbrough's logic is weak; his hectic appeal is both a confession of possible defeat and a desperate mental disorder. Mr. Hoover cannot say that a vote for Smith will not be a vote for the Pope; for many Romanists cherish Mr. Smith's election on that very score. They have said so; they devoutly believe it; they equally, with devotion pray for it. Mr. Hoover has said all that he is competent to say: "By blood and conviction I stand for religious tolerance both in act and in spirit. The glory of our American ideals is the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience".

We must not forget that Roman Catholic aggression in judicial and municipal fields has long and patiently been tolerated by the American people. But we have been warned that if ever a Roman Catholic shall be nominated for the Presidency, the long-festering unrest will break out. That hour seems to have arrived. But if Mr. Smith is defeated, it will not be through religious bigotry, which Mr. Hoover may be guilty of failing to suppress. It will in part be through the dread of the insinuating advance of this subtle organization ever ready to spring into action when pelf and power are to be coveted. There are other considerations, too. The Christian Century regards the present campaign as a referendum on Prohibition.

Men from both parties are changing places. Kindly disposed Protestants are considering Mr. Smith's personal excellencies as far above any religious antagonisms. Indeed, he is a better Romanist, spiritually, than many of his traducers. The Protestant world would be infinitely higher in spiritual value, if its members were as faithful as he in the discharge of its religious obligations. So, many Republicans will vote for Smith; many Romanists will vote for Hoover. The problem will be solved in the popular verdict as to which is the more efficient man for the high office in sight. Yet we have to allow that prejudice will operate; and to those who wish to be well furnished in ammuntion for opposing Popery in this land, "What Price Tolerance" will be a valuable asset.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Mr. Editor:

For aid in research concerning the early Evangelicals of the Protestant Episcopal Church, I am very anxious to obtain a copy of the Life of the Reverend Devereux Jarratt and also of his sermons. The first volume of his sermons was issued early in 1793; the second volume later in the same year. The latter contains a notice that the manuscript of the sermons had been purchased by "William Glendenning, Preacher of the Gospel". The third volume was published in 1794. The first volume was dedicated to "The Vestry and Inhabitants of the Parish of Bath and County of Dinwiddie".

I write in the hope that some reader of The Southern Churchman may know where copies of these books may be obtained and are available for purchase.

PROTESTANT OR CATHOLIC.

Mr. Editor:

The following resolution was adopted by the last General Convention: Resolved, the House of Bishops concurring, That the Thirty-nine Articles together with their Title Page be omitted from the Book of Common Prayer, and that rfeference to the Thirty-nine Articles in the Table of Contents be omitted, and that the proposed changes be made known to the several dioceses in order that they may be adopted by the next General Convention in accordance with the provisions of Article X., of the Constitution.

The effect of the passage again by the General Convention of this resolution (which is not now susceptible of amendment), without any provision for the preservation of the Articles of Religion, will not only discard them from the Prayer Book but will repudiate the formularies of the Church which they contain.

This resolution, moreover, cannot be legally passed, for Canon Number 46 declares the Articles are an integral part of the Prayer Book and, as they contain matters of doctrine and as the Convention has denied to the Commission on Revision permission to change any doctrine in the Prayer Book, the omission of the Articles would constitute a change of doctrine and such action would be ultra vires.

These Articles need to stand and be observed if the Church is to retain its Protestant character and if they had been heretofore adhered to and used as the Constitution directs we would not now have a party of the Church contending for their repeal. The Bishops almost unanimously voted for removal and a majority of the whole clergy seemed to have originally favored it, although they have solemnly engaged to conform to the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of the Church, including all of these set forth in the Articles of Religion. If the Articles have not been subscribed to, then nullification has been practiced.

The discussion about the Articles is not to be deplored, if rightly conducted, but is proper and wholesome, and in accordance with the Constitution which provides that every proposal to change the Prayer Book shall be made known to every diocese that all Church members may be informed and elect delegates with this legislation in view. If the Constitution had been diligently followed it would not have been necessary for the Laity to have prepared a petition to the General Convention on the subject. This petition is the expression of the body of the Laity and should be signed by all members of the Church who wish to protest the removal of the Articles and maintain the integrity of the Church.

If the discussion is to be deplored, as some would have it, then surely it is because some of the clergy have resorted to the commonest sort of ridicule of the Articles, even amounting to sacrilege.

It will be the activity and devotion of the Laity, with their Constitutional power which requires their consent, that will prevent this radical change in our time-honored Prayer Book.

The Laity for themselves have the duty and responsibility, without the direction or the influence of the Clergy of deciding and voting their convictions upon this vital matter, effecting the very existence of the American Church as originally founded.

CATHOLICS AND EVANGELICALS NATURAL ALLIES.

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of August 11 the Rev. J. R. Ellis criticizes me, not altogether ungenerously, for a phrase in an article contributed by me to The Living Church last April. I wrote of "bringing souls to the sacraments", rather than of "bringing souls to Jesus", or "to the Cross".

I would not like your readers to weigh me in the balance and find me entirely wanting, just on account of one sentence picked out of a peroration. As a matter of fact, a large part of the article in question was devoted to the subject which it might be supposed I had ignored: the necessity of the spiritual contemplation of our Divine Saviour by the Christian soul if that Saviour's work in the world is to be done. I can assure your correspondent that no Catholic Churchman values the sacraments for any other reason than as an access to our Lord. They help "to bring souls to Jesus". When I speak of "bringing souls to the sacraments", I mean just what Mr. Ellis means when he speaks of "bringing souls to Jesus" or "to the Cross".

Many of the disputes between Catholics and Evangelicals in the Church are logomarchies and nothing else. We battle over the phrase used, rather than about the idea behind it. The pity of this is, that Catholics and Evangelicals are really natural allies in defence of the tremendous foundation verities on which the Church of the Apostles is built. We ought today to be standing shoulder to shoulder, forgetting the smaller things on which we do not agree, and remembering only the great truths which we hold in common and without which the Church dies: the dogmas of the Holy Trinity, of the true Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, of His miraculous birth of the Virgin Mother, of the atoning value of His Bloody Sacrifice on the Cross with His physical Resurrection and Ascension into heaven; in short, the Nicene Faith.

Surely here is a battle worth fighting. Surely these things are fundamental; whereas so much of the rest is largely governed by devotional temperament, differences in which ought to be no bar to fellowship and comprehension.

Your correspondent pleads for a return to the Prayer Book. Your readers might like to know that at Nashotah House we follow the rubrical directions of the Book of Common Prayer with as much care and fidelity as is practicable in this hurrying age. The legendary extravagances of Nashotah House do not exist; in fact, they never did. There are few parish churches in the North (I regret to say that I know little about Southern conditions) where modifications in the letter of the American rite are so few and insignificant as in the chapel of Nashotah House. In this respect also, the differences between us are quite capable of a sympathetic understanding.

In another matter I feel that Mr. Ellis is wrong. I am not a "party" man—indeed, there is no such thing as an organized Catholic "party" in the Church, so far as I am aware—but I know that if Mr. Ellis has discerned an Anglo-Catholic conspiracy to get rid of the Thirty-nine Articles in the interests of Rome, he is pursuing a phantom. If there is a plot, the Catholics are in it as gullible innocents and not as sinister conspirators; but there is none.

The Articles have no terrors for Catholic Churchmen. They are far more deadly to the neo-Unitarianism of today, our common enemy, than to the traditional non-Papal Catholicism professed by the Catholic wing of the American Church. They condemn nothing which I personally believe, teach or practice. I could subscribe to them tomorrow, if the Church required it, with but few qualms; and my hesitation would not be due to such articles as XXII., XXV., or XXVIII., but to such, for instance, as XIII.

There will be plenty of Catholic votes at the coming General Convention cast in favor of keeping the Articles where they are, as a great bulwark against infidelity in the Church. There would be more votes if our Evangelical friends would devote their attention to their real enemy rather than us, for it is not easy to retain the judicial temperament while crouching in a shell-hole.

I fear that my plea for a rapprochement between loyal Catholics and orthodox Evangelicals in the Church will not meet with a very hearty welcome from extremists on either side. Nevertheless, here is one avenue to friendship and understanding which might profitably be explored by leaders whose love for the God-Man Christ Jesus can overcome the inherited prejudice of "party".

Dean of Nashotah House.

FINDING LOST SHEEP.

Mr. Editor:

We are making an earnest effort to reach all isolated Church people in North Dakota. Where distance makes it possible they will be ministered to by the nearest clergymen, and, in addition, we hope to send to each family a monthly letter. To those who desire it literature will also be sent. All over this State there are many scattered families whom the Church must not neglect.

May I request our clergy to cooperate with us in this important work? I would greatly appreciate their kindness in advising me of any individuals moving to North Dakota at this or at any future time. It would also be a help if we could be advised of families who may have come into this State during the past year.

I will see to it that these people are put in touch with our clergy and given whatever ministrations are possible. This little service on the part of rectors throughout the country may save many families and individuals from being lost to the Church.

Wilfred C. Marsh, Archdeacon.

POISONOUS ATHEISM.

Mr. Editor:

That was a fine illustration on your front page this week, "Stepping Stones to Paradise Lost". I believe the poisonous atheism of so-called "Liberals" in our Church is the gravest danger that confronts us at this time.

Memorial Tablet to Army Chaplain.

September 2, in the U. S. Military Chapel at Fort Snellings, Minnesota, a tablet was dedicated to the memory of the late Father Gear, priest of the Episcopal Church and pioneer Army Chaplain, who for over twenty years ministered at Fort Snelling, and was one of our national heroes so intimately connected with early life in the Northwest.

The memorial is placed on the east wall of the chancel near the altar. It is of cream colored carrara marble, of churchly character with appropriate ecclesiastical emblems and it bears the arms of the Gear family emblazoned in heraldic colors. The following inscription is cut in illuminated medieval lettering:

"To the Glory of God and in Memory of Ezekiel Gilbert Gear,
Chaplain, United States Army, stationed at Fort Snelling, from 1838 to 1858."

Born in Middletown, Conn., on the 13th day of September, 1793. He departed this life in Minneapolis on the 13th day of October, 1873.

"A Great Man in our Israel is fallen; a brave-hearted soldier after the battle of four score years, has entered into rest."

This memorial is placed here in the Chapel at Fort Snelling by one of the sons of his niece, Mary Josephine Mason Remey. Anno Domini, 1928.

The tablet is the gift of Charles Mason Remey, of Newport, R. I., and Washington, D. C., a grandnephew of Father Gear, and a son of the late Rear-Admiral Remey, U. S. N.

The memorial is of Mr. Remey's own design, executed in Italy by Florentine workmen. He has recently published an illustrated biography of Father Gear.

The First Annual Summer School for Church Workers in North Dakota.

The first annual summer school of the District of North Dakota was held in Valley City, N. D., from June 12-20, inclusive. The grounds and buildings of Chautauqua Park were secured for the entire period.

The Faculty included:

The Very Rev. H. S. Brewster, Fargo, Dean.

The Rt. Rev. J. Pointz Tyler, Chaplain.

The Rev. T. A. Simpson, Registrar.

The Rev. C. H. Collett, Grand Forks, Christian Social Service.

Miss Elizabeth Beecher, Hastings, Neb., Christian Missions.

The Rev. H. F. Davenport, Bismark, N. D., Synoptic Gospels.

Miss Mildred Alley, Philadelphia, Pa., St. Paul's Epistles.

The Rev. H. N. Tragitt, Detroit Lakes, Minn., Religious Education.

The Very Rev. H. S. Brewster, General Course.

Besides those on the regular staff were the following special lecturers:

Prof. J. Reinhart, University of North Dakota.

Dr. Hunter, College of Agriculture, Fargo.

Deaconess Riebe, China.

There were twenty-five full-time students and six others who attended a number of lectures. Ten parishes and missions were represented in the student body.

The spirit of the school was excellent. Those who attended went home enthusiastic boosters for next year's summer school, which, we have every reason to believe, will greatly exceed this one in attendance.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

notes with gratification that Mr. Frederick C. Morehouse, editor of The Living Church, is safely on the way to complete recovery after his recent serious illness, and, with the Living Church Family, offers thanks that he will soon be at his desk to continue his career as an editor, devout and consecrated in the work of our Lord and His Church.

Bishop Quin Ordains Six.

Six men were ordained to the diaconate in the Diocese of Texas by Bishop Quin within a single week in June, a thrilling occurrence in a diocese which for some time had given no men to the ministry. Five more ordinations are expected next year, and there is a growing list of candidates and postulants in the diocese.

Greek Liturgy Used.

In St. Luke's Church, Manila, the Greek Liturgy was celebrated once this year, for the first time in theh istory of the Philippine Islands, it is said. A Greek Orthodox priest, the Rev. Fr. Maravelis, on his way from Brisbane to San Francisco, was the celebrant. The service was attended by ten Filipinos, three Americans, six Greeks and three Syrians.

"Babel Committee" for Chinese Mission Board.

The Chinese Board of Missions at the Chinese General Synod appointed a committee of two bishops and two archdeacons which illustrates a peculiar difficulty of the Chinese Church, for each of the four committee members speaks a different language, i. e., the dialects of Fukien, Chekiang, and Canton, and Hankow Mandarin, Bishop Norris says, "Archie Tsen (the presiding officer) hoped for immediate action by this babel committee, and writes that he is very disappointed!"

Convention Study Classes.

Forty-eight study classes have been organized to be held in the mornings from October 12 to 20, during General Convention in Washington. The subjects cover practically every phase of Church work, including almost every department of the National Council and all the cooperating agencies. Among the leaders, in addition to some of the Church Missions House staff and the officers of the various organizations, are Mrs. John M. Glenn, Dr. Adelaide Case, Mrs. Harrison Elliott, Captain Mountford of the Church Army, W. W. Pettit, Ph. D., of the New York School of Social Work.

Among Diocesan and Other Papers.

East Carolina has had a special social service number. Southern Virginia for a few months has been sending a copy of each isue to every vestryman in the diocese. The Eastern Shore Churchman (Easton) gave several full pages of a full issue to pictures illustrating the work of the Church throughout the world, borrowing the cuts from the Publicity Department. The Texas Churchman turned over almost the whole of a recent issue to the subject of Church work among college students. One of the larger parish papers, St. Luke's, Evanston, has reprinted the Spirit of Missions page, which lists the national organization of the Church, Council and Department members, etc. Rural clergy will like to read thes tory, "The Few Sheep in the Wilderness", in the Holy Cross Magazine for August. tI is rather hard on the English bishops, who undoubtedly have troubles of their own, but it is a beautiful picture of American Rural Work.

Work Among the Moslems.

One of the most fascinating papers among those which even in the summer make little weekly snowdrifts on one's desk is a four-page apparition printed entirely in Arabic and Chinese. It is one of six little tracts used in evangelistic work for Moslems in China, a work whose difficulty is exceded only by its importance. There are few converts, and they face bitter persecution. One must hope and pray that just as Africa was formerly almost impenetrable to Christian work, and is now begging for it, and just as work among Moslems in the Near East has in the past been carried on against bitter persecution, but now is gradually feeling a change to a more tolerant attitude, so in China, antagonism may yield to the winning power of Christianity. Our missionaries, the Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Pickens, of Hankow, are doing Moslem work, in connection with the Society of Friends of Moslems. The Society, organized in 1927, derives most of its small income from the Moslem Committee of the China National Christian Council, the American Christian Literature Society in China, and individual memberships, $1 yearly, $10 for life. The Quarterly Newsletter for July, 1928, has an annotated reading-list of books on Islam.

The Church Overseas.

Two book reviews of exceptional interest are in The Church Overseas for July. One is a review of "China and England", by Prof. W. E. Soothill of Oxford, recently exchange professor at Columbia. The other describes the famaus San Min Chu I, Sun Yat-sen's Three People Principles (nationalism, democracy and social welfare). Articles and reviews and world-wide misisonary news make the quarterly issues of The Church Overseas of interest and value. It is published for the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly (Church of England), at Church House, Westminster, S. W. 1, London. One shilling a copy.

Christmas Cards Again.

The Girls' Friendly Society is continuing its custom of securing beautiful Christmas cards from England and the continent as well as in this country. At the Society's national office, 15 East Fortieth Street, New York City, there will be a salesroom for those who are able to make their own selection. In addition, there are sample books and sample boxes, embracing the complete assortment of cards, which will be sent to those who wish to assist their local branch of the Girls' Friendly Society or their parish by having a Christmas card sale. Circulars containing full information regarding these methods of distribution and sale may be obtained from the above address.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Old Buck Mountain Church, Earlysville.

On Tuesday, September 4, a "Home-Coming Day" was held at this old church, which was largely attended. The clergy present were Archdeacon Neve, D. D., Associate Archdeacon W. R. Mason, the Rev. George P. Mayo, D. D., Dr. Churchill Chamberlayne, the Rev. W. H. Watts. Mr. Sidney Coates, the lay missionary in charge gave an address of welcome, which was followed by an historical address by Archdeacon Neve, in which he specially commemorated the Rev. James Maury and the Rev. Matthew Faury, father and son, who successively were rectors of the church from 1754 to 1808. He mentioned an interesting fact: that these two clergymen conducted a school for young gentlemen and that among their pupils were three boys who afterwards became Presidents of the United States, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe, whilst yet another, Meriwether Lewis, became the leader of the Lewis and Clark expedition to the Pacific coast, which added the great Northwest to the territory of the United States, an enterprise which the Encyclopedia Britannica describes as follows: "No later feat of exploration, perhaps, in any quarter of the globe has exceeded this in romantic interest." Archdeacon Neve expressed a hope that a tone suitable memorial would, before long, be erected to commemorate these two former rectors, as the influence of their teaching and example may have had much to do with their pupils' after-achievements, and the whole world recognizes the vast importance of the Declaration of Independence and the Monroe Doctrine.

Dr. Churchill Chamberlayne, Principal of St. Christopher's School ,near Richmond, gave some additional information of great interest, and closed with affectionate words of greeting to the congregation whom he had served in the early days of his ministry. There was a large number of communicants, representatives being present of families which had been associated with the old church for generations.

In the afternoon the congregation reassembled, and the Rev. George P. Mayo, D. D., founder of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, not far away, took the lead in forming an association for the preservation of the old church, and a regular organization was affected.

Archdeacon Never then dedicated an altar cross, vases and an altar book rest, in memory of members of the Farish, Huff and Burnley families.

A former rector, the Rev. W. H. Watts, rector of Clifton, N. J., also greeted the congregation and recalled some interesting incidents connected with his ministry among them.

The services were in charge of Archdeacon Mason, under whose supervision the work at this point is being carried on, with Mr. Sidney Coates as resident missionary.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

An Associate Mission has been established at Beattyville.

The Rev. C. M. Lever will assume charge of St. Thomas, Beattyville, and will also retain charge of the missions at Revenna-Irvine; Hazard; Jenkins; Pikeville and Shelby, with residence in Beattyville.

The rectory in Beattyville is being put in thorough repair at a cost of $1,500, which amount has about been subscribed. It is expected to have the work completed by October 1.

The Rev. A. Patterson is now pastor-emeritus of St. Thomas' Mission, with residence at Patterson Friendly Farm, and will devote himself to the missions centering at Patterson Farm and to his outlying missions in Lee County. One Sunday a month he will have service in Beattyville.

Miss Carr Goes to Chatham.

Miss Ophelia S. T. Carr, a communicant of the Cathedral Parish, and until recently a teacher in Hamilton Colege, Lexington, has accepted a position in Chatham Hall, Chatham, Va. Miss Carr, besides being a teacher, is a lawyer and one of the few women colonels of the State on the Governor's staff.

During the month of July a Daily Vacation Bible School was conducted in the Community Hall of St. Andrew's Church, Lexington.

New Priest in Paris.

The Rev. Harold O. Boon, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., will take charge of St. Peter's, Paris, and the Church of the Nativity, Maysville, with residence in Paris, giving the morning service to Paris and the evening to Maysville. At his request he will be instituted by Bishop Burton on Sunday, October 7.

Mr. John Bryant, of Atlantic City, N. J., and a student in the Virginia Theological Seminary, in July and August assisted the rector of Trinity Church, Covington. Mr. Bryant was one of sixteen men from the various seminaries of the Church who, under the auspices of the Social Service Department of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, were, during the months of July and August, taking a practical course in social service.

Resigns Hungarian Mission.

The Rev. Dr. Geza de Papp has resigned his charge of the Hungarian Mission, Lynch, because of the fact that the Concordat, or affiliation, between the Magyar Reformed Church and the Protestant Episcopal Church has failed. The Hungarian congregations have not supported their ministers in this relationship. It is expected that Dr. de Papp will have his future ministerial relationship to some one of the branches of the Reformed Hungarian Church in the United States. The diocese wishes Dr. de Papp and his family every blessing in their new field of labor.

The Rev. C. S. Hale is continuing his services at Mt. Sterling, as opportunity offers, in connection with his associate deanship in the Cathedral, Lexington.

The whole indebtedness of St. Stephen's Misison, Latonia, Covington, on July 1 was met, and steps are being taken looking forward to its consecration. A street assessment recently laid against the property may delay the consecration.

The Rev. Franklin Davis, of Danville, has been appointed by the Bishop to take charge of Christ Church, Somerset.

The Rev. Theodore S. Will, of Kingsville, Md., has been called to Calvary Church, Ashland, but his decision has not, as yet, been finally given.

The mission at Louisa, will be cared for by the rector of Calvary Church, Ashland.

The fall Convocation will be held in Richmond, on November 7.

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy prepetual mercy; and because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fail, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvation; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

ST. MATTHEW, THE APOSTLE.

O Almighty God, Who by Thy blessed Son didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist: Grant us grace to forsake all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same Thy Son Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

LUX DUCIT.

Charles Ballard.

In the wilderness,
Through all my years,
The Holy One goes before me.

In the splendour of day I see Him,
Wrapped in His mantle of cloud—
Infinitely far.

In awe and wonder I gaze
At the Moving Shape that draws me,
Marking the way.

But when the shadows grow black,
And night closes in around me,
So that the path is lost,

Oh! then I see Him near at hand;
And the glowing folds of His garments brighten,
And flash into flame!

Philosophy or Religion?

Louis Deschamps.

Under the guise of humanizing the sciences, many profound and metaphysical theories, heretofore secluded in the study of mature scholars, have been thrust upon the public in sensational books and popular lectures. Delusions of intellectual superiority have lured unsuspecting individuals into a maze of conflicting ideas. In their zeal for freedom of thought, many college professors have overlooked the fact that the rich fare of scholars may cause untold sickness in the immature minds of young students. Even the very learned doctors themselves sometimes lose their bearings in the uncharted seas of extreme reason. Modern questioning of Holy Scripture is serious enough from the irreverence it engenders, but all the more so because of the fact that the only true answers to the questions are apparently unintelligible because of the absence of a personally experienced religion. It is too often merely a contest of philosophies, a coldly impersonal comparison of theories with dogmas.

When classes are resumed in the colleges and universities, there will be many young men and women who earnestly desire to think through this matter of conflicting freedom of will and thought as opposed to their creed. Earnest, conscientious Christian students, as well as the irresponsible young people without the benefit of Christian home training, fall alike before the terrible onslaught of the fear of being deceived by acceptance of religious beliefs. Few mature and tried Christians can appreciate the tremendous effect upon a young person's mind of the fear of being the victim of a superstition, or the severe pangs of wounded pride from the mere suggestion that freedom of will and thought has been denied. Youth is extremely frank and sincere, quick to resent the slightest taint of hypocrisy. A violent reaction usually follows the change of any established habit of thought, so that many young men and women find themselves adrift before they realize it. It is confusion, not malice; logic, not conviction that makes young Christians question their creed. The most hopeful factor in the return to their faith is the fact that philosophy or science has nothing to offer in place of religion, and, therefore, the essential truth of religion is proved by the reality of the aching void its absence causes. The purpose of this article is to indicate a line of thought that has been proved in the experience of thoughtful students who have emerged from the darkness of doubts with a firmer and dearer faith in Christianity.

Mankind has always questioned the fundamental facts of life. Children retrace the racial development in the progressive stages of their questions. From this inborn thirst for knowledge in the great mysteries of human life and destiny, there came the explanations of certain profound thinkers who were called philosophers. Their theories were limited to the educated few, the great masses of the people remaining in ignorance. Meanwhile, a certain people became aware of a mystic consciousness of God, an inspiration to express something within themselves more powerful, more profound, more lasting than purely human things. The revelation of God to man within the individual heart and experience proved more real and vital than the logic of the philosophers, because people began to experience an inner power greater than themselves, a mysterious spiritual force than changed conduct and attitudes for the good of humanity. Its truth was established in the conception of love, consecration to something finer, more sublime, and more lasting than anything of merely selfish motive. Religion became a historical fact in the life of Jesus Christ, whose life and teachings proclaimed Him as the incarnation of God.

Into the hearts of people came a living fire of experience, not self-derived as were the theories of the philosophers, but inspired by the mystic awareness of God within the individual. People were no longer satisfied with a petty universe of human logic. They found happiness in a spiritual conviction so intimate that it comforted them in adversity, yet so universal that it gave them a conception of eternity. By the powerful example of the lives of Christians whose faith preserved ideals of love and human welfare, otherwise lost because of reason's derisions of human frailty, religion overcame the pagan philosophies of powerful Rome and learned Greece.

Philosophy is merely an academic exercise of logic. Religion is a universal living fire of personal experience for good. Faith embodied in creeds is simply the homage of mortal mind to immortal spirit. It is the mental act of kneeling before God, whose manifestation in human lives includes all that makes life really worthwhile—love, duty, idealism, and vision. A philosophy reasons, a faith is its own reason for being, because it enlivens, cheers, and inspires. Why believe in God? Because He is Life to all who know Him, not a cold theory of life. How can one intelligently accept the miracles of Holy Scripture? Because the reason of the heart is more satisfying than the reason of the mind, which must acknowledge its own limitations regarding the mysteries of life. Belief is the result of experience, not of logic. Religion is infinite in experience. Every good thought, noble deed, kindness, and lasting pleasure is an expression of religion. While philosophy dictates its cold demands of logical cause and effect, religion whispers: "Out of the heart come the issues of life." And who can deny the vital importance of the imponderables, the daily miracles of love, the powerful inspiration of idealism that lifts our mortal span of life above the futility of years into the eternity of spiritual things? What greater proof of religion's truth than the Christian's peace of mind and serenity in the very Valley of the Shadow of Death? Why must one believe a dogmatic creed impossible of actual proof in terms of logic? For the same reason that one must believe similar miracles of Birth, Growth, Light, Electricity, the Cosmos, not to mention the miracles of one's own mysterious faculty of consciousness itself.

Religion must be preserved sacred, personal, mystic. It is one's most intimate experience, the expression of one's real and immortal self. A philosophy is merely a theory. After all, what would it profit a man to gain all knowledge and self-supreme wisdom, if he thereby lose his soul, which depends on religion for its life and growth.

To Live Unto God.

The Christian inheritance is Life—not future, ideal, or imaginary, but present, practical, and personal. There are four essentials to healthy, vigorous life.

Food comes first, for the greater part of the body is concerned with the appropriation of nourishment and its correlated activities, and it has to be suited to our age, constitution, and pursuits. We are happy to live in a land where there is enough for all. Jesus said, I am the bread of life. The soul is properly nourished only in continued fellowship with Him. The world's worst agony is spiritual hunger.

Good air comes next. The tragedy of a slum is its foetid atmosphere and so we have "fresh air" holiday schemes for little children condemned to live there. Sometimes the heart is polluted with the vitiated breath of sin. Christ is the mountain top. To live with Him is to enjoy the pure air of Heaven.

Cleanliness is another essential. The portrait of the unwashed barbarian of the middle ages in Europe, drawn by one of our latest historians, is by no means inviting. Water is a food. It is also a bath. In Ephesians 5:26 the "Word" is the instrument of our cleansing. Habits, ambitions, desires grow foul and mean. In the word of God there is correction. Regular study of its wisdom purifies the soul.

Exercise is last but not least. Natural functions unemployed will breed disease. Men and women of sober years learn to play in order to escape the penalty of luxurious inactivity. Spiritual health makes the same demands upon us. Jesus went about continually doing good. Do we follow His example? To find a definite task in Christ's Kingdom is to reach the heights of joy. Strength comes with the doing of it.

These are the secrets of a healthy Christian life.—Presbyterian Banner.

A PRAYER.

Rev. Thomas S. Forbes.

Father take my hand, for the way is dark
And I am far from home.
Lead me along the toilsome path,
No more from Thee afar to roam.

Oft have I wandered far from duty and from Thee;
Oft yielded to the Siren songs of sin;
But, yet, Thy love hath followed after me;
The still small voice hath called me from within.

Amid the turmoil of a busy life,
Enable me Thy voice to hear.
Stretch forth Thine hand and lead me in the strife;
To all Thy loving signals tune mine ear.

A Smile Wins.

Laughter is the birthright of every child. It should be cultivated in every home. Children are afraid of formality and in proportion as the atmosphere is stiff, severe and exacting, will they be rigid and unresponsive to all efforts at training in the art of happy living. Just one smile limbers them up astonishingly. A real laugh with them makes them as clay in your hands, plastic to your slightest touch.—From "Children, the Magazine for Parents".

HYMN.

O Christ the Life look on me where I lie
Ready to die
O Good Samaritan, nay, pass not by.

O Christ, my life pour in Thine oil and wine
To keep me Thine;
Me ever Thine, and Thee for ever mine.

Watch by Thy Saints and sinners, watch by all Thy great and small
Once Thou didst call us all—O Lord recall.

Think how Thy saints love sinners, how they pray
And hope alway,
And thereby grow more like Thee day by day.

O Saint of saints, if those with prayer and vow
Succour us now . . . .
It was not they died for us, it was Thou.

"'Tis very good for strength
To know that some one needs you to be strong."

For the Young Folks

NO LONGER.

No longer of Him be it said,
"He hath not where to lay His head".
In every land a constant lamp
Flames by His small and mighty camp.

There is no strange and distant place
That is not gladdened by His face.
And every nation kneels to hail
The Splendor shining through its veil.

Imprisoned for His love of me,
He makes my spirit greatly free;
And through my lips that uttered sin
The King of Glory enters in.

Two Ways of Looking at It.

"Hello, Dan. What are you so busy about?" was Tom Sanders' greeting as he sauntered up to the shady end of the school steps where Dan sat busy with pencil and paper.

"Math," returned the latter briefly. "Trying to solve one or two of these quadratics before the bell rings. You see, I went to that lecture last night and I simply couldn't find time for these until now. Have you done them?"

"I have not," returned Tom emphatically. "And what is more, I think you are a nut to be fussing over that old algebra lesson. Don't you know Professor Milner said he'd excuse anybody from reciting today who went to the lecture last night? And as he isn't going to mark us on his lessons at all today, I don't see why you need trouble yourself about those equations. You've got a good excuse."

"But, Tom," protested Dan, "you've got the wrong idea."

"What do you mean—wrong idea?"

"Why about excuses, and especially about Professor Milner's excusing us. That simply means he won't keep us in or mark down if we haven't prepared the lesson before we go to class. The fact that we have an excuse doesn't actually take the place of learning the lesson. It won't help as much when "exams" come around. And it won't do me any good at all some time after I get to be a civil engineer and want to figure out how strong to build a bridge. The fact that I had an excuse for not getting this lesson last night won't help me with my bridge specifications. Don't you see?"

"Excuses," Dan went on soberly, "can never take the place of performance any more than the best reason why there is no food available will keep one from being hungry. The most that can be rightly expected of an excuse is that it will temporarily turn aside blame and give you another chance to make good. It can never take the place of making good. The best excuse in the world for not having learned to solve these equations won't take the place of knowing how when I get ready to use them. The thing that counts will be whether I know how or don't. Why I know or don't know will make comparatively little difference. And it's that way about everything."

"Oh," said Tom slowly, dropping down on the step beside Dan. "I see. Lincoln had a good excuse for not becoming educated. He was poor and had to work hard and hadn't many books. Nobody would have blamed him if he had gone on and spent his life chopping wood—but the fact that he had the best sort of an excuse for ignorance would not have taken the place of knowledge. If he had relied on his good excuses, nobody would have blamed him, but then nobody would have voted for him for president. Yes, I see. Excuses, reasons why not, are all right in their place, but it is performance that counts. Here, lend me a pencil, will you? I'll stop resting on my excuse and get busy."

The Wonders of Doll Land.

Evelyn Johnston.

One bright moonlight night in June little Rose was sound asleep in her white bed. Rose has skin like a lily, cheeks and lips like a June rose, hair like gold and eyes of sea blue.

This little girl had always wanted a walking doll; and to see the wonders of "doll land".

That night she awoke to find a fairy god-mother standing by her bed. She said: "Rose, dear child, what is thy most wanted wish?"

Rose replied: "A walking doll and to see Doll Land."

"My dear, your wish shall be granted if you promise to be a very good girl." Rose said she would.

Rose was a good girl after that, for she very much wanted a walking doll like herself and to see "doll land".

That night Rose heard a tapping at her little window and a sweet, soft voice saying, "Let me in, let me in".

Rose jumped out of bed, ran to the window and what did she see but a beautiful doll!

"Oh! ah! did you come to me?"

The doll replied, "Take me to your bed, I have something wonderful to tell you."

"Oh, a walking doll!"

"Yes," she replied.

Rose and the doll sat in the bed. The walking doll said, "Fairy godmother said you have been a sweet, good girl, and that you want to go to doll land."

"Oh! Can I?"

"Yes, I have come to take you. Quickly put on your little slippers. They climbed out the window and got into a beautiful carriage made of shells and drawn by blue-birds. There was a footman, a driver, oh! just everything nice.

Up, up into the air they traveled. The stars gave a merry hello! to Rose and to "the walking doll". They passed the moon: the man in the moon said, "Hello"!

When they got to "doll land" two doll soldiers guarded the gate. "Guards," said the walking doll (they bowed to her), "this is Rose" (they bowed to Rose).

The beautiful gates made of gold open; they walked into the garden. Rose saw the most beautiful sight she had seen in all her life—cunning little houses made of roses, lilies and tulips; statues made of gold and silver inlaid with diamonds and rubies; streets made of beautiful shells; the lights were of diamonds, pearls and rubies; the trees were beautiful, shrubs with drops of water on them that glittered like crystals. In the middle of "doll land" was a beautiful lake with swans riding on it, and on the backs of swans were dolls.

Rose was introduced to the king and queen. They were sitting on a throne made of gold, trimmed in white roses. They were dressed in white silk and velvet with crowns of gold on their heads.

Walking Doll and Rose bowed. Walking Doll said, "Dear King and Queen, this is little Rose, who has come to see the wonders of "Doll Land".

King and Queen said, "She may have the pleasure".

There were maids and valets dressed in gold and white suits and gowns.

The band played while beautiful dolls of all kinds danced and sang.

There were American, Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Eskimo, Negro, Indian sailors, clown, jumping jacks, baby and fairy dolls; toy dogs, cats, sheep. horses and swans.

The dolls were dressed in silks, velvets, satins, flowers, gold, silver, diamonds, pearls and rubies.

Rose rode on the backs of the horses, petted the dogs, sheep and cats. On the lake she rode on the backs of the swans.

Rose visited the homes, which were beautiful. After she had seen all the wonders, the dolls joined hands and danced round Rose.

Then Fairy God-Mother came to take her home. Rose took the Walking Doll's hand and said, "Come on".

"Oh! I can't go, but I will come to see you every night."

Happy Rose said, "All right!"

The fairy carried Rose home in a carriage made of pearls drawn by swans. The fairy tucked Rose in bed, and when Rose awoke in the morning she said: "Oh! I have seen the 'wonders of Doll Land' and I'm the happiest girl in the world."

A Little Frosted Cake.

"We are going to spend my birthday in Enfield," Rosabelle Bird said to Pauline, her doll.

It was two days before Rosabelle's seventh birthday. Just as Father was called away by important business, old Cousin Lucy Lee wrote that she was very anxious to see Mother. It would not do to take Rosabelle on either trip. So they decided that she could go to visit her great-aunts in the next state.

Mother took Rosabelle with her while she went to call up Aunt Charlotte by long-distance telephone. Rosabelle listened with interest. At length she heard Mother say: "Oh, thank you. Then we'll send her to Enfield tomorrow in the conductor's care." And later on Mother said: "And don't try to celebrate for her birthday. Just a little frosted cake or something."

"It will be a queer birthday," Rosabelle confided to the sympathetic Pauline. "Not one of those aunts has a little girl. But anyway, we'll have lots of fun traveling all by ourselves."

Meanwhile in Enfield, Aunt Charlotte, whose children had all grown up was telephoning to Aunt Eve, who had no children. Aunt Eve, in turn, telephoned to Aunt Ruth and Aunt Lucinda. Each of them said to the other: "John's little girl is coming to visit Charlotte. She'll miss having a birthday party, but she likes frosted cakes."

On Rosabelle's birthday, Aunt Charlotte was shut up in the kitchen a long time. When she finally came out, she said, "Look on the pantry shelf, Rosabelle, and see what you can find."

Rosabelle ran to look, and there she saw a pretty white-frosted cake about two thirds the regular size of grown-up cakes. Her name and age were written across the top in pink frosting. She was delighted.

Later in the morning a basket arrived. "A little frosted caramel cake for Rosabelle with love from Aunt Eve", was written on the card tied to the handle of the basket.

"Well, I declare," said Aunt Charlotte, "I must have mentioned frosted cake to Eve, though I don't seem to remember doing so."

"Oh, for another little girl to come to a party and help me eat these lovely cakes," thought Rosabelle.

Before the morning was over, Martha, Aunt Lucinda's colored cook, came puffing in. "Somethin's in this heah basket foh yo'," she said, smiling at Rosabelle. "Jes' exac'ly like yo' yaller curls!"

It was a lovely gold-colored cake with orange frosting, Rosabelle laughed with pleasure. Then, after Martha had gone, she and Aunt Charlotte had a hearty laugh together.

"Isn't there a little girl anywhere near who could come to help me have a party?" asked Rosabelle wistfully.

"I'm afraid not," said Aunt Charlotte. "The new minister has come, but his family haven't come yet."

By this time there were three frosted cakes in a row on the pantry shelf. Aunt Charlotte said they should be cut at supper.

"Three cakes for one girl!" Rosabelle kept thinking.

But before supper there were four—at five o'clock the bus stopped, and the driver handed out a round box from Aunt Ruth.

"Another cake?" said Rosabelle.

She pulled off the wrappings and gave a shout. Here was the finest cake of all! On top in its rich chocolate frosting were three decorations: a bright red rose, a tiny silver bell, and a toy yellow canary that looked almost real.

"Oh, see," she cried. "My own name—Rosa-belle Bird."

Then she and Aunt Charlotte sat down to have supper. They had just begun when there was a flurry in the front yard.

It was the minister's family, coming down sooner than they had expected to. They were getting out of their car for a rest and a drink of water.

How Rosabelle's face shone when she saw two little girls. And each of them was carrying a doll. They both looked hard at Rosabelle and Pauline.

Of course Aunt Charlotte invited them to stay to supper. Rosabelle and her guests, Lila and Alice, and the dolls

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes. "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer. writes in part: ". . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

A Clever Horse.

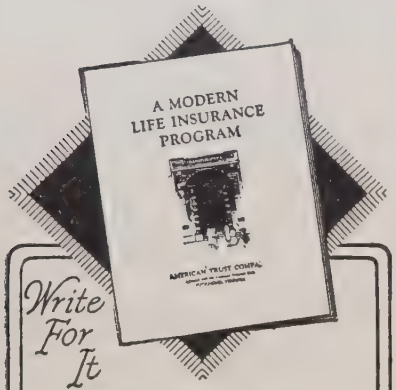
Billy was a fine horse. The blacksmith who put on his shoes lived a long distance from Billy's stable, and he had never been over the road since the day he was shod.

A few weeks after, the blacksmith saw Billy coming toward the shop.



Thinking the horse had run away, the blacksmith turned him around and tried to make him go home.

The horse trotted off, but the blacksmith had only fairly gotten to work when he heard a noise, and, on looking up, he saw Billy.

This time, before driving him away, the smith looked at his feet and found Billy had lost a shoe. He put on a new one, and waited to see what the animal would do next. The horse looked at the blacksmith, and as if asking whether he was done; then pawed to see if the shoe was all right, and, giving a neigh of contentment, started for home on a brisk trot.

His master knew nothing about it till the day following, when the blacksmith recounted it as a great joke.—Exchange.

The task and avowed aim of the Church cannot be the preservation of its own life, or the perfection of its own machinery, or the guarding of its own creeds, but the contribution it can make toward the new earth in which dwelleth righteousness.—Christian Observance.

Deaths

THORNTON: Entered into eternal rest August 30, 1928, at Fredericksburg, Va., MISS MATILDA GRAMMER THORNTON, daughter of the late Champe Brockenbrough and Elizabeth Grammer Thornton, of Port Royal, Va. The sorows of those who moan her will be tempered by the thought that she lived her span in rectitude—a sincere Christian, a loving daughter and sister, a loyal friend.

"There is no death
What sems is transition,
This life of Mortal breath
Is but the portals of the life elysian."

A. P. T.

MUNFORD: MISS LUCY TAYLOR MUNFORD, daughter of the late Colonel George Wythe and Elizabeth T. Munford, entered into eternal rest September 5, 1928, at her home, 307 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Virginia. Services from the residence Friday, September 7, conducted by Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop St. George Tucker, and the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., the rector of St. Paul's Church.

"He giveth his beloved sleep."

ELLIOTT: Died, at her home, Sewanee, Tennessee, August 30, 1928, SARAH BARNWELL ELLIOTT, daughter of the late Bishop Stephen Elliott, of Georgia.

"They shall be Mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make my jewels."

ELLIS MUNFORD TALBOTT.

ELLIS MUNFORD TALBOTT entered into eternal life on Saturday, August 11, 1928, at Richmond, Virginia, in his sixty-first year. He was a son of Mrs. Sallie Munford Talbott and of the late Mr. Chas. H. Talbott. Besides his mother he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Aurie Hall Talbott, who was the daughter of Dr. Charles Hall, a distinguished and beloved physician of Macon, Georgia; by his sister, Mrs. A. Churchill Young; and by his brothers, Allan and Charles H. Talbott. The funeral was conducted by the rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, of which he was a member, and his body was laid to rest in Hollywood Cemetery on Monday afternoon, August 13, 1928.

He was educated at the Episcopal High School, near Alexandria, Virginia, and at Heidelberg University in Germany. After engaging in business at Macon, Georgia, he returned to Richmond, where he had been brought up and where he had a large circle of friends and relatives. He was a rare and noble soul, possessing the graciousness and courtesy of manner that made him beloved and honored by all who knew him. On the evening before the critical operation a group of his friends gathered in his room at the hospital, and, although they knew and he knew the seriousness of the ordeal that awaited him, he radiated the spirit of good humor and comradeship so dominant in his nature. He was throughout his life the gentleman, calm and unafraid, and in that spirit he met his summons at the end. His going leaves a gap in the hearts of his loved ones that cannot be filled, but his life is a radiant possession that leaves nothing to regret. He has fought the good fight and has kept the faith, and we have sure confidence that he has laid old on eternal life.

B. D. T., JR.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Extensive Activities.

In a recent monthly report of the work to the Diocese of Washington, the activities were listed under headings as follows: Services, Relief, Office, and Field. The statistics found in this report tell a story of how the sick, the imprisoned, the destitute and the needy wherever found, have been ministered to. Statistics are usually cold and meaningless, but when they tell us that paroled prisoners have found a "first friend", that positions have been secured for the unemployed in large numbers, that mothers pensions have been obtained, that hospitalization has been provided for many, that families have been rehabilitated, that evictions have been prevented, that food and clothing have been provided for needy people and that in addition to these, thousands have been helped by the different church services carried to the institutions or home, one wonders how so much ground can be covered by the work of just three people and statistics take on meaning.

Mr. Dow, the Superintendent, states the object of the City Mission is as follows: "To provide spiritual, mental and physical aid to the shut-in, the unfortunate, the sick and thes trayed." In commenting upon the work, he says further:

"We don't all have to go to the prison, or the institution, to give service, or to learn; but we find there the results of much ineffective and hypocritical practices. It is amazing to look into the many intelligent—aye, and really fine—faces behind the bars, and among those in the hospitals suffering from their folly, and to realize that the vast majority of them are in their early youth. Seven men were electrocuted in Kentucky in one prison, in an hour and a half the other day, and five of them were under twenty-six years of age.

"Never will I be able to eradicate from my memory the scene at the jail, here in Washington, when three were executed for the murder of one man. My interest was centered in the youngest of the trio, a lad of nineteen, who was carried to the electric chair on a stretcher. I had baptized him at the jail, and Bishop Freeman confirmed him there. My visits and ministrations to him had endeared him to me greatly. Of the two others, one was a Roman Catholic, who went to his death with a crucifix in one hand and a cigarette in the other. The third man was a Jew. His chanting, "Eli, Eli", that mournful Jewish wail, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me", was weird in the extreme. It seemed to be a strange, sad spectacle for a "Christian" land! Why do we allow it? Are not the Church people responsible in any way?"

PERSONAL NOTES.

Mr. Alexander W. Weddell, who, since 1924, has been American Consul-General at Mexico City, has been appointed by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Creighton, Bishop of Mexico, as an alternate lay delegate to the approaching General Convention at Washington; representing the Diocese of Mexico. Mr. Frederick Adams, Chancellor of the Diocese, is expected to attend as delegate.

AGAINST SOCIALISM IN THE CHURCH

RESOLUTION

To be presented to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church October, 1928, by a member of the House of Deputies.

WHEREAS, in some of the churches of the United States, attempts are being made to establish righteousness and social justice in American industry and politics, not by voluntary and individual action between freeman and freeman, but by the corporate pressure of the Church upon the State; and

WHEREAS, such attempts not only ignore constitutional liberty and economic experience, but must and do split such churches into conflicting factions, absolutely and conscientiously divided in their convictions as to what is politically and socially just and right, inevitably weakening their own spiritual influence within and without their own communions; and

WHEREAS, in the words and acts of Christ and His apostles we find no warrant for political activities of any kind in the church, and moreover, the Constitution and tradition of the United States and its people have, from the first, wisely divorced religion from politics; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, the House of Bishops concurring, that it is the sense of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church that the accepted principle of the separation of Church and State should be maintained and that this church, while creating and upholding the highest moral standards through its clergy and laity, should not, as a corporate body, enter into the political arena to promote by legislative actions, specific economic or partisan measures.

The undersigned, attendants upon the services of the Protestant Episcopal Church, approve of the presentation to the General Convention of 1928 of a resolution affirming and recording, in substance, our conviction that the church should be kept out of politics and that politics should be kept out of the church.

Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia

Including Stonewall Jackson's Operations in the Shenandoah Valley 1861-65.

By VIVIAN MINOR FLEMING,
Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

Full account of every battle, and approaches to the same, by the State Highway.

DOMINUS ☧ FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 22, 1928. No. 38.

Jesus, and shall it ever be,
A mortal man ashamed of Thee?
Ashamed of Thee, Whom angels praise,
Whose glories shine through endless days?

Ashamed of Jesus! sooner far
Let night disown each radiant star;
'Tis midnight with my soul, till He,
Bright Morning Star, bid darkness flee.

Ashamed of Jesus! og, as soon
Let morning blush to own the sun!
He sheds the beams of light divine
O'er this benighted soul of mine.

Ashamed of Jesus! that dear friend
On Whom my hopes of heaven depend!
No; when I blush, be this my shame,
That I no more revere His name.

Ashamed of Jesus! empty pride!
I'll boast a Saviour crucified;
And oh, may this my portion be,
My Saviour not ashamed of me.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Darkness can't stand the light."

Whatever else may be scarce, opportunities for doing good are not so.

"'Tis very good for strength,
To know that some one needs you to be strong."

Some of us are so afraid of making mistakes that we never make anything at all, which is the greatest mistake of all.

Do not lose your inward peace for anything whatsoever, even if your whole world seems upset. Commend all to God, and then lie still and be at rest in His bosom.—St. Frances de-Sales.

Still the gospel of God's infinite and unpurchasable love finds its way graddually, slowly, but surely to the hearts of the children of men.—Abbott.

"The Shepherd carries the sheep, even when the sheep does not know that underneath him are the Everlasting Arms."

Many a tear of wounded pride,
Many a fault of human blindness,
Has been soothed or turned aside
By a voice of quiet kindness.

He who gives forgiveness gives himself. And it is not easy.—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

There is an art in approaching men and women on the subject of salvation, and the greatest part of that art is a love for the souls of men and for the Lord who died to save them.

Not thankful when it pleaseth me;
As if Thy blessings had spare days:
But such a heart whose pulse may be Thy praise."
—George Herbert.

I see my way as birds the trackless way,
I shall arrive! What time, what circuit first
I ask not; but unless God send His hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow
In some time, His good time, I shall arrive;
He guides me and the bird. In His good time!
—Robert Browning.

LEAVES

As we observe the leaves on the trees now we see they are passing their middle age, about where most of us are when in our forties or a few years beyond. They are somewhat frayed and frazzled around the edges. Many have been more or less torn and ravaged by insects and worms. All show signs of wear and tear and changes of weather. The kindly rains have not cleansed them from the dust and stains accumulated through spring and summer. The delicate fresh beauty and new vigor of April and early May are gone.

In the forest of Arden Shakespeare's exiled and philosophic duke found tongues in the trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones and good in everything. The leaves may serve us as the tongues of the trees and discourse to us, with philosophy neither unpleasant or unprofitable, of the similarities of our lives and histories and theirs. Of all the countless billions of them no two have been, or are, precisely alike, just as with us humans. As with us, each of them had its own little function and duty and work in the enormous process of life and growth and new life, its part in helping the health and strength of its tree, as is the part of each of us for the community and country to which we belong and for mankind and the vast purposes in which we are each an infinitesimal but distinctly and separately responsible participant. Some of the leaves died very young, were swept away by the first storms of spring and early summer, we do not know why. Some are destined to shine gorgeously presently and in their departure glorify mountain side and valley and landscape with brilliant beauty. A very few will cling, dried and brown, through all the dark days and the cold and fierce gales of winter until displaced by the budding of the next spring.

We do not know, may not know, why some of the leaves, some human lives, are taken so soon after birth, some live to beautify the world in their age, some linger dreary and desolate. We do know that for the great majority of us, as for the leaves, when the frost comes and the season ends we must depart and disappear, like them; and in that knowledge and thought there should be no sadness nor repining.

The leaves, past their middle age, may tell us now of some weariness, show us evidence of the passing and changes, the accidents, the orderings of nature, of what they have done and given and endured, through many days and nights; of approaching separation from the companionships and life they have known. When they have drifted and fluttered down, crowding the air in the bleak winds of autumn, imagination may translate their rustling to voices of exultation, not of despair. They will have finished their appointed work, done what they were created and born to do. Each of them has gathered in from sunlight and darkness and air and rain and bestowed its tiny contribution to beauty and growth, each helping in its small, small way to give shelter and shade and food and sustenance to creatures needing them.

The leaves yet on the trees or rustling in the wind or under foot tell us that when we have lived through spring time and summer time there is no cause for dread or sorrow when autumn comes and the time for parting and going which from our first full consciousness we have known must come. None of us may say, with the leaves, that we have done our full part, all we could have done. But, as they remind us of what must be they invite our emulation. We have will and freedom of choice between faithfulness and unfaithfulness to task and trust, as they have not. While there is life in us, while we yet cling here, there is power in us for fidelity, for earnest endeavor to repair neglects, to fulfill duties, to do what good we can, to try honestly to do the best we can, trusting to Everlasting Mercy to give us real penitence and forgive our forgetfulness and our refusals to serve.

Beginning now to rust and dim, frayed, weather-beaten and time-worn on the trees, the leaves tell us of fleeting time and passing opportunities, of changing seasons and parting time nearing. Rustling on the ground, they will tell us of work done, little, humble, brief parts in vast, eternal designs, beyond human comprehension or understanding, faithfully performed. They tell us, too, that there is no death, that, torn and trampled, broken and dissolved, they will go to new life in earth and air and all living things in new forms of value and beauty. Silent and vanished, they refute and crush the thought of extinction. Soulless, but ever obedient to the Creator, they testify of immortality to the soul of man, give it ever recurring assurance of a new life in which there shall be no withering or decay or ageing or autumn time; no sin or stains, no fear nor foes, no weariness nor weeping.

Alfred B. Williams.

FAITH.

I go to prove my soul!
I see my way as birds their trackless way.
I shall arrive! What time, what circuit first,
I ask not; but unless God send His hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet, or stifling snow
In some time, His good time, I shall arrive:
He guides me and the bird. In His good time.
—Robert Browning.

Cast not away . . . your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward (Heb. 10:35).

It is our privilege to be able to say, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep my trust against that day". It is this higher type of faith which has "great recompense of reward". . . . . Let us guard most sacredly this fountain head of spiritual life and victory and "take heed . . . . lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God". —A. B. Simpson.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

I.

[This is the first of a series of studies on the coming of our Lord. The scholarly writer has been a close student of the doctrine for many years. We trust our readers will find it a profitable pursuit.—Editor.]

Do we? Many of us have heard these words of the Te Deum all our days. We have also participated in the rendering of the Venite with its conclusion, "For He cometh". The Creeds have inspired us to declare, "I believe . . . that He shall come". The collects for Advent Sunday and the Sixth Sunday after the Epiphany have warmed our hearts with the apostolic hope. But

Science Has Interposed.

Our new knowledge so completely discounts this doctrine as to make it ridiculous. The immensity of the universe; the insignificance of this little earth, as contrasted with the bulk of the heavenly bodies within our ken; the probability of the peopling of other and vaster worlds, all contribute to the absurdity of a faith in the coming of the Lord Jesus according to His promise. The New Testament expectation was originally associated with the conception of the flatness of the earth. With the passing of that outworn idea, there perished not only the hope of His coming, but the very going of which the Scriptures are so explicit. The ascension may now be regarded as "that beautiful legend". With an acknowledged round world, there can be no fixed point which may be called the throne of God. Indeed, one writer, not quite willing to go all the way in this field of reasoning, avers that while our Lord seemed to rise into the heavens in the presence of His disciples, He readily disappeared into vacuity and now moves in an uncharted realm. And others, associating this postulate with their standard of the reputed truth, claim that heaven cannot be a place, but a condition. We may submit that these gratuitous vagaries engage a larger draft upon our credulity than the belief of the Church throughout the centuries.

"Where Science ends, Faith begins."

This memorable statement of the late Dr. Steinmetz has a ringing challenge. The verdicts of Science, logically and coldly devoid of warming Christian confidence, no doubt impelled the learned scientist to declare before his death that the most important movement within the next fifty years will be spiritual. And all of us know, as he would admit, that there can be no intelligent spirituality minus a revelation. We are therefore impressed that science will come eventually to confirm rather than deny the Biblical truths respecting the destiny of this earth. There are of the doctrine of our Lord's coming back, breaking before our eyes. The earth is round, we say. The former contention was that our Lord's voice could not be heard in China if He should appear in America; nor yet His form be seen. But if by the use of the movie-tone we can see and hear what has occurred in some distant place; if the radio can bring to us the living voice from the other side of the world, and ultimately, as we may expect, the living face, what is to hinder our King, in whom are hid all the treasures of knowledge (Col. 2:3), from manifesting Himself to His waiting Church, by spiritual methods of which our present achievements are but the weak reflection? And if the ambitious experts in radiography are cherishing the hope of imprisoning the words uttered during past generations (there is a rumor that a speech of ex-President Roosevelt has been thus captured), what may stand in the way of the complete fulfilment of the eschatological promises which believing Christians have so long cherished in hours of darkness and threatening despair? Surely the days in which we live are instinct with the marvelous. We are witnessing the demonstration of the previously deemed impossible. And faith enters here; while true science stands in reverent silence. Why should we discredit the miraculous with God, when man is so constantly bringing it to pass?

Signs of Scientific Plausibility

Science Aids Revelation

by showing that consistent with the august character of the world of nature, skyward and earthward, there lies a principle which reciprocates this immensity of sphere, this dynamic of operation. Do we concede that the sun is 1,297,000 times the size of the earth; and that Sirius, the brightest of the fixed stars, is sixty-three times the size of the sun; and that Alcyone, twinkling in the Pleiades, would, if broken into 12,000 pieces, give for each piece a planet as large as our sun? Are we impressed that the light emanating from the far distant milky way left that section of the universe 150,000 years ago. Do these facts, stupendous, almost inconceivable, nullify the Scriptural portraiture of God, the Creator, seeking men on this tiny globe, with a heart-hunger to make them His dear children?

If we reverse the syllogism, we find that from the same premise the like conclusion may be reached. The Maker of all things has shown Himself possessed of an infinite littleness. With an exactitude never varying, the tones and half-tones of the musical scale are established on the basis of first vibrations. The snowflake ever presents the six-pointed star, and is exquisite in its workmanship. The mysteries of the crystal kingdom open up a world of disclosures most enthralling. The thread of the spider is of four thousand fibres, yet the whole thread is more slender than the finest silk made by man. The wings of the butterfly are as beautifully adorned as the plumage of the bird. The compound eyes of the bees and dragon flies are numbered as eight or twelve thousand; and being compound, measure angles and distances with minutest accuracy. The songs of the insects are as entrancing as those of the feathered warblers, but are beyond our capacity to discern.

Now let us plead that this disposition on the part of the Lord of all creation must in the very essence of the case carry with it the spiritual imputation that intelligently and purposefully that Sovereign Creator has in His heart and mind the longing to reach the little things of His forming. Sir Alfred Russell Wallace, who cannot be charged with any partial bias, contends in his "Man's Place in the Universe" that the earth is really the center of the entire cosmogony; and that there is no proof whatever in the assumption that other worlds are inhabited. That the scientists may thresh out. We take advantage of the position, however, to emphasize our own conviction that God, to be God, must in the very nature of His being be as little as He is great. We cannot conceive of any one capable of inventing a God such as is portrayed in the Bible, commending meekness (Num. 12:3); seeking the fellowship of the contrite and the lowly (Isa. 57:15; 66:2); treasuring the tears of the penitent (Luke 15:7, 10); complying with the unlettered (Acts 4:13); choosing for the ambassadors of the cross men whose capabilities for that exalted mission were so naturally inadequate as to merit the reproachful designation of being "fools and slow of heart" (Luke 24:25); the appeal of which Gospel deserved the scorn of the intellectuals and reached down to the weak, the foolish, the base, the nothings of society (1 Cor. 1:18—2:10). Yet, this is the inescapable historical fact.

The Peril of Intellectualism is that it dries up the springs of the spiritual and hardens the finer responses of man. We may leave for others to discuss what would result if revelation should cease to move the hearts of our fellows; how such an order could debase our morale; stifle our spiritual ideals; crush us under the wheels of a relentless fatalism. Thinking men are apprehending this, and scenting the danger. Let us beware, lest in seeking to purify what we deem is worthy of correction, we burn down the house by the fire of our criticism. Granted any part or all that the new knowledge has to say, the final word has not yet been uttered. Science accommodatingly shifts its positions, acknowledges its errors and waits for fuller light. But true science has never arrogated to itself the authority to abrogate the plan of God for a lost world. Consequently, we have the assurance that the purpose of redemption to correct the ills of society, to visit the sick with healing, to adjust the problems of government, to bring peace to a distracted world, to establish on His throne the King of kings and Lord of lords, through whom the earth shall be "filled with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Num. 14:21; Isa. 11:9) is not only desirable, but rational and soul-inspiring.

---

THE CONFESSIONAL.

"How man times will God forgive?"
The youth, remorseful cried,
"To him who seventy times has sinned Must pardon be denied?"

The old monk eyed the quivering lips.
"Nay, knock at Mercy's door.
When man forgives himself, my son,
Then God forgives no more."

—Rose Trumbull.

A DIAGNOSIS

By Nelson Page Dame

II.

The clergy are trying to find some attraction that will draw people to church. They have tried, and are trying everything else. Let them try this:

Let them organize and train at the heart of each congregation a small company of men first, then women, consecrated, surrendered, who will as a body "lift up", present Christ to the community as His witnesses, demonstrators of the righteous life, His helpers, in intercessory prayer, and His fearless soldiers and servants; and they would have to call in the police to keep the crowds from crushing each other in the churches. The most attractive thing in the universe is the Lord Christ. Give Him the chance to manifest, through such a body, His love and kingness, His wisdom and power on behalf of the people of that community as He is ready to do today and He will "draw all men unto" Himself. The difficulty will be not to get people to join the church, but to keep out the unfit. Whenever the church has made any real attempt to do her Lord's will, in her Lord's way, she has suffered, never from poverty, but always from the embarrassment of riches.

The organization of such a body of whole-hearted Christians in a congregation would not be a difficult thing if the minister had the Spirit and saw the vision. There are numbers of individuals, men and women in every congregation of any size, who are hungry and thirsty for the opportunity to give themselves wholly to Christ for His service. You hear them spoken of as the "faithful few"; they attend all the meetings of the congregation. They belong to all the organizations of the parish. They refuse to be discouraged. They give until it hurts. They carry double and treble burdens for the church. They can always be counted on to do anything that the minister wants done. But the minister does not know what else to do with them but to lay still heavier burdens on them, ask them to raise more money, or assign to them little trivial tasks around the church unworthy of real men and women. And there are others, many others, just outside the "faithful few" who are just as eager to help Christ in His great enterprise of saving and serving the world if they knew what to do. Called to a service demanding self-sacrifice, self-surrender, involving difficulty and danger, demanding courage and devotion, tasks which they see to be worth while, they would flock to His standard. And among them would be many who now turn their backs upon the church, because it has been allowed to degenerate into a "Ladies' Aid" and makes no appeal to the spirit of adventure, of courage and of self-sacrifice.

Here is an abundance of the finest material. What could be done with it?

Suppose the minister saw the vision. Let him call together all the communicants, men and women, all the confirmed persons, young and old, for a conference on Christian life and service. Of course the "faithful few" would come, and perhaps a few, not many, others, a mere skeleton of the whole congregation. He might remind them that they already constitute an organized body of Christians: a congregation of the church: with minister, wardens, vestrymen and laymen. We do not need any other organization than that. "Every member of this company," he might say, "has solemnly at his baptism (1) renounced all other leaders and guides: the "world" (everybody), the "flesh" (our likes and dislikes) and the "devil" (at least all evil impulses). You have (2) expressed your belief in Jesus as the one Ruler and Guide of your life; and you have (3) declared your purpose to follow Him, to keep His commandments, and to walk in His ways all the days of your life. You were then solemnly dedicated to be 'His soldier and servant and to fight manfully under His banner'. You are therefore no longer your own. You have been bought with a price. You ratified and confirmed these promises and vows at your confirmation. And you have renewed them every time you have come to the Holy Communion, saying, 'Here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee'."

"Therefore we are not going to ask you to take any other vows or to make any other promises. You have already said all that can be said to express the entire surrender of yourself to Jesus, and you purpose to obey Him, to do whatever He asks or suggests."

"Now ask them, 'Do you mean that? Are you willing now to set out with a small company of your brethren here in His way? and to do what He asks? You are not asked to take anybody's word but His as to what He wants you to do: not that of the minister, or Bishop, or Council, or General Convention. Jesus will be your personal Teacher and Guide of this little company of His disciples. And He does not want you to take a step until you are fully persuaded in your own heart and mind, by His Word and Holy Spirit, that it is His will that you take that step."

"Under these conditions are you ready to say to Jesus, 'Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth', and 'Whatsoever Thou sayest unto me, I will do'?"

Some of those present, perhaps, would not be willing to yield themselves thus unreservedly to Him. They were brought into the church under false pretenses, perhaps. They had no idea that in baptism, confirmation and the Holy Communion they were pledging themselves to this life of entire consecration and obedience to Jesus, and they are not yet ready to enter upon it. But some of those, perhaps most of the "faithful few", and some others would be ready to go all the way with Him. Find out who they are. Induce them to express themselves freely: that each one may know to whom he owes the obligations of brotherhood, and from whom to expect the service of brethren in Christ.

"Now," you may say to them, "our Lord has laid on all His disciples one commandment: 'A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another.' He has no other test of discipleship. 'By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another.'"

"This love, of course, is not an impossible, utopian thing, beyond the reach of common men and women like ourselves. It has nothing to do with the feelings or emotions that you cannot control. It has to do wholly with your wills and actions which you can control: the will to be kind, friendly, considerate, helpful towards your brethren, the other members of this little company of your friends and neighbors. It must include all of them. It may go as far beyond this little circle as you can reach.

"Will you set yourself, each one, to do this? It is your Lord's request. You have pledged your word, your honor to Him, your Lord and Lover to do this. Will you begin now to do it, at any cost to yourself? It is a way of steps which you may take one at a time. 'Do not ask to see the distant scene: one step' at a time is enough for you to see and take; the next will appear when you have taken the one preceding. It will seem more difficult as you look at it from the outside than it will be as you walk with Jesus. Abraham, when he was called, went, 'not knowing whither he went': knowing only that he was going with his unseen Friend. So we are asked to walk with Jesus in this life of love and service, not knowing whither we go, knowing only that we are going with Him, and He is on His way to the throne of this universe. This is the 'way' of Jesus; the daily life of trust and obedience; and this way leads to 'glory and honor and immortality'."

Of course such a body would necessarily have frequent meetings of its members alone for several different purposes. And all these meetings would be very different from the mixed assemblages of Christians and non-Christians that now gather in the churches for the Sunday services at public worship. Those meetings might still continue; but the body of which we are speaking would have other meetings for the practical study of God's Word to know what He wants them to do, as His witnesses, exemplars, intercederes, soldiers, servants, and to commune with each other as to how they shall cooperate in carrying out His will in some specific matter. Take, for instance, the question referred to above as to how the body shall act in putting an end to profane swearing in the community around them. This cannot be done by the minister; it must be done by the united action of the members of the body. Before a number of men, even the most consecrated, could act together in the matter, many questions could be asked: Inst. what is profanity? saying, "damn" or "devil" or "hell" or what? Should the members protest against it on the street, in public places, in offices or stores or shops belonging to other non-Christian men; or only in places controlled by the Christian man: his home, farm, office, shop or automobile? These and similar questions would have to be discussed until the members could reach an agreement and be of "one mind" on the subject.

The questions debated by this body of surrendered men would be never, "What do we think" about the original question at issue? but "What does our Lord say on the subject; what does He want us to do in this matter, as His soldiers and servants"? The minister cannot settle these questions for the body. He is not the head nor the teacher or the guide of the "Body of Christ". His office is that of the usher, the servant of the body, to bring them into the presence of their Head and Teacher, and to help them to find out the mind of their Lord. They, the members of the body, must be thoroughly persuaded in their own minds before there can be any enthusiastic cooperation in the service of the Lord.

So with a hundred other questions of practical Christian living or service. Each one of them would require study, reading of God's Word on the subject, prayer for light and guidance of the Spirit, discussion, argument, debate, until the members had reached an agreement as to what the mind of Christ is, and how best to cooperate in carrying it out.

These questions would cover the whole area of Christian life and service. I jot down a few just as they occur to me: "Take no thought," worry, etc.; "Fear not"; "Be not afraid"; "Let the peace of God rule", etc.; "Let all bitterness and wrath", etc.; "If thou bring thy gift to the altar", etc.; "If thy brother sin against thee", etc.; "Owe no man anything", etc.; "Husbands, love your wives", etc.; "Wives' " duties to their husbands; "Parents" toward their children; "Children" toward parents; "Masters", employers to servants; "Servants," employees to masters; citizens toward the laws of State; attitude toward civil officials; "When thou doest thine alms"; "When thou prayest", etc.; "What ye fast"; "Now do it", etc.; "Speak not evil, one to another", etc.

But there is no real end to this list of practical directions as to our conduct in the varying relations of life that our Lord has laid on all His people. Every Christian is persuaded that each one of them is binding on him and all other Christians, and that it is practical. His only question is just what does it require us to do, and how can we cooperate in doing it. A body of men, walking together in this "Way of Christ", will find what they can find nowhere else, deliverance from all evil habits and tempers and dispositions; the development of all the finest qualities of which human nature is capable; "the fruits of the Spirit", and all those most beautiful "flowers" and graces of character which we know as courtesy, chivalry, culture, "the beauty of holiness". Here is the school of Christ where He can take any man who believes in Him and will obey Him implicitly, and make him into not only a righteous man, but a gentleman of Christ.

Here, then, is my diagnosis of the Church's trouble; the absence of that visible, united company of consecrated Christian men: that "body of Christ", a living instrument, a "tool that will not turn in His hand, on which He can rely absolutely" to represent Him in each community, to speak for Him and to do His bidding. Without that the Church is like an automobile without an engine, a watch without a mainspring. And that, thank God, is a defect that can be remedied.

FAMILY PRAYERS

COLLECTED BY J. L. W

Evening I.

Most holy and righteous God, our heavenly Father, who of Thy goodness hast preserved us during the past day: who art ever working for our happiness and art grieved at our misdoings: who sparest us when we deserve punishment, and, in Thy severest anger, art full of love and mercy towards us: ond art ready to forgive all who with hearty repentance and true faith turn unto Thee: look in pity on us. Now forgive us our sins, negligences and ignorances this day. Help us in Thy presence to try and examine ourselves, and enable us to see and feel what we have done amiss.

If we have in the past day in thought, word or deed wronged any one, or been untruthful or insincere, or have been indifferent to the rights or feelings of any one, help us to lament our errors and show us how to make amends.

If we have in any way distrusted Thee, our God, and Thy Holy Truth, or have shown undue regard to any one in high places, or have slighted or neglected any poor man, make us to feel that we have offended our Lord.

If we have been careless of any one's woes, or unsympathizing in any one's joys, or have neglected any opportunity of honoring Thee, our God, and our Christian faith; or have preferred our ease or pleasure to our duty, or have yielded to sloth or idleness, or neglected any duty, or approved any vice or impurity or ungodliness in ourselves or any one, make us to understand and lament our misdoings.

Renew us, we beseech Thee, in the spirit of our minds: confirm in us all good resolutions and purposes: strengthen us for more of Thy faithful service, and let our lives show forth Thy peace.

Make us, we pray Thee, sensible of the shortness and uncertainty of human life, and let Thy Holy Spirit lead us and guide us in true holiness and righteousness all our days on earth; that we may be gathered to our fathers, having the testimony of a good conscience in the communion of the Catholic Church, in the confidence of a certain faith, in the comfort of a reasonable religion and holy hope; in favor with Thee, our God; in perfect charity with all the world.

Send peace and prosperity to Thy Church, and grant that all Christians may be led into the way of truth and hold the faith in the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace and in righteousness of life.

Pity and relieve the sick and suffering. Comfort those who mourn. Provide for the poor and lead all people to the knowledge of Thy truth.

Take us now, we pray Thee, and all who are dear to us, under Thy care and keeping during this night; refresh us with sleep and prepare us for the duties of the coming day.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

SIXTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O Lord, we beseech Thee, let Thy continual pity cleanse and defend Thy Church; and because it cannot continue in safety without Thy succor, preserve it evermore by Thy help and goodness; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THERE are some in all churches, but especially in the Church of Rome, and the Greek Church, by whom the part of the Church in saving man is greatly magnified at the expense of Him who died that she might live. If we keep clearly before us, that relation of Christ to His Church, set forth by St. Paul and St. John (and long before by Isaiah), as of bridegroom to bride, and husband to wife, we shall by grace be preserved from undue elevation of His Beloved.

THE Epistle for this Sunday is Eph. 3:13-21, and is a prayer, a noble one, of Paul for the Ephesian Christians; but the first sentence is a desire on Paul's part that they faint not at his tribulations for them, which he calls their "glory"; for Paul gloried in his converts, and in his tribulation for them: "For ye are our glory and joy," and he wished their sympathy in this.

Paul's prayer takes up the rest of the Epistle. On his knees he prays, "for this cause" (fearing they faint for his tribulations), that they "be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man".

The prayer is peculiar, like the longer "Declaration of Absolution", in Morning and Evening Prayer, in addressing the Ephesians, and appealing to God in the third person, "that He would grant you".

There are no promises in the Bible more comforting than those which liken God's pity and love for His people to an earthly parent's feeling for his offspring. The Benedic Anima mea lends a divine beauty to our Evening Prayer; but the compilers of the Prayer Book have left out most of it, taking only seven of its twenty-two verses. Verses eight to thirteen set forth the loving kindness of the Lord in words of exquisite tenderness and beauty: "The Lord is full of compassion and mercy, long suffering and of great goodness"; "He will not always be chiding, neither keepeth He His anger forever"; "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our wickedness"; "For look how high the heaven is in comparison of the earth; so great is His mercy also toward them that fear Him"; "Look how wide also the east is from the west, so far hath He set our sins from us"; "Yea, like as a father pitieth his own children even so is the Lord merciful unto them that fear him."

The Cambridge Bible says of this One Hundred and Third Psalm: "The Psalm bears the name of David in the title; but it is impossible to suppose it written by him. The Aramaic coloring of the language, the allusions to Job, Jeremiah, and the later chapters of Isaiah, and the general style and matter of the Psalm combine to make it certain that it belongs to a much later date. It may be placed with much probability in the early years of the Return" (from exile).

I am sorry to give up the authorship of David; for verse thirteen comes to us with peculiar force, if it comes from David, in whom fatherly love was so strong, even toward a bad son, the unworthy Absalom. That lament of David over his dead son, though he died apparently unrepentant, and unforgiven, remains the most pathetic cry of a heart-broken parent in all time: "O my son Absalom, My son, my son Absalom, would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son" (2 Sam. 18:33). Such is the Lord's mercy unto them that fear Him. And is it limited only to His faithful children? Surely the parable of the Prodigal Son gives sufficient negative to that question. And if God has created parents with such feelings toward their children, even the utterly unworthy, what must be His attitude toward His creatures, even the most fallen and degraded!

I doubt not that David never gave up hope of Absalom's final salvation; that in some way, somehow, somewhere, they would meet again. A child dying thus is never utterly despaired of by a fond parent. Does He who made the parents give up such to hopeless perdition?

Paul asks of God the Father three things for his Ephesian brethren: (1) Strength with might in the inner man, by His Spirit; (2) Christ in their hearts by faith, and (3) That they, being rooted and grounded in love, might be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that they might be filled with the fulness of God.

Oh! for that fulness of the Spirit of God, casting out the unclean spirit and leaving no room there for his return, as he will surely try to do, taking "unto him seven other spirits more wicked than himself", thinking and hoping (and often not disappointed) to find the soul he had left not filled with all the fulness of God, but "empty, swept and garnished" (Matt. 12:43, et seq.).

THE Gospel for this Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity, is St. Luke 7:11-17, and tells of the raising of the son of the widow of Nain told only by St. Luke. Jesus showed His divine power over death three times as recorded in the Gospels; how much oftener we know not.

Strong reasons may be given why He should not have used His power in this way as freely as in healing. Soon after this miracle at Nain He appealed to it, when asked by John Baptist's two disciples: "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" Surely one such miracle as that of Nain were sufficient to prove His divinity, and the two others given seem hardly needed for that end; and in each case another reason can be assigned for this action. Had He turned away from the dead child (Jairus' daughter) without help, it might well have been charged that He lacked both pity and power; and His strong friendship and love for the family at Bethany would be sufficient reason for raising Lazarus, even though it brought him back from paradise to meet the "king of terrors" a second time.

Above I spoke of "strong reasons" why Jesus should not have exercised more freely His divine power in raising the dead.

We can imagine Him, if here now, causing in some great cemetery, or on some great battle field, a general resurrection such as Ezekiel pictures so sublimely (Ezek. 37): "And they lived and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army." Had Jesus done so then, what had been the effect?

Would this great spectacular miracle have won the people to Him, repentant for their sins, and ready for that kingdom, not of this world, which He came to establish? I know not. Our knowledge of the depravity of human nature makes us doubt, if not deny, any such result. And He who knew perfectly the hearts of men, and said: "Neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead" (Luke 16:31), and gave Himself to death to prove it, knew that even such extensive interference with the laws of nature, laws ordained by Him for man's best welfare, not to be suspended, save as He knew best, would not avail to establish that spiritual kingdom He came to establish. When "the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first", and they "which are alive and remain (of His "elect") shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air", and "be ever with the Lord" (Thess. 4:16-17), what effect will this stupendous miracle have on those who "are alive and remain", who have rejected Him? Will they be converted and accept Him? So far as Bible teaching goes, we must say, no. St. John's vision gives no clear views of their fate in the millennium, while Satan is bound in the abyss, and many "deceive the nations no more till the thousand years be fulfilled" (Rev. 20:3). The shadows of a great tribulation broods over the nations who await the judgment of "the great white throne", ere "the dead, small and great shall stand before God" (Rev. 19:12).

Must we not except from this great assize His "elect", the "blessed dead and those who look and long for His coming, and who have reigned with Him a thousand years? May they not be among "all the holy angels" that attend Him (Matt. 25:31). 1 Thess. 4:11 allows us this hope, "for if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him". Then the "all nations" of verse thirty-two be the vast number who have not had the Gospel message, or having heard it, have been deaf to it, not wilfully, but from cimumstances of birth and education, or peculiar environment, and with such light as reached them, have deserved the praise of the King to those who unwittingly ministered to Him in their service to the least of His brethren.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

W. R. Chapman, D. D., Ph. D.

II.

Jesus Christ.

THE Church may not influence us much. But the influence of even the name, much less the personality, of Jesus is sublime, is dominating, is far-reaching, and is exceedingly drawing. That name, the greatest under heaven, draws us to Him with a power which is truly sublime. That name induces a profound respect. Reference to the name Jesus Christ, though, if it does not bring cheers, will be greeted with that intense silence which is often far more eloquent and meaningful than applause. Church, "faith and order" may be negative in their influence for allegiance and applause; but the name of Jesus brings out the very best in all men and women, sooner or later. It must and it will. The Lordship of Jesus stands out in bold relief.

The judgment of Jesus Christ, I believe I can say, is universally favorable. This being true, then civilization is in no danger of a collapse. I believe it is true. I admit that crime and immorality, virtue and immodesty have their ebb and flood tides, but I do not believe that civilization will fall. I do believe that civilization will grow better and better, and even nobler than any that has been.

Our judgment of Jesus and what He stood for does not end there; but it is a judgment of the Christ of theology and of art, whose name is firmly joined to the name of God, as the Lord Jesus Christ, our God. Our judgment is of the Jesus who said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit"; of that Jesus who said, "Seek ye the Kingdom of God"; of that Jesus who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not"; and of that Jesus who said, "Blessed are the peacemakers".

Jesus has suffered the fate which befell all the prophets. A prophet is at first taken seriously, then he is persecuted, then condemned, stoned or crucified. Just this happened to Jesus Christ.

The adoration of Jesus Christ is noble. Yes, before the Christ of theology, men and women humbly bow their knees; before the Christ of art, men and women pour out profoundest praise; before the Christ of love, men and women adore and worship. Who is the One whom we love to adore and worship? It is that lowly Son of Man, who was born in a manger, who had often no place to lay His head, who had no earthly home, who came into the world not to be ministered unto but to minister, who had no earthly treasures, and hence laid up no treasures for Himself upon earth, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again, who when spit upon, took the insult meekly, who said to the militant disciple, Peter, "Put up thy sword", and who, while dying on the cross, amid agonizing pain, yet forgot it long enough to pray God, saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do". Yes, this is the Christ before whom men and women bow in adoration and true love.

The Attitude of Jesus Toward War.

Jesus Christ was against war. He was a man of peace. Peter drew his sword and cut off the servant's ear. Jesus said to him, "Put up thy sword into its sheath". And Again, Jesus said, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:51, 52; Mark 14: 47; Luke 22:50, 51; John 18:10, 11). We read, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14. Also Mark 9:50; Luke 1:70) He taught peace. It was the burden of His teaching. Then see Matt. 5:9. Jesus was truly an idealist. He it was who said to Peter, "Put up thy sword". That command reaches down to us, but we fail to see its force or to obey it.

I should think no one would want war again. I cannot even conceive how such a want could exist. It is quite generally recognized that the World War really gave the world no permanent good. It profited nobody. It left sores that I fear before they heal, will cause another war. The World War hurled victor and vanquished alike into an indiscriminate ruin. It was taught that this war was to stop war, but it did not; it would make the world fit to live in, but it made crime and immorality far worse. It was to protect weak nations. Did it? It was, oh, so costly. Listen while I point out just some of the items of cost. There are 10,000,000 soldiers dead; 13,000,000 civilians dead, 5,000,000 widows, 10,000,000 refugees. The 10,000,000 soldiers that lie dead are the best men. The cost of the dead cannot be counted. Does war protect the weak? I think not. Biologically war is suicidal. No right-thinking man or woman wants war. Lord James Brice, just before he died, left the world this wonderful statement: "If we do not destroy war, war will destroy us." Jesus, our Lord and Saviour, was and is against war. Listen. Do you not hear that still small voice of Jesus speaking down through the centuries His command to Peter, "Put up thy sword"? Oh! that the nations may hear that voice and obey it.

The Attitude of Jesus Towards Change.

I do not think that we can claim Jesus as advocate and champion of things as they are. He said: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time," but He said something very different and far greater. (Matt. 5:21, 22, 27, 28, 33, 34, 38, 39, 43, 44.) I think we can hardly say that the author of this saying could be considered as the champion of traditional belief and teaching. This same Jesus healed on the Sabbath, He permitted His disciples to pluck the ears of corn (Matt. 12:1-6). And, indeed, this Jesus did many other things which shocked the respectability of His time. Then I say again, He can hardly be said to have been an upholder of traditional morality and institutions. He who cleansed the temple can, in my judgment, hardly be held up in the role of a defender of the things traditional or of the status quo—the existing condition of things.

Jesus believed in peace. He was an advocate of peace. He believed that truth would set all men free, and that love would heal the wounds of the world. He taught truth and love. He was love. He said, "I am the truth." He said, "I should bear witness unto the truth". And to this, he added: "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice" (John 18:37; 14:6).

Jesus Christ was not a frenzied fundamentalist. He did not cling to the beliefs of the fathers. He even added a new commandment to the original ten. "That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34). He was not all the time protesting against any and every suggested change in the things and orders then existing. His enemies said of Jesus at His trial, "He stirreth up the people". How did He do it? By His teaching (Luke 23:5). They were right, because His doctrine was of a higher order than that with which they were acquainted. His wonderful doctrine has often stirred up the people. In the first century the people became stirred up at Antioch, and so the disciples' names was changed to Christians. In the sixteenth century Europe was stirred and Martin Luther gave the world the Reformation; the people were stirred in Scotland and John Knox gave them the Presbyterian Church; they were stirred up in France, and John Calvin gave them the French reformation; they got stirred up three times in England, and John Wycliffe became the "morning star" of the Reformation; then later the origination of the Episcopal Church; then still later John Wesley founded the Methodist Church. Often during the passing of the ages and the centuries, we have noted great stirring up of the people. This was true when the Christian denomination was founded. I am sure that what has happened in the past will happen again.

Things Must Change for the Better.

So, what think you of Christ? You must answer this question. Upon the answer hangs your destiny. Shall it be good? Then answer it well and do good. Let me repeat what I have said, namely, that Jesus Christ is no longer on trial. Many, many times has His Word been proven to be true. His counsel, oh! that men and women had followed it. For if they had, long since would the day have been saved. If man and woman had seen and appreciated the vision, as Jesus pictured it, we would really know Jesus. He was certainly correct when He said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Is there not, at the very bottom of things, a love such as that which brought back Magdalene, such as the love which could forgive the woman taken in adultery, and which could say to her, "Go, and sin no more". The tender love that could go out to the woman of Samaria and convert her and enable her to go to her people with a vision and a message, is sublime love. If we would let this love work out its course, it would change the moral condition of the world. If we will answer the question that I have considered, rightly, then the future is full of hope.

Now, I come to the great question again. What think you of Christ? It is the greatest question in the world. Answer it correctly, and all is well. Jesus Christ is truth, He is love. He is the bright and morning star, He is our redeemer and Saviour. And even more, He is our elder brother, and shall ever be. Christ wants to clear the world of immorality, crime and sin; but He can only do it by using us. So it becomes us to enter the harvest where the work is hardest, and reap the grain for our Master and our Lord. Let us let love be our ever-guiding star. In and through love we can conquer all things for God. He will open our blinded eyes. And let us say to Him: O God, for Christ's sake, open Thou our eyes, so we can see clearly the ripening grain in the great harvest that awaits us as laborers, and that there may be work until our sun shall set! Amen.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by (Mrs.) Emily W. Jones, of Winchester, Va.:

> "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God" (Ephesians 2:8).

A COUNTRY CHURCH.

I think God seeks this house, serenely white,
Upon this hushed, elm-bordered street, as one
With many mansions seeks, in calm delight,
A boyhood cottage intimate with sun.

I think God feels Himself the Owner here,
Not just rich host to some self-seeking throng,
But Friend of village folk who want Him near
And offer Him simplicity and song.

No stained-glass windows hide the world from view,
And it is well. The world is lovely there,
Beyond clear panes, where branch-scrolled skies look through,
And fields and hills, in morning hours of prayer.

God spent His youth with field and hill and tree,
And Christ grew up in rural Galilee.

—Selected.

THE SEA THAT IS DEAD.

I looked up a sea, and lo, 'twas dead,
Although by Hermon's snows and Jordan's river fed.
When came a fate so dire? The tales soon told,
All that it got it fast did hold.
All tributary streams found here their grave
Because that sea received and never gave.
O sea that's dead, help me to know and feel
That selfish grasp and greed my doom will seal.
Help me, O Christ, myself, my best, to give,
That I may others bless, and, like Thee, live.

SUBJECT AND PURPOSE OF THE BOOKS OF THE LAW.

I. Genesis.

The word Genesis is a Greek word meaning "Beginnings".

The Hebrew name of the book is the first three words—"In the Beginning".

It is the book which reveals to us the beginning of Creation, of Redemption, of Sin, of the Human Race, of the Hebrew Race, of Civilization, and of Faith.

Subject.

God's works and ways in redeeming a ruined earth in seven days (ch. 1:1 to 2:3); and His ways in Redemption with seven men (ch. 2:4 to 50:26).

The Holy Spirit tells us in Gen. 1:1 of the original creation of the heavens and the earth, but it is not here explained how they were created. This He reveals to us in Ps. 33:6 and Heb. 11:3.

Then in Gen. 1:2 the Spirit opens to our view a wrecked and ruined earth enshrouded in darkness, which evidently became chaotic as the result of the work of the enemy (Isa. 45:18 R. V.; 14:12-14).

In the record which follows in Gen. 1-2 to 2:3 the Holy Spirit has unfolded to us how God re-created, renewed or redeemed a ruined creation.

In six days, by His Omnipotent Word and Spirit, God brought cosmos out of chaos. Out of disorder He brought such as orderly arrangement of things in creation that the earth was made habitable for man, who was to rule over it.

God's works and ways in behalf of and through the seven men—Adam, Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph—are revealed to us by the Holy Spirit in chs. 2:4 to 50:26, the second great division of this book of Beginnings.

Chs. 2:4 to 3:24 tell us of Adam as righteous, ruined, and redeemed.

Chs. 4 and 5 record the sacrifice and descendants of the first three brothers.

Chs. 6 to 11 reveal how Noah passed out of the old world through the judgment of the flood into a renewed earth, where he was made the ruler.

Chs. 12 to 21 tell us of Abraham, the friend of God, walking by faith and made fruitful by faith.

Chs. 22 to 26 speak of Isaac, the son of promise, offered as a sacrifice, receiving his bride, and enjoying his possessions in the land.

Chs. 27 to 36 give us the story of how Jacob was disciplined and made a blessing.

Chs. 37 to 50 give us the story of Joseph, the beloved son, hated brother, suffering servant, exalted ruler, and saviour.

Purpose.

The Book of Genesis was written to give typically in outline all of God's counsels in Redemption, individual and dispensational (Isa. 46:9, 10).

The seven days of Chs. 1:2 to 2:3 outline for us typically every step in God's redemptive work in every believing heart, as well as His dispensation in Redemption, unfolded and fulfilled through the person and work of Jesus Christ.

Individual Application of the Seven Days.

Beginning with the bringing of the light of a new life into our darkened hearts, by His Spirit and Word (first day—John 8:12);

He next separates us from sin and the flesh (second day—Rom. 6:11; 7:4);

And having raised us and seated us with Christ in the heavenlies, He makes us fruitful in the power of His resurrection life (third day—Eph. 2:5, 6; Phil. 3:10; Rom. 7:4; 8);

Illuminating and transforming our lives by beholding the Son of Righteousness; He makes us light-bearers to the sin darkened world (fourth day—Ps. 34:5; Mal. 4:2; Matt. 5:15, 16; Phil. 2:15, 16);

By disciplining the self-will, through chastening, He makes our lives fruitful in blessing to others (fifth day—Heb. 12:5-11; 2 Cor. 1:3, 4; Rom. 5:3, 4).

Through the One who loved us and washed us from our sins we have been made kings unto God, to rule with Christ, bringing all things in subjection under His feet (sixth day—Rev. 1:5, 6; 5:10; Ps. 8:4-8; Heb. 2:5-8);

Ceasing from our own works and by faith beholding God's working, we enter into His rest (seventh day—Heb. 4:9, 10).

Dispensational Application of the Seven Days.

First Day—The entrance of the light into earth's darkness (Gen. 1:2-5) points typically to the bringing of light into the darkened hearts in Eden, through the promise of the Redeemer (Gen. 3:15; Ps. 119:130; 1 Thess. 5:5-8).

Second Day—The firmament of His power, made to rule over the waters that were under, prefigures the rule of the heavens placed in the hands of Noah (Ch. 1:6-8; 9:1-7; Ps. 150:1).

Third Day (first half)—Raising up the earth from under the waters foreshadows God's work in calling out an earthly people, in His ways with Israel from Abraham to Moses (Ch. 1:9, 10; 12:1-3; 15:13, 14; Ex. 1).

Third Day (second half)—Making the earth fruitful typifies God's ways with Israel in bringing them into the place of blessing in Canaan, where they might be made fruitful in blessing to the nations, and above all points to Christ, the Seed of Israel, made fruitful on the third day (Ch. 1:11-13; 17:17, 18; Josh. 1; John 12:24; Rom. 9:5).

Fourth Day—Placing the light bearers in the heavenlies to give light over the earth pictures to us figuratively the exaltation of Christ and His Church into the heavenlies, to be the witness of God's glory to the earth (Ch. 1:14-19; Mal. 4:2; Phil. 2:15; Eph. 2:5-7; 5:8-11; Rev. 2:3; Acts 1:8).

Fifth Day—The bringing forth of the living creatures in the air and seas speaks of God's redemptive work in the great tribulation, to follow this age of grace, and also tells us of the judgment that precedes the blessing of the Millennial time (Ch. 1:20-23; Rev. 6:9-11; 7; 14:1-4).

Sixth Day—The creation of man in God's own image, to be thus His companion, co-laborer and co-ruler, is fulfilled in Christ and those created in Him unto good works which God before prepared (Ch. 1:24-28; Col. 1:15; Luke 1:31-33; Isa. 9:6, 7; Eph. 2:10; Rev. 5:10; 20:4-6).

Seventh Day—For God to enter into His rest points to that blessed time when God shall be all in all, tabernacling in the midst of His redeemed (Ch. 2:1-3; 1 Cor. 15:25-28; Rev. 21-1-3).

(Genesis—To be continued.)

The Great Commission

OPENING OF ST. BARNABAS' HOSPITAL, OSAKA.

By Rudolph B. Teusler, M. D.

The formal opening of St. Barnabas' Hospital in Osaka was held on June 26. This is good news and brings with it assurance of very promising Christian work not only in the city itself, but all through the surrounding districts of the thickly settled Diocese of Osaka.

I remember one day last autumn passing with Dr. Wood through the crowded, rushing streets of Osaka, and his comment as we mingled with the throngs, "What an amazing and terrific city this is!" Amazing, without doubt, and terrific in the sense that here has met, as nowhere else on earth, the clash and turmoil of Western material progress in conflict with Eastern traditions and habits, reflecting a civilization which was at its height when this country was the home of the Red Indian and our own progenitors still seeking a short passage via the Atlantic to Cathay.

Nowhere in Japan is this conflict between the old and the new so evident. Narrow streets, hardly more than fifty years ago sacred to regal processions of Daimiyo, at whose aproach merchants kneeled in the dust and cast their faces to the ground when the great lords passed, are today alleyways for rushing taxicabs, clanking electric cars, motor trucks and busses, in street conflict with lazily moving bullocks, brass rings in nose, led by men clad mostly in a gee string, apparently quite oblivious to all the commotion about them. Rickshaws slip in and out between the pedestrians and the vehicles, but each year these are fast disappearing, and traffic cops try to introduce order with meagre results, where only a few years ago order was the only thing all Japanese bowed to and accepted.

In this, probably the greatest market of the Far East where Occidental and Oriental civilizations are in such close contact, the Church has opened a modest but well worth-while Hospital Centre. Cooperation with the Japanese authorities has already been assured in far-reaching plans for the betterment of the health, housing and surroundings of vast numbers of the industrial workers of Osaka. At the request of the Governor of Osaka, St. Barnabas' Hospital will take an active part in an educational program for all its citizens in public health measures and the practical introduction of means for the eradication of disease.

I am one of those who believe firmly in the value of Christian institutional leadership in the work of Christian Missions in the Far East, and especially is this true in Japan. But to make such work effective, it must be done in close cooperation with the Japanese themselves, and it must meet adequately some one or more of their active problems and successfully take a leading part in their solution.

Our St. Barnabas' Hospital is a modern concrete and steel structure, with room for about seventy-five patients when fully equipped. On the main floor is a carefully planned Outpatient Department, where from two hundred to three hundred patients per day can be well attended. The building is heated with steam, a very rare provision in any hospital in Japan, and it is being equipped with only the best in modern medical and surgical aparatus and appointments.

That the hospital may meet a real need and one well-known and frankly acknowledged by the Japanese, it will devote practically its entire service to the care of maternity cases, infants, and young children. Pre-natal and post-natal clinics for mothers; clinics for sick children in the Outpatient Department; well-baby clinics for babies born within its wards and babies of mothers in the neighborhood who seek advice in the care of their families within its doors; and finally, visiting nurses for the district set aside by the Mayor of Osaka as the special field for the activities of the hospital. Also it is planned to have graduate courses for the training of nurses in its own special work of maternity and pediatrics.

Early last autumn the Governor of Osaka Prefecture, Mr. Tanable, and the Mayor of Osaka, Mr. Seki, together with a group of some of the most representative physicians and busines men in the city, met in conference to issue an appeal for 50,000 yen during this coming three years, to be applied in the support of the work of St. Barnabas' Hospital, and also to pledge their encouragement and assistance in making the whole program of the Hospital a success. The city opened its first public health station for children something over a year ago, and the second, authorized by the Governor and Mayor and conducted in cooperation with the Public Health Department of the city, is the station under the direction of St. Barnabas' Hospital. This gives us a unique and attractive opportunity to make the work of St. Barnabas' a demonstration service, as it will be constantly open to inspection of city officials and an integral part of the whole public program for the improvement of women and children in Osaka.

We are fortunate in having secured the confidence and active assistance of the city officials in starting this work, and we are especially fortunate in having in the hospital a staff of workers who are thoroughly familiar with the local conditions in the city. Dr. John D. Southworth is in charge of the medical work in the hospital. He has as his assistant Dr. Fugisawa who has been Assistant Professor of Pediatrics in the Medical University of Osaka for a number of years. Miss Anna Van Kirk is Superintendent of Nurses, and a number of graduates of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, will assist her. We need, as soon as we can get them, a well-trained American pediatrician, and a well-qualified American public health nurse.

Osaka has the largest population of any city in Japan, having exceeded Tokyo in growth since the great earthquake of five years ago. The city is only one hour by train or electric tram from one of the greatest ports in the Orient, Kobe, and this section of Japan has already taken its place as the industrial heart of the Empire. The total population of these two cities, together with the suburban districts, exceeds five millions.

The infant mortality rate in the slum districts of Osaka is one of the highest recorded in the world, ranging from thirty to thirty-three per cent. This means that one child in three dies within the first year after its birth. The mortality rate in New York City is less than six per cent. The oportunities for pre-natal and post-natal care are in the same ratio.

The fact that the officials of Osaka, together with a prominent group of Japanese physicians and business men, are keenly interested in the welfare of St. Barnabas' has placed this hospital in a splendid position for practical service. If adequate advantage can be taken of this strategic position during the next five years, St. Barnabas' Hospital will be one of the most influential medical institutions in Japan.

WASHING AN INTERNATIONAL ELEPHANT.

More than a million American women rolled bandages and made surgical dressings during the Great War. Why not carry on for the lepers? The medical staff headquarters won't fuss at you if the bandages vary one-eighth of an inch from regulations, and you can feel, in the immortal language of a recent song-hit, that you are washing one of the largest elephants of all time.

The war may be over, but leprosy isn't, although the American Mission to Lepers is bending every effort to secure the world cooperation of governments, of scientists, and of all intelligent and considerate people to put an end to this age-old menace. While the wheels are turning to bring about these large results, the intimate needs of the destitute lepers in rescue stations in twenty countries must not be overlooked. One of the greatest of these needs is for bandages.

To stand by a doctor's side and watch the number of dressings required for even one patient makes one wonder just how a missionary doctor manages 12,000 miles from "Johnson and Johnson" and with insufficient funds to buy dressings locally, even if they could be obtained. Yet they do manage, and incipient cases of leprosy are being cured and the suffering of incurable cases is being eased, and the sound bodies of little children of lepers, who fortunately do not inherit leprosy, are being safeguarded in separate homes.

If these doctors, serving without special compensation and handicapped by lack of equipment and trained assistants, are willing to carry on, the women of America who pride themselves on leading in so many good causes will surely be willing to help them.

Strong bandage material for outer dressings can be washed and used again and again. Any firm cotton or linen cloth is suitable for this. Old sheets or table linen are excellent—cut into two inch strips, rolled, and fastened with that great national instrument, the safety pin. Even the pin will be used. It will sparkle like a brooch while it holds together the edges of a shawl pinned across the painracked shoulders of some leper recipient of your generosity.

If you are willing to prepare a parcel of bandages or merchandise material, let the American Mission to Lepers send you the address of a medical missionary to whom you can ship direct by parcel post.

Write for a free circular, "Material Gifts for Lepers", to W. M. Danner, General Secretary the American Mission to Lepers, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

SCIENCE IN SEARCH OF GOD: By K. F. Mather. Henry Holt and Company, New York. $2.

This book is enlightening and refreshing. It gives one a conception of the universe that permits room to breathe and time for many long breaths. According to geologic time, man is but a moment, and space but a speck on an ocean wave. So, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him", is given new meaning, says the author.

But there is poor logic on page twenty-six concerning the world and an auto.

He corrects the controversialists of the day in saying that there is no contest between science and religion, but between "false science" and "true science". He might have added that there is a war between false religion and true religion.

Ideas govern the world; men make choice of ideas. Religion "values" an idea.

Theology deals with "spiritual law in the natural world". Spiritual laws obeyed or souls die. Science and Religion march hand in hand seeking the Spirit underneath and behind all law.

Prayer enables the Supreme Personality to give self-expression. The spiritual reservoir is full: the flood is damned at this end. He thinks it not good to pray for rain or against a storm: but in case of sickness, or perplexity, it is well to pray for help. Through effort and experience Science is seeking Him?

FIRST STEPS IN THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION: By Charles Harris, D. D. Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

Dr. Harris has given us an excellent defence of our belief in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. The writer of this review doubts whether people are ever converted by arguments of this nature, but the book will strengthen those who already believe.

He does not bring out in his discussion of Evolution that it is an hypothesis, based on faith alone, exactly the same kind of faith that it takes to comprehend the basic truths of religion. That being so, some of us do not see why, if you have to take the question of origins on faith, you cannot be content with the inspired account in Genesis. He says of Natural Selection that it is unable to produce anything, and says that it is "the mysterious power which produces these organisms in a continually ascending scale of values which is the real efficient cause of the evolutionary process". Some may think that in talking of a vague "mysterious power" they are using a term that is more acceptable than Creator, they do not understand the primer truth pointed by O. Spengler, that science has nothing to do with origins. Both the mysterious power and the Creator are by definition excluded from its ken. That is not to decry science, but to give it its proper limits where it may work so effectively.

In the appendix he gives us a clean-cut defence of personality against the onslaughts of some of the mechanically minded psychologists of the day. He shows convincingly that these mechanists have mistaken a part for the whole, when they deal only with the physical in man's makeup and attempt through it to explain away consciousness.

DANGEROUS AND SINISTER FORCES.

Mr. Editor:

In the May 26 issue of The Southern Churchman after the book review, page eleven, there was a list of books received, and heading the list was, "Pastors, Politicians, Pacifists", by Leroy F. Smith and E. B. Johns.

We are urged on all sides to keep abreast of the times, to inform ourselves about the great questions that now confront the world, and told that the Church should concentrate upon those evils and correct them. This little book gives a clear-cut presentation of the agencies both within and without the Church, whose purpose is to use Her to foster their own ends, and under the name of Religion achieve most startling results of quite an opposite nature.

The book contains not a collection of theories, but a collection of vivid facts, set forth with proof incontestable, which throw a searchlight upon many of the bewildering and complex Church situations that confront us today. These dangerous and sinister forces imperil the very life of the Church. It is useless to play the ostrich and bury our heads in the sand. We need to be aroused to a swift alertness to intelligently understand and successfully withstand the havoc that by them is intended to be created within our ranks.

I have read "Pastors, Politicians, Pacifists" with great interest and for those seeking enlightenment upon many of the situations within the Church today, no more concise and illuminating book has yet been published.

THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES A MAGNA CHARTA OF THE UNITED STATES IN CHURCH AND STATE.

Mr. Editor:

No doubt the ably conducted assault of The Southern Churchman on the modernism and Romanism trying to remove the age-old testimony of the Thirty-nine Articles against infidelity and superstition, will result in a victory—in a victory of another Magna Charta, of American Liberties, no Pope will try, as of old, to annul.

The fight should not relax until the defeat of the opponents is accomplished.

The Modernists and the Romanists must be compelled to seek other creeds and pulpits than those of the pure Episcopal Scriptural Church of Paul, Ignatius and Irenaeus.

Learned professors today of university, theological seminaries, recall with sorrow the lament of a generation ago, of a theological dean that already in that time university students were enrolling for the seminary mainly for an easy living and social ambition rather than for any zeal for souls, and the glory of God, mercenaries soon to trample on the Scriptures and the Creed!

How will the easy-going bishop, pastor answer at the Judgment Seat—he has left unrebuked, unanswered—he has not opposed his shepherd's crook to the wolf scattering his sheep, telling them there is no Hell or the abyss to which he is leading them, while the wolves in the pulpit urge them over, tearing them with the teeth which deny the Divinity of Christ, the Creation, and the descent from Adam and Eve!

The Churchman in raising the standard of the Thirty-nine Articles is also defending the Protestant principles of civic and patriotic liberty.

History is repeating itself. The Churchman instructs the Christian state for its own weal. The worldly press is mostly venal subsidized, silent where subscribers are in view, United States Senators are even assailed throughout the country by an inquisitorial Romanist persecution in an attempt to give a Protestant appeal to the country. A Socialist of yesterday, Mussolini today a Romanist, over his own signature announces "the Inquisition was Italy's greatest institution and ought to be revived".

Will any Christian (?) dare to silence the Christian editor-preacher? It is his duty to write, to preach, to warn.

Protestantism threw off intoleration, a Roman inheritance, long ago.

Rome is intolerant today, the fight of Protestants is for freedom.

The Roman Catholic press have muzzled ours; they cry out lately against reports from Mexico. "Suppress them also," they cry. No! a Mexican President falls victim of the teaching of Roman canonists, encyclicals today unrepeated by every Pope, suppressed as they are for public teaching here. A Jesuit writer even here repeats them. The Thirty-nine Articles are a bulwark of freedom; may they remain for ever an imperishable American Magna Charta of Church and National Liberty!

PRAYER BOOK MUST STAND AS REVISED.

Mr. Editor:

In your leading editorial article of September 8 you appeal to the bishops and deputies of the General Convention, shortly to assemble, to "drop this whole subject of Prayer Book revision" and to "let's keep the 1892 Book". Your thought, evidently, is that if the General Convention drops further revision, the Book of 1892 automatically continues to be the Prayer Book of this Church.

I agree with much that you say in this article. Revision has gone far beyond what was generally contemplated when it was undertaken. The Commission has in a number of instances recommended changes that carry doctrinal changes; and in doing so it has violated its instructions. In acting favorably on some of these doctrinal changes the Convention has condoned the action of the Commission. As a deputy in all the Conventions that have had to do with this Revision I have invariably voted against every doctrinal change. I have felt that even though it is true that, as has been stated more than once, on the floor of the House of Deputies, "a resolution of one General Convention is not binding upon another", yet good faith with the General Church requires that this original resolution be a sacred charter as to the limits of legislation extending over several Conventions.

But the majority of the General Convention have thought otherwise. Under procedure that, so far as I can see, is regular, many changes have been made by two successive General Conventions. The services as thus revised are now the services as this Church orders them. "The 1892 Book" has been legislated out of existence as to some of its Offices. If the General Convention were simply to "drop" revision, our Prayer Book would contain all the changes that have been made to date. If the Convention should desire to return to the Book of 1892 and should vote to do so, it would require the vote of the Convention of 1931 to make this action effective.

I do not think there is the slightest chance that this will be done. But there is hope that further doctrinal changes will be few.

PRESIDING BISHOP ASKS PRAYERS FOR NATIONAL COUNCIL.

October 8-9, 1928.

The National Council meets in Washington, D. C., October 8 and 9. At this meeting the special feature will be a conference with the Department of Missions and the Bishops of the Dioceses and Missionary Districts receiving aid from the General Church. October 8 will be given to a conference with the Bishops of the Foreign, Latin-American and Extra-Continental Missionary Districts, and October 9 to a conference with the Domestic Missionary Bishops and the Bishops of Dioceses receiving aid from the General Church. These meetings will be of great importance, and I hope I may count on a place in the Prayers of our people that we may be rightly guided in our discussions.

Convention of the Brotherhood Convenes October 5.

At the forty-second National Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, to be held in Washington October 5 to 9, the interest of the laity in the advancement of religious development as a factor in moral progress will be brought to focus upon many latter-day problems.

A wide variety of practical religious questions growing out of changing conditions of living will be discussed by delegates from all sections of the country, distinguished Churchmen and laymen.

The Brotherhood, representing one of the most notable lay religious movements of recent years, was founded in Chicago in 1886, through the efforts of a banker, James L. Houghtelling, growing out of the Bible class of St. James' Episcopal Church, consisting of a dozen men from seventeen to nineteen years of age.

From that beginning it has grown to a nation-wide organization, with branches in all sections of the country, and its two rules, the rule of prayer and the rule of service, are observed by many thousands of men and boys of the Episcopal Church.

Among its accomplishments is the fostering of noonday Lenten services in many of the large cities of the country, among them Buffalo, Washington, Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Richmond, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, San Francisco and New Orleans. In Philadelphia four series of these services are now held under the auspices of the Brotherhood.

Headquarters of the organization are now maintained in Philadelphia. Its officers are the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop, honorary president; Edward H. Bonsell, of Philadelphia, president; Leon C. Palmer, Philadelphia, general secretary.

Among the members of the Washington committee of the Brotherhood are: H. Lawrence Choate, chairman; John H. Finney, vice-chairman; F. Granville Munson, secretary; Bruce Bair, treasurer; H. W. Atkinson, W. Sinclair Bowen, Dr. William Earl Clark, William R. Ellis, Donald E. Gerow, William J. Moore and Rev. Charles T. Warner.

Typhoon Wrecks St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, Porto Rico.

"Frightful typhoon. Hospital a wreck. All saved." This message comes to the Department of Missions of the Episcopal Church from Miss Ellen T. Hicks, Superintendent of St. Luke's Memorial Hospital, Ponce. It is one of the results of the tropical storm which, on September 13, swept over Porto Rico.

St. Luke's Hospital is the oldest institution of the Episcopal Church in Porto Rico. It was established in 1906 by Bishop Van Buren. Its main building is a memorial to the late Charles H. Thomas, a life-long friend of the Bishop, and was given by Mrs. Thomas. In those days facilities for caring for the sick in Ponce were almost non-existent, and sanitary conditions were unspeakably bad. For some years St. Luke's carried on practically alone as a modern hospital. Three hospitals recently erected really owe their existence to the example of St. Luke's. St. Luke's today is considered one of the standard hospitals in the Island. Its training schools for nurses is easily in the first rank. The service that school and hospital have rendered not only to the City of Ponce but to Porto Rico as a whole can not be over-estimated.

The hospital had a capacity for about one hundred and twenty-five patients. Its Superintendent, Miss Hicks, served for thirteen years at St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, and for the past ten years has been in charge of St. Luke's, Ponce.

The destroyed building was old. In fact two years ago it was declared to be practically worn out.

The hospital property was valued at approximately $125,000. At least $250,000 would be necessary to replace the building in modern form.

The hospital had both pay and free accommodations. Every year hundreds of the poorer people were cared for by nurses and doctors with skill and tenderness even though unable to pay anything at all for hospital or doctors' fees.

Dr. Lopez Nussa, one of the leading physicians of Ponce, said recently:

"The training and technique of the hospital compare very favorably with any other hospital in the world. Any surgeon can come to this hospital and perform any operation with all the safety and confidence that could possibly be expected."

Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses.

(Meeting and Services during the General Convention, Washington, D. C.)

Service.

There will be a service for all interested in the Guild Friday evening, October 19, at 8 P. M., at the Church of the Ascension, Twelfth Street and Massachusetts Avenue. The speaker will be the Very Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

Corporate Communion.

There will be a Corporate Communion for Guild members at the Church of the Epiphany, Saturday morning, October 20, at 7:30 A. M.

Business Meeting.

An open business meeting will be held at Epiphany Parish Hall, 1317 "G" Street, on Friday, October 19, at 2:30 P. M. Branch Chaplains, officers, members and all other interested in the Guild are earnestly requested to be present.

South Carolina Bishop Elected.

The Rev. Albert Sidney Thomas, since 1921 rector of St. Michael's Church, Charleston, S. C., was elected to succeed the late Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., as Bishop of South Carolina, at the Diocesan Convention which met at Florence, S. C., Tuesday, September 18.

The reunion of the two dioceses in the State was not discussed at the convention in accordance with the decision of an unofficial conference held in Charleston last week.

The proposed reunion was strongly favored in Charleston and elsewhere after the lamented and tragic death of Bishop Guerry, but the opposition and argument for retention of the two dioceses proved equally strong.

Memorandum: Sewanee Banquet During General Convention.

City Club, Washington, D. C.,
6 to 7:45 P. M., October 15, 1928.

Committee of Arrangements.

Honorary Chairman: The Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., Lexington, Ky., President of the Province of Sewanee.

Executive Chairman: The Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Jacksonville, Fla.

Executive Secretary: The Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., Houma, La. (after October 5, Grafton Hotel, Washington, D. C.)

Persons invited: All persons belonging to the Province of Sewanee.

Price: Two dollars per plate.

Objects:

1. To demonstrate and develop the spirit of fellowship in the Province of Sewanee.

2. To give publicity to the work of the Province and its plans for future expansion and development.

3. To agree upon recommendations, approved by this gathering (unofficially representative of the leadership of the Province) looking toward the furtherance of the activities of the Province. These recommendations will be referred to the proper authorities for their consideration.

Note: Except for the necessary presentation of data and of plans (which will be done so far as possible by charts, pictures, and printed matter) this will be a "speechless banquet". The program will include songs, communications condensed to the limit of hundred word telegrams and brief, terse and boiled down informational statements, together with recommendations for progressive activities. It will thus be possible to fulfill the three-fold purpose of the meeting, "fellowship, publicity and progress", in the very limited time available.

Directions: Please fill out the inclosed reservation card and forward immediately with remittance of two dollars (if remitting by personal check, please add exchange) to The Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., Executive Secretary, Houma, La. After October 5, to Hotel Grafton, Washington, D. C.

Help Needed in Mexico.

Bareback riding is the latest accomplishment of the Bishop of Mexico. He writes: "Mrs. Creighton and I left this morning, on the Interoceanic Railroad, to visit our mission at Tecalco. We got down at Ozumba and waited for horses. Finally two came, one a mare with a fifteen-day-old colt running by her side. The mare was saddled and Mrs. Creighton rode her. My horse 'wore' nothing but a blanket, and with no stirrups I was glad enough to get down when we met Presbitero Miranda in the road, and walk the rest of the distance with him.

Our service was Holy Communion with sermon by Sr. Miranda. About twenty were present, all of whom, including the children, took part heartily in the responses and singing.

"After the service we held a meeting to decide what to do with this mission. The people are very poor and many have no work. One man told me all are anxious to work, but are unable to encounter it. There is a bi-monthly tax of $12.65 (Mexican) which must be paid if Sr. Miranda is to continue. It is impossible to raise such a sum in Tecalco. The alternative is to close the mission. I told them to wait—that perhaps there is a Church or Sunday-school class in the States which would want a sister mission in Mexico. The cost would be about three dollars a month, United States currency. The congregation has no name as yet and I am sure any group willing to take them under its wing would have the privilege of naming the mission."

REASSURING CABLES.
Porto Rico Bulletin No. 2.

It is a pleasure to share the following reassuring cables with you:

Bishop Colmore cables from St. Croix, Virgin Islands, that he is safe, but unable to communicate with San Juan and we have notified Mrs. Colmore in San Juan of his safety.

Mrs. Colmore has cabled from San Juan:

"All are safe. Nothing has been heard from other mission stations. Situation is very serious. Details will be sent as soon as possible."

Rev. F. A. Saylor has cabled from Mayaguez:

"Personnel is safe. Mission property has been damaged. Estimated loss at present less than $1,000."

We have assured the members of our American staff that the Department of Missions will stand behind them in meeting their personal emergency needs, and the Red Cross will provide for the Porto Rican people.

It is too early as yet to make any definite plans for repairing or reconstructing the property damaged or destroyed. It is evident, however, that help will be needed for this purpose. As soon as possible, plans will be worked out and made known.

The Rev. Ernest Pugh, formerly of San Juan, now in New Jersey, writes:

"Ready for any emergency service Porto Rico or Virgin Islands."

Sincerely yours,

John W. Wood.

NORTHERN INDIANA.

Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop.

Girls' Friendly Society.

The annual meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Northern Indiana opened Saturday, September 8, at 3 P. M., in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Mishawaka with a service and address by Bishop Gray. The opening address was followed by the annual business session, after which a dinner was served and a program presented by the (Hungarian) Girls' Friendly of Trinity Church, South Bend.

The business of the day consisted of a report of the previous year's activities, election of officers, a discussion of the provincial meeting which will be held at Racine, Wisconsin, October 5, 6 and 7, and to which two delegates will be sent from Indiana, a report from the department of activities, which showed a great increase in the amount which has been given to charity and the mission field by the society during the past year, especially to the women's section of the new Episcopal Hospital in Liberia. The chief speaker of the afternoon was Miss Winifred Dunkel, provincial field secretary.

Mrs. C. E. Bigler, president, gave the previous year's report which was, in brief, as follows: The president attended the National Council meeting in Boston, Mass., and upon returning to Northern Indiana, spoke at the various societies. A new society was formed in May at Goshen, Ind., which consisted of thirteen girls and two associates, but which has since increased considerably. There was a large attendance at the girls' summer camp at Holiday House, and also at the Young People's Conference at Wawasee, where there were five Girls' Friendly organizations represented.

Election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. C. E. Bigler, of Kokomo; Vice-President, Mrs. W. H. Fritz; Secretary, Miss Margaret Overshiner, and Treasurer, Miss Mabel Cole.

There were forty-five persons present at the conference, whereas only thirty were expected. The cities in Northern Indiana which were represented were Marion, Kokomo, Fort Wayne, South Bend, Elkhart, Goshen, and Mishawaka.

The Hungarian branch of the Girls Friendly entertained at a chicken dinner in the Sunday-school rooms in the Church building.

Sunday morning at 8:15 there was a Corporate Communion, with an offering for the Girls' Friendly missionary object, the hospital at Cape Palmas, Liberia. There was a Festival Service at 10:45 with the Bishop as preacher.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Two Special Pullmans.

Two special Pullmans attached to the Pennsylvania Red Arrow train leaving Detroit on October 8, will contain a part of the delegation, deputies and visitors, who will represent the Diocese of Michigan at the General Convention.

Girls' Friendly Conference.

Bishop Page presided at a series of conferences at the Girls' Friendly Holiday House, Pine Lake, Michigan, during September. From September 18 to 20 the clergy met with the Bishop to consider the program for the fall and winter, and to discuss diocesan and parish problems. The Rev. C. E. Snowden, Executive Secretary of the National Field Department, attended the conference as the representative of the General Church. Following the clergy conference the eight women missionaries in the diocese met with the Bishop and Archdeacon Ramsay. On Friday evening, September 21, twenty lay readers gathered at Holiday House and conferred with the Bishop on parish problems, the duties of lay readers, services and the diocesan program and its relation to the Mission.

Oscar deWolf Randolph Leaves Diocese.

Effective September 1, 1928, the Rev. Oscar deWolf Randolph resigned as rector of Saint Mary's Church on the Highlands, of Birmingham, Ala., to become the rector of the Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, Va. Mr. Randolph is a graduate of the University of Virginia, and of the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria. Before coming to Saint Mary's in 1919 he was rector of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Church at Lexington, Va. During the World War he served as Major of Infantry in the United States Army. Under his leadership Saint Mary's Church has recently completed a beautiful new parish house in which to carry on its increased activities, especially among the young people. During the past few years its membership has greatly increased. In addition to his parish duties, Mr. Randolph has taken a leading part in diocesan activities. He was President of the Standing Committee, a member of the Executive Committee, and also Missionary Treasurer of the Diocese of Alabama. He is a deputy to the General Convention to be held at Washington in October. The Virginia Episcopal School is one of the outstanding preparatory schools in the South, and by temperament, training and experience Mr. Randolph is well qualified to assume its leadership and to carry forward the notable work that it is doing among boys.

Montgomery Church Has Handsome Gift.

On the Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity, in the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, a handsome reredos was consecrated by the rector, the Rev. Peerce N. McWonald.

The reredos is of oak, beautifully carved. It was designed by Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston, and was made in the studio of Irving & Casson, of Boston.

In the central panel is a figure of the ascending Christ, emphasizing the teaching which is in the name of this parish. On either side of this central figure are smaller panels, depicting scenes in the life of our Lord. One panel shows the Feeding of the Five Thousand; another, The Turning of the Water into Wine; another, The Visit of the Centurion; and finally, The Raising of Lazarus.

The reredos was given as a memorial by Mrs. Algernon Blair to her mother, Mrs. Mary King Blue, formerly of Christ Church, Macon, Ga. It is one of a number of handsome memorials which have recently been installed in this church. The church itself was designed by Ralph Adams Cram, and was completed in 1927.

New Parish House for Christ Church, Little Rock.

When Christ Church's new $65,000 parish house is completed, it will give to Little Rock one of the most modern and completely equipped structures of the kind in the South, according to a survey made yesterday of the drawings in the offices of Thompson, Sanders &

Ginocchio, architects for the building. Plans and specifications for the new house have been completed, bids have been advertised and actual construction is expected to be started in the near future.

The parish house, funds for which were raised in a recent special campaign, will be of imposing architectural design, three stories in height and of brick construction, joining the church proper on the south side on the present site of the old parish house.

The first floor of the building will be given over to the church's offices, rector's study and the various departments of the Church School. On the second floor, a large assembly hall and gymnasium, ladies' aid rooms, women's Bible class rooms, young people's department and kitchen will be housed. Facilities will be available for serving large dinners and luncheons.

The boys' club, boys' and girls' locker rooms and shower baths will be located on the third floor. An upstairs hall, running down one side of the gymnasium, will be utilized as a gallery when meetings are being held in the assembly room.

By the time the new edifice is completed, Christ Church will have rounded out its ninetieth year as a house of worship in Little Rock. It was founded in March, 1839, by Bishop Leonidas Polk, missionary bishop of Tennessee, afterwards Lieutenant-General Polk of the Confederate forces, who was killed in the terrific fighting between the Confederate and Federal forces in Georgia during the spring of 1864. At that time there was no Episcopal Church in Little Rock and the Presbyterians tendered use of their edifice at Second and Main Streets. Bishop Polk's first services were held there and Christ Church was organized at that time. There were about twenty families of Episcopalians here at the time.

Bishop Polk not only selected the site on which the Church now stands, but also donated $900 of his own money for its purchase. The first building to be erected on the new property was completed in 1842.

Work was begun on the erection of the present church in 1874, but got no further than the foundation for a number of years. It finally was completed in 1886.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

From Bishop Tucker.

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Virginia:

The annual convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is the outstanding opportunity offered by our Church to its laymen for deepening their spiritual life, arousing their religious enthusiasm and considering the problems involved in the application of Christianity to life. The convention meets this year in Washington within easy access of the men of our Virginia Diocese. Not only members of the Brotherhood, but all laymen are invited to attend. In our Virginia Church life we need just the kind of stimulus that will be given by this convention. Moreover, when the Brotherhood honors us by holding its annual meeting so near us, we ought to show our appreciation by doing our full part in helping promote the success of the convention. I appeal, therefore, to clergy and the laymen of our Diocese to make every effort to secure a large representation from Virginia.

H. St. George Tucker,
Bishop of Virginia.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Washington Church News now means Convention news, for the interests and activities of individuals, parishes and the diocese itself are all centered in some phase of the great assembly of Church people to take place in Washington in October. The secular papers of Washington are rarely without some reference to the great event, these days, and committees with their chairmen are "on the job", with headquarters at Diocesan House, or the offices at 927 Fifteenth Street.

Like Shakespeare's "Play Within a Play", October in Washington will witness "Conventions Within a Convention", for a number of affiliated organizations of the Church are in the habit of following the Convention in its triennial meetings. Some of these are the great Woman's Auxiliary, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Daughters of the King, the Church Periodical Club, the Conference of Church Workers Among the Deaf, the Girls' Friendly Society, the National Church Club for Women, the Church School Service Program, and others.

The Willard Hotel and the Mayflower have been chosen as headquarters for the larger organizations, the Convention itself using the Willard, and the Woman's Auxiliary and Brotherhood of St. Andrew using the Mayflower. Other hotel headquarters may be ascertained by writing to the Rev. Hugh T. Nelson, 927 Fifteenth Street, N. W.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew will hold its conference from October 5 to October 9, this being a sort of preparation for the Convention itself. The Woman's Auxiliary dates will coincide with the first part of the General Convention. Outstanding services of interest will be the opening service of the General Convention on October 10 at 10:30 A. M. in the Amphitheatre on Mt. St. Alban. In case of inclement weather, the service will be held in the auditorium. October 11, at 8 A. M., will be the occasion of the great service of the Woman's Auxiliary, the United Thank Offering Service, to be held in the Washington Cathedral. Every effort is being made for the completion of the building sufficiently to accommodate this service, which, if held there, will be the first service held in the Cathedral. The United Thank Offering Mass Meeting will be held in the auditorium on October 11 at 8 P. M., when announcement of the amount of the United Thank Offering will be made. All missionaries attending the Convention will be on the platform and will be introduced by Dr. Wood. The Custodian of the United Thank Offering in Washington has requested all parishes to have their individual presentation services before September 23, the date set for the Diocesan presentation service, which will be held in St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street. It is hoped that the Bishop of Washington will be able to attend this service and give a word of greeting. By way of preparation for the Triennial of 1928, the Woman's Auxiliary, through the efforts of Mrs. Benjamin, has compiled sketches of the histories of the several parishes in the diocese and these will soon be available. This will, in years to come, doubtless prove a valuable piece of work, because it records in permanent form some of the early history of the Church in this diocese, a history full of charm and interest.

A special meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese on October 2 at two o'clock in St. Margaret's Church is called for the special purpose of giving to all Auxiliary women very definite and final information concerning the Triennial.

The President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, Mrs. Wm. D. Hurd, is sending monthly letters to all branch presidents, by which she is keeping the branches thoroughly in touch with the work of the Auxiliary. These letters contain reports of the different secretaries, and the missionaries who will be present during the Convention are being given each a short biography. News of Auxiliary activities in the many parishes is given here also, and Mrs. Hurd's letters seem surely a good way to bind more closely together the Women's Missionary interests in the diocese. The desk which was assigned for Auxiliary headquarters at 927 Fifteenth Street has become too small for the volume of work which must pass over it, but volunteer workers are helping to keep it cleared and a successful Triennial is the promise.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has likewise carried on an intensive piece of preparatory work, and preliminary programs for both sections of the Brotherhood Convention have been announced and show a remarkable list of forceful speakers on vital subjects. The list, though long, is worth reading and the lectures and addresses promise to be worth hearing. The theme for the Senior Section is "Ye Shall Be Witnesses", and that for the Junior Section will be, "Life, its Opportunities, Guide, Problems and Victory". An important service of the Brotherhood will be the Corporate Communion at 7:30 A. M., at St. Thomas' Church on Sunday, October 7. At this service, Bishop Freeman will be the celebrant. As one reads the list of speakers for the Brotherhood Convention, the name of Professor Samuel Joslin stands out, and his three addresses arrest one's attention. They are: "The Spirit of Buddhism and Its Contribution to Human Welfare," "The Achievements and Tragedies of Islam" and "The Meaning of the Christian Message to the World Today."

These and all of the great things which will be happening so soon 'n Washington present a great opporunity to Churchmen living here and to all those who may make a pilgrimage to the nation's capital at that time.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Three interesting new churches are under construction in Long Island Diocese this summer.

St. Matthew's, Brooklyn Manor, is likely to be completed in six or eight weeks. It is an imposing edifice, and will be an important addition to the fine churches of the diocese. It is built of a hard Pennsylvania stone with quite a variety of color in it. The artificial stone trim is of a gray color and pleasing texture. There is a lofty and very beautiful stone tower alongside the chancel on the south side. There are two aisles with large clearstory windows. The principal windows have stone mullions and the smaller windows are of a single opening. Several windows will be memorials of colored glass; the others of plain leaded panes. The little old frame church has been moved back and turned north-and-south along the rear of the plot, and will be used for parish purposes.

St. Thomas', Bellerose, though smaller and simpler, is far enough developed

Overcoming the World.

When John speaks about the world he is not thinking of the world of nature. There is, of course, a real sense in which we overcome the world of nature. We overcome it by obeying it—the meek shall inherit the earth. But John is not thinking of this childlike attitude which has won for man the secrets of the universe; his thought is fixed on other things. His world is the world of men and women among whom the believer's lot is cast. It is the society which encompasses the Christian, and of which the orientation is not Godward. The world, in the pictorial idiom of Scripture, is largely equivalent to what we mean by worldliness in the more abstract language of the West. Who, then, is he that overcometh the world? It is clearly not the man who flies from it. Our Saviour's intercession for his own does not contemplate victory by flight. The true victory, however it be wrested, is won in the heart of that environment where the Christian moves and has his being.

To begin with, he overcomes the world who refuses to be bullied by it. The world is always desperately eager to browbeat a man into conformity. We speak, for instance, of the world of fashion. How autocratic and tyrannical it is. It takes a deal of quiet courage sometimes for a woman to defy the world of fashion. And the world of fashion is but a single facet of the bigger world of our environment, which is so largely alien from God. The world has its own standards. It has its own measurements and judgments. It demands conformity to its own codes and is swift to punish those who disregard them. And whenever anybody, moved by loftier motives, refuses to be bullied by the world, in the eyes of heaven he has overcome it. The wonderful thing about our Lord was that he was in the world, and yet not of the world. He was genial; he loved the haunts of men; He sat at the marriage and wept beside the grave. Yet never, for one single moment from Nazareth to Calvary, could the world browbeat His majestic spirit. It tried to do so by its flatteries. It sought to bend and break Him by its threats. It bribed Him with all the glory of its kingdoms. Through the lips of love it urged Him to be careful. But He, serene and radiant, one with the sinner yet separate from sinners, moved on disregardful to the cross. His standards were not the world's standards. He refused to lower them, though all the world was laughing. He nailed them to the mast and kept them there, through ridicule, misunderstanding and shame. That was why, on the eve of the betrayal, He could cry out exultingly, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world".

Once again, he overcomes the world who refuses to be embittered by it. To grow embittered is always to be beaten. There are lives in every circle of society that have little temptation to embitterment. They journey through the years as through a garden, and "a garden is a lovesome thing, God wot". But there are other lives, and they are everywhere, in which the years have been so fraught with miseries that to keep love alive and the happy childlike heart is an achievement incredibly hard. That was the achievement of our Lord. He steadfastly refused to grow embittered. He had such treatment at the hands of men as might well have soured the milk of human kindness. And yet the one thing you never find in Jesus, even on the night of the betrayal, is the touch of misanthropy or cynicism. He was as loving at the close as at the start. His joy grew richer as the days went on. His peace endured; His patience never broke; His hopefulness was radiant to the end. And whenever anybody keeps a heart like that through the bitterest that life can bring, he, like our Lord, emerges as a conqueror. When the heart is soured the world has won. Cynicism is defeat. To lose the happy, loving childlike heart is a confession that the world has beaten us. Christ never lost it in and sorest hour, and it is His voice which calls across the darkness, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world".

Lastly, he overcomes the world who refuses to lose faith in God because of it. There is something in everybody's world which tends to dim a living faith in God. One may lose faith in God for intellectual reasons. Clouds and darkness are about his throne. But far more often faith in God is dimmed by what is actually happening in the world. It may be in the larger world of history, with its catastrophes and tragedies and wars; it may be in the lesser world of social or personal experience. How can God love me when He treats me so? Can I believe that He is ordering everything? Is there an eye to pity and an army to save when I pray so earnestly—and fail? There are experiences in everybody's world, no matter how quiet and orderly it seems, that put a tremendous strain on living faith. If we renounce that faith, the world has beaten us. It has triumphed in robbing us of trust. By things we cannot explain or reconcile it has unclasped the hand that was holding on to heaven. But when through everything we walk by faith; when we cry, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him", then for us, as for our conquering forerunner, the world is overcome.—The British Weekly.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Cards Signed.

There came unto our City a man who had for his mission a Highly Important Reform. And concerning what he desireth to Reform, I have the opinion that it Greatly Needeth to be Reformed. And I am ready at almost any time to contribute a Shekel toward the Process of Reformation.

And there went with me Five of my Nine Grandchildren. And they were Greatly Impressed with the Need of Reform.

And at the Close the man said, The Ushers will now Circulate Envelopes into which Cash may be placed. And in each envelope also is a card for Annual or Monthly or Weekly Subscriptions. And whether thou shalt give Cash or Subscription, we desire that thou Sign thy Name, for we wish to know who be our Friends.

So the Ushers brought Cards unto our Seat, and unto each of the Children was there given a Card, and a Tiny Lead Pencil and an Envelope.

And I felt in my Pocket and I found a Shekel, and that did I place in mine own envelope, for I pay Cash.

And I sought further, and I found some Fractional Currency, and I gave unto one Child a Nickel and unto another a Dime until they all had Money.

But they wanted to use the Cute Little Lead Pencils, and I was quite willing.

And they wrought Laboriously at the Names and the Street Addresses, and some wrote them and some Printed them. And I did not look very Carefully at what they Did.

And the Next Day the Master of the Head Office of that Organization Called me on the Long Distance Phone and said:

This Organization is now on Easy Street. For every one of thy Five Grandchildren hath Filled out a Pledge with a Check Mark in Every Space on the Card.

And I inquired, What is the Total?

And he said, There is a Space for those who will give a Dime a Week, and every one of them promised that for a year; and one for those who will give the Fourth Part of a Shekel a Week, and they all subscribed that; and one for those who will pledge a Shekel a Week, and one for those who will pledge Five Shekels a Week, and one for those who will pledge Ten Shekels. And they have all signed on the Dotted Line for all of those amounts, and we know their Grandsire is a Man of Great Wealth and a friend of this Organization, and we judge that he will henceforth be our Principal Contributor.

Now this he said as it were Jestingly, for he and I know each other. And the next day he mailed me back the cards, and it was as he said.

But I would rather be a Generous Little Child and Promise too Much than be a Miserly Adult and Give Nothing.—Exchange.

"Let us not be too particular about the kind of work we are to do. We are often seeking what we are pleased to consider important service, conspicuous and yet easy work. But Jesus, in the high tide of his supremest and richest self-consciousness, took a towel and washed the disciples' feet; and we are never more like Him than when we are hitching our most splendid powers and opportunities to the lowliest service."

FARE FORTH.

Fare forth, my Soul! where ocean rocks
  In wide bewilderment of storm,
And where the drenching salt wave shocks;
  And mutilating breakers form.

Fare forth, where all the night is dark
  And blindness takes thee by the hand,
Where the unkenneled tempests bark
  And crush thee backward toward the strand.

Fare forth! Embark on creaking ship
  That wallows in the ocean brine,
Nor suffer fear to whiten lip
  Nor once forget thou art divine.

Fare forth! Fare forth! The tempests call.
  Fare forth and far, where wild winds wail.
Fare forth to meet the crush and fall
  Of plunging waves. Fare forth, nor fail!

—William A. Quayle, in Central Christian Advocate.

The Bird in a Basket.

When Teddy and Alice went to Japan to visit their grandfather, who was a missionary, they were delighted with the beautiful country, its strange customs and the many odd things which they saw for the first time.

A number of times they had seen a little brown man with a wicker basket in his hand pass by the mission. They always said good morning to him, "Ohaio", and he returned their greeting. He carried the basket carefully, and sometimes stopped and talked to the basket, as Alice told her grandfather. They felt very curious to see what was inside.

"There must be something very honorable in it," the little girl laughed. "I wish I could just take a peep."

"The next time he passes and you say 'Ohaio' to him, go close to the basket and repeat it," her grandfather told her. "I think you will find something very interesting in it. It is a secret for you to find out."

When the little brown man passed again with his basket, Alice said "Ohaio" to him, then bent over and said it to the basket. The Jap understood and smiled at her. He removed the lid and the children saw a big bird within. It was a very handsome bird and they tried to ask him if it was a pet. There were only a few words they could understand, that he was going to take it to water, and something about fish.

Alice ran into the house to tell her grandfather.

"It is a big bird, and he is going to take it to the river to give it some fish. It's a beautiful, intelligent bird, and knows what he says to it. It is very tame."

Grandfather told the children that the bird was trained to fish for his master, and he offered to take them down to the river, where the Japanese and bird were going to look for their dinner. Alice and Teddy could not wait, but ran on ahead for fear they might lose a part of the performance.

The man was already in a small boat with the bird in the basket beside him. Grandfather talked to him in his own language and he made a place for them all in the boat. Grandfather said he would row, so that the little brown man might give his whole attention to the bird.

The Jap took the bird from the basket and fastened a ring made of fiber around its throat. He then tied a long, thin line to the bird and placed him on the edge of the boat. When they had gotten some distance from shore the big bird watched his master closely for the signal to plunge overboard. Then over he went with great speed and disappeared beneath the water. He remained so long that Alice feared he might get lost, when she saw him swimming toward the boat. The line was then drawn in and the bird taken on board.

"Look at his big throat," Teddy cried. "I know, it is full of fish and he can't swallow them on account of the band around his neck. How does the man get them out?"

The Jap was already kneeling beside the bird. He put his hand around its neck at the place where the band was fastened and began to press upward, thus forcing the bird to open his beak. Out dropped a fish, then another, and he was immediately thrown overboard to catch more.

"I can see the top of his head and neck," Alice cried. "He has gone after a fish. Look! He threw it into the air and caught it again.'

Grandfather explained that the bird had caught it by the tail and that it would not pass down his throat in that manner, so he tossed it up and swallowed it head first.

Teddy pulled in the line and the fish, a big one, was forced from his throat. Again and again he went into the river and returned with fish. Then the ring was removed from his throat and he was given two small fishes to eat. He swallowed one, but refused the other.

"He isn't hungry," Teddy said. "A big bird three feet high should have a big appetite."

"Did you notice the way the ring was fastened on his neck?" grandfather asked. "It was loose enough to allow very small fish to pass down his throat, but tight enough to hold the large ones in his gullet. He probably had a meal of small fish in the water."

The bird was replaced in his basket and they all left the boat.

"What is the name of the bird?" Teddy asked.

"A cormorant. It was caught when it was quite small and trained to fish by its master. It became very tame and quite fond of him."

"I think I should have several to fish for me," Teddy remarked.

"There are certain fishing boats where several cormorants are kept at work. They are joined by a sort of harness with a long, separate line for each bird. By jerking a certain line, the owner can recall any one of the number he wants. Moonlight fishing is great sport as well as profit."

"Is it a very old custom, grandfather?" Alice asked.

"Very old in China as well as Japan," he told them.—Junior World.

Boys That Succeed.

"A new boy came into our office today," said a merchant to his wife. "He was hired by the firm at the request of the senior member, who thought the boy gave promise of good things. But I feel sure that the boy will not last a week."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because the first thing he wanted to know was just exactly what he was expected to do."

Three days later the business man said to his wife: "About that boy you remember I mentioned three or four days ago—well, he is the best boy we ever had."

"How did you find that out?"

"In the easiest way in the world. The first morning after the boy began to work, he performed very faithfully and systematically the exact duties assigned, which he had been so careful to have explained to him. When he had finished, he came to me and said: 'Mr. H——, I have finished all that work. Now what can I do?'"—The Lutheran.

BACK TO SCHOOL.

Back again with pencils, back again with pens,
  Chalking up the ciphers on the board;
But we sigh for velvet meadows and songs of treetop wrens,
  And long to wade the swiftly running ford.

Back again with grammars, back again with maps,
  We're tracing our old China's musty wall;
But our thoughts are in the timbers, where the gold-wing pecker taps,
  And the saucy blue-winged jaybirds loudly call.

Back again with lessons, back again with slates,
  We are pouring over half a dozen books;
But we wish that we were fishing with the little fat grub baits
  In the shadow of the meadow minnow brooks.

Back again with studies, back again with rules,
  And the multiplication-tables now we hear;
But dream of some old place where there aren't any schools,
  And vacation is a dozen months a year.

—Exchange.

"I'd Rather Fail Than Cheat."

Frank saw the teacher write the ten questions on the blackboard. They were all easy and he was soon finished.

He was about to fold his paper to hand in when he glanced across the aisle and noticed that Henry's answer to No. 5 was 68, and his own—58.

He began rechecking this question, and sure enough, he had made a slight mistake, which had made the answer ten less than it now came out—68, the same as Henry's.

Satisfied now that every answer was correct, Frank folded his paper, took it to the teacher's desk and returned to his seat.

When class was over he began to wonder if he had done the right thing, and he wondered still more the next day when his paper came back with a mark of one hundred upon it.

"Well, I really didn't cheat, for I didn't copy from any one. I just found out I made a mistake and corrected it. That was all."

Still, something seemed to say that if he had not seen Henry's—slow plodding Henry's—paper, he would have turned in his own, with the wrong answer to No. 5, his grade would not have been one hundred, but ninety.

The more he thought about it the more uncomfortable he became, and along with this he had a low, mean, sneaking feeling that he had done something which he wouldnt' be proud to have his parents or friends know—nor was he proud to know it himself.

On the way home that evening he fell in with Philip. "Say, Phil," Frank remarked, trying to assume a careless, off-hand matter, "what do you think of cheating, anyway?"

"I never have cheated yet either in examination or class. In fact, I'd rather fail in every examination than have to cheat to rise my grade even one point."

That remark settled the matter for Frank. Next morning before classes began he took his examination paper to his teacher, and though the task was one of the hardest he had ever undertaken, he told exactly what had happened, and when she changed his grade ten points lower he was prouder of that ninety—for it meant a well-earned victory for his better self—than if he had made ten hundreds in a row.

"From now on," he said to himself as he came away, "one of my rules of life is that I would rather fail in every examination than have to cheat to raise my grade even one point."

And it was a rule that Frank never broke.—Selected.

GOOD CHURCH LIGHTING

WHATEVER your lighting requirements may be, whether the units desired are Sanctuary Reflectors, Nave Lanterns or Outside Lanterns, Rambusch designers and lighting experts have developed units embodying all the principles of good church lighting. The warm, pleasing light emitted from these lanterns is quite different from old glaring Church light. Moreover the graceful design, substantial construction and the character of hand wrought metal make these fixtures a decorative asset and lend to any Church an air of dignity—something which is usually lacking in earlier types of Church fixtures.

Selection and proper location of lighting equipment for your Church should not be decided upon until after a consultation with one of our experts on Church illumination.

Deaths

ARCHIBALD HENDERSON TAYLOR.

Born in Alexandria, Virginia, in 1851, after a distinguished career at the Baltimore bar, MR. TAYLOR died August 17, at Port Chester, New York.

His marriage in 1907 to Miss Mary M. Parker, of Boston, was a rarely happy one, and we who join her in mourning his death are perhaps a larger circle of people truly bereaved than any other man known to us could leave behind.

Keen, active and penetrating as was his mind, it is still more for the warmth and breadth of his friendships that we find nobody else like him. In all walks of life here, among many beyond the bounds of our own country, people are missing the ready, active, generous sympathy, the broad, penetrating, charitable judgment, the liberality with money, time and effort which never failed the multitudes of his friends. For such a life we give thanks to God, as it passes on into the joy of his Lord.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

in construction to give one an idea of a very attractive and somewhat unusual design. The plot is excellently located in the center of the community, facing the station plaza and bounded by two of the avenues which radiate from this center. The material is rough red brick, and rather large butteresses and brick roof arches will be striking features of the plan. There will be a commodious basement for educational and other purposes. The building is up to the window sill line, and some of the butteresses and arches are higher. The cornerstone will not be laid until fall, though the building by that time will have passed the stage at which cornerstones are commonly laid. The Rev. Ernest V. R. Stires is in charge of this mission, and seems to be well on the way toward making it into a good parish.

The Church of the Epiphany, Avenue R and East Eighteenth Street, Brooklyn, has its foundations and basement walls complete, and will have its cornerstone laid in the fall. A change has been made as to the material, and buff brick will be substituted for the stone formerly intended. This is because of the delay that was found unavoidable in the delivery of the stone.

The Rev. W. M. Partridge, who is officiating at St. James' Church, Brooklyn, in the absence of the rector, has entered upon a ministry of healing, and seems to have been of help to many sick people. His method is to invite those who are suffering to come to the altar at the end of the Eucharist, when he lays his hands upon them with prayer for their recovery, and then gives a blessing. This seems a very simple and straightforward acceptance of the familiar injunction of St. James, and one is glad to read in the daily papers that considerable numbers of people are seeking this help and not a few profess themselves spiritually and physically benefited. Father Partridge is careful to state that he does not claim or wish to supplant, but only to supplement, the work of the physician.

The Rev. George E. Talmage, rector of Christ Church, Oyster Bay, in a recent issue of "Christ Church Confidences" says:

"On July 14, 1918, Quentin Roosevelt fell on the field of honor. This issue is given by his mother in memory of that brave character. We repeat the prayer which was found in his pocket:

"'Teach us, good Lord, to serve Thee as Thou deservedst, to give and not to count the cost; to fight and not to heed the wounds; to toil and not to seek for rest; to labor and not to ask for any reward, save that of knowing that we do Thy will, through Jesus Christ our Lord.'"

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

Five Conferences.

Five successful conferences were held recently at Kanuga Lake, in "The Land of the Sky", in the Diocese of Western North Carolina. There were visitors present from at least four Carolina dioceses. At the Young People's Service League Conference, held in July, there were two hundred and fifty boys and girls—and the conference was one of far-reaching effect. A number of the young people remained over after the conference and got "board and keep" for service rendered in the dining room during the remainder of the summer.

Then there was a Junior Girls' Conference for girls under fourteen years of age, and this was followed by another such gathering for boys under fourteen. There were seventy-five girls for the former and sixty-five boys for the latter conference.

The Adult Conference, for Women's Auxiliary workers and those interested in teach-training, brought together sixty women and the conference for the clergy brought twenty ministers to the mountains.

Kanuga Lake is a summering place embracing some four hundred acres and negotiations are now in progress looking to the possible acquiring of this ideal setting as an Episcopal Conference center. The owners of the property offer Kanuga to Episcopal Church authorities for $87,000. It is said that the buildings alone, which are now in a splendid state of repair, could scarcely be erected for twice that sum. There is a spacious hotel and about fifty other buildings, including thirty cottages. The hotel overlooks a vast expanse of water covering many acres—and it is claimed that Kanuga Lake is the most beautiful of all the lovely lakes in this famed mountain territory.

Bishop K. G. Finlay, of Upper South Carolina, is the principal influence behind the movement to procure Kanuga as a cenference center. It was he who agreed to take over the property for the summer and run it as a conference and vacation proposition. He states that despite the fact that several serious drawbacks militated against him and despite the fact that all those in charge were new at the business of operating such a center, all expenses were met and there will probably be a small balance, after the figures are checked up.

The Dioceses of Upper South Carolina and South Carolina and those of Western North Carolina and East Carolina have combined in a campaign to take over the Kanuga property, but the Diocese of North Carolina, the largest and wealthiest of all the Carolinas has so far held aloof, despite every entreaty to join with the other dioceses and take over the resort for the purpose of creating it into a modern conference ground, for which it is ideally adapted, as to accessibility, accommodations, accessories, climate and general qualifications.

At Montreat, also in "The Land of the Sky", as the mountain territory of Western Carolina is appropriately termed, the Presbyterian Church has successfully operated a similar conference ground for some years. A large new hotel, made entirely of stone, has just been completed and there is a vast auditorium with a capacity of five thousand sittings. The Methodist Church has an attractive conference center at Lake Junaluska, not far from Asheville and the Baptist church also has its denominational assembly ground in this region. The taking over of Kanuga, which virtually amounts to a gift, in the light of the rapid development of similar mountain resorts and the great value of like properties, would put into Church's hands an ideal assembly ground for summer gatherings of all kinds, as well as a delightful resort for whole families and groups of persons looking for ideal vacation environment.

Personal Notes

National Church Club for Women.

The Rev. Howard Cady, formerly of the Diocese of South Carolina, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's, Hamilton, Va.; St. Peter's, Purcellville; Mt. Calvary, Round Hill and Christ Church, Luckett's, in Loudoun County. He entered upon his new charge September 9. Address, Hamilton, Va.

The Rev. W. S. Llewellyn Romilly has resigned the charge of Slaughter Parish, Culpeper Co., Va., on August 31, and will retire from active work. Mr. Romilly came to Virginia in 1915 to the charge of Washington and Montross parishes in Westmoreland County, where he remained for five years. Since 1920 he has been rector of Slaughter Parish. He will reside in Boston.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Thurston R. Hinckley, headmaster of Iolani School, Honolulu, was ordained to the priesthood in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Honolulu (presumably by Bishop La Mothe. The card does nots ay), on July 29. He was presented by the Rev. Francis N. Cullen. The Rev. Hugh E. Montgomery was the preacher.

In the Church of the Redeemer, Cairo, Diocese of Springfield, Illinois, Sunday, September 9, being the Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity, the Rev. Heber Williamson Weller was advanced to the Sacred Order of Priests, by his uncle, the Rt. Rev. Reginald Heber Weller, D. D., Bishop of Fond du Lac, acting for the Bishop of Springfield. The young deacon was presented by the Rt. Rev. John Chanler White, D. D., Bishop of Springfield, the sermon was preached by the Ven. Charles Knight Weller, Archdeacon of Cairo, and father of the new priest; these were assisted in the Laying on of Hands by the Rev. Carleton Day Lathron, rector of Christ ordination of the Rev. Heber W. Weller Church, Cape Girardeau, Mo. In the sir generations of the Weller family have entered the sacred ministry of the Church in America. On October 1 he will become priest-in-charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Sarasota, Fla.

NEW BOOKS OF RELIGION

"Here it is at last," announced the Religious Book Club Bulletin, ending a nine months' wait for a popular volume by a first-rank scientist on the relation of science to religion. SCIENCE in SEARCH OF GOD ($2.00), by Kirtley F. Mather, of Harvard, met their specifications. The Christian Century (W. E. Garrison, reviewing) said it deserved the rank of religious book-of-the-month, and added, "For a brief statement of an intelligent faith in terms consistent with a scientific method of thought , I know of nothing better than this thoughtful and readable book".

Books a-plenty are telling what Catholics and Protestants think or ought to think about the Church and politics. Now comes a timely little tract on tolerance, PROTESTANT SAINTS, by Earl Marlatt of Boston University ($1.25). It is made of three psychographs, picturing Augustine, Bernard, and Francis. Gamaliel Bradford, psychograph expert, writes: "In analyzing their Protestantism, so perfectly compatible with their humble and devout Catholicism, Professor Marlatt makes the saints . . . live and act and feel with that vitality which enabled them to be creative forces in the Church of their own day and will make them equally so in ours for those who read about them understandingly."

Esther Willard Bates, of Boston University, sends a compliment for Fred Eastman's MODERN RELIGIOUS DRAMAS. "I specially liked the play, The Color Line, and I should be very proud if one of my pupils turned out so clear and compact a play. But I liked a great many others also, and it will give me pleasure to recommend the book." Professor Eastman's dramatic workshop at Chicago Theological Seminary was a busy place while he was examining almost three hundred plays and pageants to find the best for this volume. Eleven one-act plays and two pageants survived his tests, and are offered, in MODERN RELIGIOUS DRAMAS ($3.00), to churches and church schools.

Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia

Including Stonewall Jackson's Operations in the Shenandoah Valley 1861-65.

By VIVIAN MINOR FLEMING,
Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

Full account of every battle, and approaches to the same, by the State Highway.

THE ORIGIN OF LIFE

A. C. Dixon, D. D.

I remember how near I came to losing my faith in the Bible and things miraculous; and I was saved from it by one of the dullest books I ever read. Somehow I got hold of a history of philosophy, written by a German, with an uninteresting German style, and it was two volumes big—450 pages to a volume. For some reason or other I got interested in the thing, and I found many pages devoted to the history of Grecian philosophy, and through it all ran clear-cut, up-to-date modern Darwinism. I found that Thales, the old Egyptian philosopher, believed that water was the primordial germ; that Heraclitus believed that fire was the primordial germ; another, that water and earth and air were the primordial germs. Pythagoras believed that number was the primordial germ; another one believed that "Infinity," whatever that is, was the primordial germ. And I said, "Why, the thing that has been botherng me because it seemed to be a new discovery is as old as 700 years before Christ, and what is known as Darwinism is the digging up of a dead philosophy from amid the ruins of Grecian thought."

Well, that old dull book saved me from believing that Darwinism was an up-to-date scientific discovery; and when I began to use the gray matter in my brain—I have always thought God put it there to be used—I found three things confronting me. It has been well said that God only is the originator of life. Mr. Tyndall, about twenty-five years ago, said that there is in dead matter the promise and potency of life, and people believed it. There was not a word of truth in it. There is not in dead matter one particle of the promise and potency of life. In dead vegetable matter there is the promise and potency of decomposition; in dead animal matter there is the promise and potency of putrefaction; in dead mineral matter there is the promise of potency of disintegration; in any sort of dead matter there is the promise and potency of more offensive death.

Under his microscope and telescope Tyndall could find no promise and potency of life in dead matter. However, just because he was labeled a scientist the world bulged its eyes and said, "He talks so wisely; there must be something in it, and we will wait and see." For twenty-five years the world waited without seeing any promise and potency of life in dead matter; then at the last meeting of the British Association the president acknowledges that there has never been any spontaneous generation; that dead matter has never yielded life, and there is no present prospect that it will yield life; yet he believes it will! Against all experience and all scientific teaching, he believes that somehow life may come out of dead matter by some mysterious process. If I could get folks to believe the gospel on such slender evidence as that I would sweep the world. If I could get people to believe the Bible with no proof, and more, with everything against it, I certainly would be victorious.

The gray matter in my brain told me another thing; as I looked about me I saw that embryonic, immature life is never reproductive. Even if God should create embryonic immature life, as Darwin says He did, that embryonic immature life has no power to reproduce itself. Eggs never hatch eggs; apples never bear apples—it takes a tree to bear an apple; it takes a hen to hatch an egg. Babies never bear babies. Immature, embryonic life is absolutely unreproductive. It cannot multiply itself. That is true even down in the lowest stratum of life, where insects live only twenty-four hours. There can be no reproduction without maturity. Now, where does that land you? Away back millions of years at a time when a little germ of life was introduced that could not reproduce itself. It is obvious what would become of it.

Another factor, when you let your gray matter work, becomes just as plain, and that is that embryonic, immature life is not only unreproductive, but it is unimprovable. You cannot improve embryonic life by working on it. How do you improve the quality of eggs? By making a better quality of hen. You try to improve the quality of an egg by working on it, and see what will happen. If you try to improve any kind of embryonic life you endanger its existence. In order to improve the quality of embryonic life you have to work on the mature product. Embryonic life is both unreproductive and unimprovable, and yet you have to accept the proposition that a thing which is unreproductive and unimprovable must evolve!

Let the gray matter in your brain work a little longer, and you will perceive that embryonic, immature life is not only unreproductive and unimprovable, but it is unpreservable. Almost anything will crush it out of existence, and a scientist a few months ago admitted that if embryonic life had come into the earth's chaotic state it would certainly have been destroyed.

So that you have these three things staring you in the face—not only that life does not come out of dead matter, but that embryonic life is unreproductive, unimprovable, and unpreservable. How can you believe in Darwinian evolution with these facts as plain before you as your alphabet? Well, why do they believe it? I do not know. I hold with old Plato. I was glad to meet him in that dusty old book. He had more thinking power in his brain than all the other Greek philosophers combined, if we except Aristotle and Socrates. Plato said to those Greek philsoophers who were promulgating Darwinism from 300 to 700 years before Christ: "You gentlemen are mistaken; man did not evolve from the beast, but man began equal with the gods and the beast developed from him."

Plato's teaching was, not that man was an improved monkey, but that the monkey was a degenearte man, and there is immensely more proof in favor of Plato's proposition than of Darwin's. There is more tendency in men to become monkeys than in monkeys to become men. You cannot turn a monkey into a man. He may look very like some people in outward appearance, and so can lions and dogs, for that matter, but you cannot give him a conscience and make him bow the knee in worship. After you have done all you can to improve him, he is a monkey still, and he stays right there. Plato, by a dim vision, got a glimpse of Biblical teaching that there was a bringing into life by creative power, and that man, beginning in the image of God, has degenerated.

"As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."—Ezek. 33:11.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The laws of God are but His will discovered.

"One never realizes his mortality so long as his mother is living."

"We do not merely want to know God's will; we want to know God Himself."

Life means, be sure,
Both heart and head—both active, both complete—
And both in earnest.
—E. B. Browning.

There are seasons when to be still demands immeasurably higher strength than to act. Composure is often the highest result of power. The greatest text-book of democracy is the New Testament, and the best standard of life we can take is that laid down by Jesus when He told us to love God and our fellow-men.

The responsibility of tolerance lies with those who have the wider vision.—George Eliot.

The Cross on Golgotha cannot rescue thee from the Evil One, unless it is set up in thine own heart.—Silesius.

To be despised may be no ill fortune. The real ill fortune is to be despicable. —Ruskin.

The man who looks complacently on what he has done has but a meager standard of excellence.

I believe that character is essentially a by-product. If you try to make it directly, you make a prig; but if you do your duty to mankind and your God, you make a character. And perhaps we are relieved of some elements of discouragement by the fact that the rush of circumstances makes it seldom possible to think about ourselves and always necessary to think about the duty immediately in hand, because if that is well done the character will take care of itself.—Woodrow Wilson.

I never prayed sincerely or earnestly for anything but it came—no matter at how distant a day, somehow, in some shape, probably in the last I would have devised, it came.—Adoniram Judson.

"The shadow falls: the shadow cannot stay:
Hope on, pray on, thou wilt not be denied:
Over the burnt-out embers of today
The golden morrow rises, and alway
The promise stands—thou shalt be satisfied."

MIRACLES

Some time ago one of the Southern Churchman's correspondents sent in an "excerpt from a letter", in which it was stated that a certain clergyman preaching on a special occasion had ridiculed the Old Testament account of Jonah and the great fish, asking his hearers whether, in this day of scientific knowledge, anybody realiy believed such a story. I wonder why he should have chosen this particular miracle from the book of Jonah for his attack, when there are so many others similar, that is, in their demand upon the Christian's faith. Is it any easier to believe the account of the iron axe-head that swam, or the dead man brought to life by touching the bones of Elisha, or Elijah going to heaven in a chariot of fire? Are not the miracles of the Old Testament all of a piece? If you prove one to be false, how can you establish the truth of the others? When the opposing counsel at a trial in court can prove that the witness has lied, of what possible value is his further testimony. The book of Jonah belongs to the canon of Scripture "of whose authority" (which has the nature of truth), our Prayer Book declares, "was never any doubt in the Church". Further, to doubt the truth of the miracle of Jonah and the great fish is to call in question the character of our Lord Himself. When He used this miracle to illustrate and enforce the truth of His own burial and resurrection, He knew that the men to whom He was speaking believed implicitly its reality. Is it thinkable that Jesus Christ would have taken this article of the faith of His hearers, have treated it,as He did, as an absolute fact, leaving them under the impression that He believed the same, if in reality He did not so believe it? "I am the truth," said Christ. Can we believe "the Truth" would so act?

Which, after all, make a greater demand on our faith, "Jonah, three days and three nights in the whale's belly", or "the Son of man three days and three nights in the heart of the earth", and rising to life again? There is no such thing as explaining a miracle, whether in the Old Testament or in the New. We accept them as a matter of fact—that and only that. It is this faith on which the Church is built, which has kept it alive through the centuries and brought it hitherto. What will happen when this faith is lost? Does the least intelligent "Modernist" suppose that the Church could be built de novo on any other foundation, or that the present superstructure can possibly stand with the foundation of faith destroyed? "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. 3:11. Jesus Christ Himself the greatest miracle of all, a miracle in His birth, working miracles all through His earthly life, and finally ending that life that He might take it again in the miracle of the resurrection. St. Paul, with all the emphasis of which he is capable, declares there can be no Church to any real purpose without faith in this miracle. "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain." 1 Cor. 15:17. This is not only the foundation, it is also the motive power of the Church. To deny this and appeal to humanity to follow Christ because of the beauty of His life is futility itself. The history of the world from the beginning is ample proof of this. Notably, Socrates in Greece; Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius in Rome. No doubt, the Church can continue for a time with its faith gone and can maintain an outward conformity to certain ecclesiastical rules and regulations, but it cannot be for long. Like our regard for the family spoons, which have no intrinsic value, people may be willing to keep a venerable institution going because of past associations, but this will gradually lose its influence and finally perish.

If what we see everywhere concerning the Church are not indications of this, then men of the present day are unable to "discern the signs of the times". If we are going to surrender the substance of the faith to "profane and vain babblings and oppositions of science, falsely so called", 1 Tim. 6:20, we might as well surrender all that goes with it. For what possible good can come from "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof"? 2 Tim. 3:5. To stabilize the faith, then, is the one great need of the Church today. Not only by decrees and resolutions of conventions, nor by repeating certain formularies in public worship, but by every clergyman of the Church in public and private, stating whenever occasion arises the faith of the Holy Scriptures without any exception "as this Church has received the same", to be his faith, and stating it also in the plainest English, in the baldest and most unequivocal language.

It sounds wonderfully comprehensive to say that the Church is big enough to contain all schools of thought, when they are often absolutely contradictory. But over against this is the pronouncement of the Church's founder, "A house divided against itself cannot stand".

J. Y. Downman.

A MOTH IN MOTLEY

One of the most absurd and uninteresting ephemera of the moment is Mr. H. L. Mencken, publisher of a magazine, diligent self-advertiser, laborious jester and declared foe of religion. A prominent Methodist minister in a recent address from his pulpit asserted that Mr. Mencken was a Roman Catholic, and some newspaper took the trouble to contradict the assertion editorially.

Mr. Mencken really is of that rather pitiful type, a few specimens of which have developed in every generation, known by existing records—the cheap and common instinctive buffoon, striving always to evoke a laugh, continually hungry for notice and any kind of applause and, perhaps, for money. We find allusions to them, never very complimentary, in the old histories. They were kept about the persons of kings to enliven dull courts with antics, posturings, grimaces and quips. Each of them was known as "the king's fool", and wore a ridiculous mottled uniform, patterned after the feathering of the magpie, with gaudy cap in which little bells were fastened. The cap shaken and the bells jingled gave signal of supposed scintillation of brilliancy and for chorus of guffaws and cachinations.

With advance of taste and intelligence the hired fool disappeared from royal courts. It should be understood that he is a type apart from the clowns and comedians of circus and stage, many of whom have real wit and honest sense of humor. The modern instance of the traditional fool and jester lacks the enterprise, energy, talent and vigor needed for success in tanbark ring or theatre and, therefore, seeks his audience, applause and doucer, or largesse, through publications to which he can obtain access, one way or another.

Like his predecessor of the old times, the modern wearer of cap and bells and motley understands that indecency is the surest and quickest bid for attention, and irreverence and ridicule of sacred things the readiest appeal to the mirth and admiration of the same kinds of people who used to infest and degrade royal courts. Incidentally, it may be remarked that the craze for publicity is expressed in curiously differing ways by the sexes. The indecent woman challenges notice by lavish display of her physical charms, the indecent man by exhibition of his deformities, usually mental and mortal; but in the side show the dog-faced boy, prowling in his unnecessary cage, and the Circassian Beauty, perched on the platform, are equally pleased with themselves and their respective situations.

Doubtless, this Mr. Mencken is habitually delighted with himself, his accomplishments, achievements and activities and his allies, some of whom, under names of "Modernists", "Liberals" and the like, continue to claim allegiance to the Christian religion. Which makes a nice, satisfactory arrangement—one ally making a living by attacking Christianity openly, the other making a living from Christianity.

There is no need to be disturbed or concerned, however. The Christian religion, standing unshaken, unscattered, triumphant, dominant and glorious despite the blunders, errors and treasons of its followers and assaults of men of real force and gifts, like Voltaire and Ingersoll, will survive, serenely and happily generations of Menckens and Darrows, their industriously constructed gibes and impotent snarls and sneers.

Perhaps the simplest and clearest way to consider and judge persons like the Menckens is to compare them with some of those they most bitterly deride. Bishop Asbury, of the Methodist Church, and Bishop Meade, of the Episcopal Church, for instance. They live in their work, although their bodies have lain in graves these many years. They left enduring trails, hundreds of miles wide, of higher and cleaner lives, happier homes and families, uplifted hearts, death-beds gladdened by faith, youth and manhood and womanhood consecrated to service to God and man, the simple, sturdy virtues and standards of conduct which give the country its real strength and growth, courage and beauty. The Menckens leave faint trails of slightly offensive slime, which soon vanish. Let none be troubled because of them.

WHY THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES SHOULD BE RETAINED

By Prof. Earl Evelyn Sperry Ph. D.
Chairman of the History Department Syracuse University.

SHALL THE CHURCH ABOLISH ITS CONFESSION OF FAITH?

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States Faces a Crisis.

At the General Convention of our Church in October, 1925, at New Orleans, a resolution was moved under Anglo-Catholic leadership and passed providing that the Articles of Religion be omitted from the Prayer Book. This resolution will effect a change in the Constitution of the Church if approved by the General Convention next month.

What were the reasons for the action of the Convention? Every layman in the Church has the right and duty to know; inasmuch as the suppression of the Thirty-Nine Articles involves the faith and therefore the very life of the Church.

In order to understand the reasons for abolishing the Articles, let us take a quick retrospect of the English Reformation.

Origin and Source of the Articles.

The Articles of Religion were framed during the Reformation, or Protestant Revolt. England and other European countries then rebelled against the Papacy because of its many evils. The Articles define the doctrines of the English Church and condemn those of the Roman or Papal Church, which were known from centuries of experience to be sources of oppression, extortion and immoral conduct. They were adopted and set forth in their present form in 1801 by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States as its confession of faith and have always been printed in the Prayer Book.

The Articles are based on the Bible. They include only those doctrines which are found in the Scriptures and reject those which are not. The following extract from Article VI makes this fact clear:

"Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation." (Prayer Book, p. 558.)

Article VIII expresses the same idea concerning the basis of the Church's belief:

"The Nicene Creed and that which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed ought thoroughly to be received and believed: for they may be proved by most certain warrants of Holy Scripture." (Prayer Book, p. 559.)

On the other hand, doctrines and usages based only on approval of the General Councils, though representing the entire Catholic Church, were declared to "have neither strength nor authority". (Article XXI, omitted in our Book, as provided for in other Articles.) And Article XIX expressly repudiates, in the following declaration, all the ancient Churches as sources of sound doctrine and usage:

"As the Church of Jerusalem, Alexandria and Antioch have erred, so also the Church of Rome hath erred, not only in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of Faith." (Prayer Book, p. 561.)

These declarations lead us irresistibly to a momentous conclusion; the source of our faith is the Bible and the Bible alone. It is not the writings of medieval Churchmen; not the acts of the General Councils, not the ancient Catholic Church, as the Anglo-Catholics mistakenly contend. It is Holy Scripture solely and exclusively.

Value and Use of the Articles.

The use of the Articles of Religion is now evident. They are the official statement of the Church's belief. They are the Magna Charta of its faith, its doctrinal constitution. They defend the laity against those arbitrary priests who would foist on their congregations illicit or forbidden teachings. Ignore them, hide them or abolish them, and the Church is left without adequate rule or guide. There being no standard of faith on the points at issue between Rome and Protestantism, every minister may teach what he pleases. Such license causes strife and ultimate disintegration.

Purposes of the Anglo-Catholics.

In order to understand the motives which impel the Anglo-Catholics to suppress this statement of doctrine, we must first know what their purposes are. They aim to abolish the present faith and practice of the Protestant Episcopal Church and to substitute therefor certain beliefs of the Roman and Papal Church.

Their specific purposes are summarized in the following passage by the Rt. Rev. Robert L. Harris, D. D., Bishop of Marquette:

"Some would revive Mariolatry (worship of the Virgin), intercession to the Saints, auricular confession, penance, use of the rosary, unauthorized reservation, services of benediction and adoration of the sacrament, and all that goes with that type of mind." (From Diocesan Address of 1926.)

The Anglo-Catholics teach, as do the Roman Catholics, that there are seven sacraments; that in the Lord's Supper the priest changes the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, which is transubstantiation; and that the priest, when celebrating the Lord's Supper, sacrifices Christ anew, as he was sacrificed on the cross. (See the "Seven Sacraments", by Rev. S. C. Hughson, O. H. C., p. 8; "The Second Catholic Congress, Addresses and Papers", pp. 15, 91, 93.)

Real Reasons for Suppressing the Articles.

Turning now to the Articles themselves, we see at once the real reason for burying them in oblivion. They expressly renounce and condemn those very beliefs and practices which the Anglo-Catholics are trying to foist upon the Church.

Article XXII. "The Romish doctrine concerning Purgatory, Pardons, Worshipping and Adoration, as well of Images as of Relics, and also Invocation of Saints, is a fond thing, vainly invented, and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the Word of God."

Article XXV. ". . . There are two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel, that is to say, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord.

"Those five commonly called Sacraments, that is to say, Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony and Extreme Unction, are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel. . . .

"The Sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should duly use them. . . ." (Prayer Book, pp. 562-563.)

Article XXVIII. ". . . Transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of Bread and Wine) in the Supper of the Lord, cannot be proved by Holy Writ; but is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.

"The Body of Christ is given, taken and eaten in the Supper only after an heavenly and spiritual manner. And the mean whereby the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is Faith .

"The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped."

Article XXXI. "The Offering of Christ once made is that perfect redemption, propitiation and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin, but that alone. Wherefore the sacrifices of Masses, in the which it was commonly said, that the Priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits." (Prayer Book, p. 564.)

This examination of the Articles proves beyond question that the Anglo-Catholic party strives to suppress them, because they are a hindrance to Romanizing the Church. Bishop Gore, of England, a leader in the negotiations at Malines, Belgium, for uniting the English with the Roman Catholic Church, has stated that all his party needs is to secure Reservation and to be rid of the Articles.

Alleged Reasons for Suppressing the Articles.

The pretended reason for burying the Articles is that they are obsolete, that they have gone out of use.

We know, however, that the teachings of the Articles on the Sacraments, Transubstantiation and the Mass are not out of date. They are believed by the great mass of Protestant Christians everywhere.

The real reason why the Anglo-Catholics wish to suppress the Articles is exactly and precisely because they are not obsolete. They denounce and condemn the very doctrines which this party is trying to foist upon the Church. They stand solidly athwart the path of these aggressors, who for this very reason are striving to thrust them aside. They are no more obsolete than when they were framed nearly four centuries ago. The Anglo-Catholics have given them a new vitality, have made them a living need in the Church today. They are once more, as in the sixteenth century, a defense and bulwark of the Primitive and Protestant faith as against Romanism.

The Real Issue Stated.

In order to lull the suspicions of the laity, until it is too late to save the Protestant faith of the Church, some of the Anglo-Catholics assert that only unessential doctrines are involved in this controversy. If that is true, why do they labor so zealously to force these doctrines on the Church? Why do they cause strife and heartburning in many parishes, which formerly were at peace? Why do they imperil the unity of the Church? Why do they violate their ordination vows, in order to teach what they say is trivial and unimportant?

The truth is that the question at issue is no trivial controversy between hair-splitting theologians. The issue is as broad as the difference between despotism and liberty, between progress and reaction, between an advance to higher and nobler conceptions of religion and reversion to those which are primitive and barbarous. The true son of the Church aims to keep his Church loyal to the simple teachings of Christ. The Anglo-Catholic aims to drag it back to the crassly paganized Christianity of the Middle Ages, with its magic, fetichism, polytheism and idolatry. This difference in aim is much more than a hair-splitting controversy over meaningless questions of theology.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted By Rev. Frank Cox

WE have accomplished so much through science that some careless thinkers have made incautious and erroneous statements about the possibilities of science. The Labor Sunday message of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America fell into that ditch. It said, "There is every reason to believe that science can now adopt social ideas as specifications of a great task to be accomplished for humanity and to proceed by scientific method to assist in evolving a new industrial order, which shall be increasingly characterized by righteousness and peace". The name of Christ is not mentioned in the whole paper. Whatever the hazy sentence above quoted may mean, it seems as though the writer intended to thrust upon science the task of creating a new world. Some think that it shows great sympathy with science to mention the word with sufficient frequency during your discourse. Very much like the mob at Ephesus who howled for two hours, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians".

No doubt, Diana was great, in the field of art, let us say, but she was useless in religion. The mob did not realize this, and their din drowned the voice of wisdom. Science has done a mighty service for mankind, but the mob of pseudo-scientists are concealing wisdom. The writer made two serious blunders.

First, he blundered as to the work of science. He mentioned correctly the triumphs of the aeroplane and the radio, and from them deduces possible scientific triumphs in social welfare. What connection is there between an aeroplane and social ideals? Does the fact that a man can construct an aeroplane fit him to be a prophet?

The field of science is the material order. Its triumphs are in the mechanical field. It rigorously excludes any reference to life. That is no fault, but rather a fact that enables it to do its appointed work. In that field it does well, and when these well-meaning but ill-advised devotees urge it to step into the field of life, it must refuse, for it would be suicide for it to accept. Her true friends are those who are satisfied to keep her strictly to her appointed tasks.

Science, dealing with the material, is unmoral. The aeroplane that the writer mentions so blithely, can be used to foster trade, but it can be and has been used to make war even more like hell. So with all the inventions of science, she can forge machines but she cannot compel men to use them properly.

Next, he blundered as to the scientific method. He thinks that by the "scientific method" a new industrial order will arise, but what of that method? The field being the material, the method is mechanical. The test tube, the microscope or the telescope are the scientific instruments. Who is foolish enough to think that morality can be examined under a microscope, or determined by a test tube, except those foolish mortals who think that it dwells in the glands? Will any one hold that Isaiah would have seen any more deeply with a telescope? Would Christ have done greater things had He walked about Palestine with a miroscone in His hands? I do not mean to belittle those things in their places, but we must clear up hazy thinking.

No. No. Advance comes through other methods. The heart is the arbiter of ethics, and God alone can change the heart. The prophet and the saint are the true leaders of moral progress. Surrender to Christ and the preaching of the Gospel will do what vague and vain appeals to science, so-called, will never do in the moral and social realm.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Ps. 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. W. Strother Jones, of Red Bank:

". . . I will trust, and not be afraid . . ."—Isa. 12:2.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

---

I have grounded my preaching on the literal word—"He that pleases may follow; he that will not may stay. . . ."

No greater mischief can happen to a Christian people than to have God's Word taken from them or falsified, so that they no longer have it pure and clear. God grant we and our descendants be not witnesses to such a calamity. —Martin Luther.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by J. L. W.

Morning II.

O God, our Father Almighty, the Protector of all who trust in Thee, our light and our salvation, we humbly thank Thee for Thy loving-kindness during the past night; that Thou hast kept us from harm, refreshed us with sleep, and brought us to another morning in safety and health and comfort.

We pray that Thy continual pity may forever help and defend us. Remember not our offenses and sins, but make us to be conscious of our helplessness and ignorance, and of the dangers and temptations that surround us. Let Thy strength be made perfect in our weakness. Let Thy fatherly hand be always over us and Thy Holy Spirit always with us, and so lead us and guide us through this world that after a life of humble and faithful service we may be received to Thy kingdom in heaven.

Prepare us now, we beseech Thee, for all the duties and trials that are before us this day. Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable to Thee. Let us at all times feel Thy fear and lean upon Thy strength. Save us from false principles and self-deceit. Cleanse our hearts from pride and selfishness, from resentment and ill will, and from covetousness and worldliness, and from all respect of persons and self-seeking. Keep us from carelessness and self-indulgence, and from indifference and sloth, from idleness and vanity. Let Thy wisdom rule in our souls, and keep us from restlessness, impatience and haste.

Gird up the loins of our minds, enlighten our eyes and give us a right judgment in all things. Make us wise and prudent and just in our councils, diligent, earnest and faithful in our work, gentle and kind and considerate and sincere in our walk and conversation.

We commit to Thee all our hopes and desires, our enterprises and plans, our purposes and designs. And we would lay before Thee all our cares and fears, our burdens and troubles, our trusts and responsibilities. Let Thy fatherly wisdom determine all that concerns us, and let us, with loving confidence, accept all Thy dispensations. Sustain us under Thy discipline. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants, and Thy glory unto their children. Take care of the interests of all who rely on us. Let our whole lives bear witness to Thy goodness and righteousness and truth. Make our children dutiful and teachable, modest and well-behaved, to keep Thy way and do justice and judgment.

Protect and bless all our dear relatives and friends, and gather them and keep them in Thy fold.

Incline the hearts of Thy servants to keep Thy laws and love Thy promises.

Order the affairs of our country for the good of Thy Church, the safety, honor and welfare of Thy people.

Pity the poor, the sick and the afflicted, and give them comfort and relief.

Have mercy on all mankind, and hasten the coming of Thy kingdom.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

II.

In approaching the discussion of our Lord's predicted return to the earth, several avenues are opened to us. Problems of the world's unrest, governmental complexities, the wave of crime, the decline of Christian faith, the emphasis of the Word of God upon this truth. We may select the last as most fitting, awaiting further space for the others, which are by no means negligible. As a matter of calculation, one verse in twenty-two and a half of the New Testament deals with this "blessed hope". By way of introduction we stand before the pronouncement (Rev. 19:10).

The Testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of Prophecy, with a reverent acknowledgment of its superlative challenge to our thought and dedication.

All through His life He appealed to the Scriptures of the Old Testament concerning Himself, His mission and destiny. And we must contend that His biographers could not have devised this adaptation by any self-imposed initiative. For it was not in them to so neatly fit these prefigurations into a life they confessedly did not understand. Certainly there was quite enough in His full and wonderful career to engage their zeal in setting forth His ministry and teachings without encumbering the record with so minute details of vaticination as we find in the Gospels. And the writings of the great apostle are intinctured with this conviction of fulfilled prophecy. Indeed, as we come to know our Lord (John 17:3) through a devout contemplation of His Word, we bow in humble teachableness for a further understanding of this alluring mystery. As he could confound His adversaries with the ultimatum,

"Before Abraham Was I Am",

we stand with Him in the full assurance that the Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Redeemer of the New. Our hearts are pained when we hear that Sovereign Being derided as "a bloody tribal god". It was He who stood by Abraham in that memorable incident preceding the destruction of Sodom (Gen. 18:17-33), who met and blessed Jacob (Gen. 32:24-32), who appeared to Moses as the I Am of the Ages (Ex. 3:14), who was to the Israelites both meat and drink (Deut. 8:3; 1 Cor. 10:3, 4), who commissioned Joshua (Josh. 1:1-9), who bestowed upon Gideon the benediction of peace (Judges 6:23), who accepted the offering of Manoah and his wife (Judges 12:23), who was the source and center of the mesasges of all the prophets (Luke 24:27, 44-48).

And this attitude of embodiment of all that the prophets had spoken (Luke 1:70), was not assumed by Him in any pretentious show. He acted as though it were the most natural sequence of His being, and His disciples so understood it. Meretricious accessories were utterly absent from any mention of His eternal past. Now, if we are prepared to accept His at-homedness in the sphere of prophecy, we must allow that His cogent predictions regarding the truth He came to declare, the overmastering fruitage of His rejection, His future conquests and the benign reign upon the earth of which He should be the cynosure, are all worthy of acceptance on their face value. Else, a stubborn denial or an indifferent state of mind must possess the individual who faces this problem. If He warmly endorsed the Old Testament which so uniquely dove-tailed with the events of His matchless life (John 5:39), why not accord to Him the authority to pierce the long-drawn perspective of the coming ages and signify the plan of God for the earth? Is not simple faith in these unfoldings of the divine purpose more consistent, more to be commended than a refined skepticism which relegates the entire prophetical order of the Scriptures to the scrap-heap of intolerant unbelief? If there are over seventy passages which touch upon His earth-life, voiced centuries ere He came; if He Himself calmly predicted both the destruction of Jerusalem and with it the preservation of the Jewish race, both of which are established by history, who shall presume to define the limits beyond which exultant faith may not pass?

The Mind of God in Prophecy is essentially united to our study. We are not required to invent any system. Artless and sincere are the writers who unfold to us the range of intention resident in the thought of Deity for the fulfilment of a design both accurate and beneficent. St. Peter, in describing the Transfiguration, urges that the "more sure word of prophecy" will confirm the hope of the coming glory of the King, whose majesty he had beheld in the Holy Mount (2 Pet. 1:16-21). We have the alluring promise of Ps. 25:14, "The secret of the Lord is with those who revere Him; and He will show them His covenant". A secret is mostly involved in what is going to happen. Further, it is not for all; else, it would cease to be a secret; nor yet is it to be utterly hidden. To a few, chosen and dependent, the secret is to be revealed. We must be warned that pride of intellect, the scorn of scholarship, the sneer of unbelief may not stand within the sacred precincts of this holy revealing. It is to babes that our Lord anticipated this high calling (Matt. 11:25-27). Upon those who are surrendered to the Holy Spirit for enlightenment, this unmerited distinction is conferred; for His office is to search all things, yea, the deep things of God (1 Cor. 2:9, 10).

If we are fools in thus appropriating our Father's provision for us, so be it. We are in good company (2 Cor.

11:16; 12:11). If the "foolishness of preaching" is to be the salvation of the world (and there is but one message that can possibly embrace this preaching), then by the grace of the Lord we shall believe all that the prophets have spoken and enter with Him the holy realm of comprehension of the infinite mystery of our Father's plan for the ages (1 Cor. 1:21; Eph. 3:2-12). A benediction is pronounced upon all who seek to apply prophecy to spiritual aims and culture:

"Blessed Is He That Readeth and They That Hear the words of this prophecy and keep those things that are written therein" (Rev. 1:3).

There are three classes of believers: First, those who stand upon the settled facts of redemption, the incarnation, the cross, the resurrection, the ascension. They are secure in their confidence of His accomplished work in their behalf. Like the children of Israel in the land of Egypt, abiding in their habitations, knowing that compliance with the divine command will insure them immunity from the predicted plague. But they so remain. They have no disposition to seek deeper things. They represent the great mass of Christians. Then, another and more advanced class long to find God in their daily life. They no longer say prayers; but really talk with God in a heart-hunger to experience His manifestations of love and care in their perplexities and burdens, their sorrows and their joys. But if they have gone thus far in their walk with Him, they will not rest content with what He may do for them. If they have gotten out of the Egypt estate and into the desert life with its vicissitudes and constant needs, they will courageously go all the way across the Jordan into the land of conquest and full enlightenment. They graduate from the seeking of things; they yearn for Himself (Ps. 63:1-3; Phil. 1:21). Then, with this growing knowledge of Himself, comes the deeper cherishing to learn all He would teach us of His thought for the fulfilment of His cherished purposes for a world that needs and calls, all unconsciously, for Him.

So may conclude this study with David's heart-cry, "Show me Thy ways, O Lord; teach me Thy paths; lead me in Thy truth; for Thou art the God of my salvation; on Thee do I wait all the day long" (Ps. 25:4, 5).

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

W. F. Bumsted

The Holy Communion—Or the Lord's Supper.

In this article it is proposed to show the development of the Lord's Supper from the Institution to the last material or Liturgy—that the reformers had to work with—in compiling our own service.

We must therefore begin with the Institution as it is recorded in St. Matthew 26:26-28, St. Mark 14:22-24, St. Luke 22:19-20, St. Paul, 1 Cor. 11:23-26.

St. Matthew says: "Jesus took bread and blessed and brake it: and He gave to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is My body. And He took the cup, and gave thanks and gave to them, saying, Drink ye all of it, for this is My blood of the covenant, which is shed for many unto remission of sins."

It was from these words that the apostles took their command to break bread as a solemn service in fellowship and in the breaking of bread and prayers.

From St. Paul we gather the thought that it was to show our Lord's death till He come again.

This was a representation of the sacrifice of our Lord, and is thus called by Justin Martyr in 150.

We find thus in reading, that the service was a common one at least weekly. We find also that it was a social meal or love feast—although this latter aspect of it is not mentioned after 200 A. D.

The first reference we have actually to the Liturgy is given by Pliny, who, writing as a pagan governor, sent from his province of Bithynia the following account to the Emperor Trajan about the year 112 A. D.:

"They maintained that all their fault or error was this: That they had been accustomed on a fixed day to meet before dawn and sing antiphonally a hymn to Christ as to a god; and they bound themselves by a solemn pledge, not for any crime, but to abstain from theft, brigandage and adultery, to keep their word, and not to refuse to restore a deposit when demanded. After this was done they dispersed and assembled again to share a common meal of innocent food; and even this, they said, they had given up after I had issued the edict by which, in accordance with your instructions, I prohibited the existence of clubs."

The next mention of a Liturgy is taken from the "Didache", or Teachings of the Twelve Apostles, and dates about the year 100, although some place it much later. Its wording is as follows:

"But concerning the thanksgiving (eucharistias) thus thank; first concerning the cup: We thank Thee, O our Father, for the holy vine of David Thy servant, which Thou hast made known to us by Jesus Thy servant; to Thee be the glory for ever. And concerning the fragment: We thank Thee, O our Father, for the life and the knowledge which Thou hast made known to us by Jesus Thy servant; to Thee be the glory for ever. As was this fragment once scattered over the mountains and became gathered into one, so may Thy Church be gathered from the ends of the earth into Thy kingdom; for Thine is the glory and power by Jesus Christ forever. And let no one eat or drink from your Eucharist, but those who have been baptized into the name of the Lord; for concerning this the Lord has said: Give not that which is holy to the dogs.

And after being filled thus give thanks: We thank Thee, O Holy Father, for Thy holy name. Thou hast given both food and drink to men for enjoyment that they may thank Thee, but to us Thou hast given spiritual food and drink and life eternal through Thy Son for all good things we thank Thee. If any one is holy, let him come; if any one is not, let him repent; Maranatha. Amen.

And on each Lord's day, when assembled together, break bread and give thanks, after you have confessed your transgressions in order that your sacrifice may be pure, but let none that hath strife with his comrade come together with you until they be reconciled, that your sacrifice be not defiled."

Thus we have mention of an early communion service, providing both bread and wine; and in connection with the above accounts there has lately come to light a picture from the catacombs in Rome dated between 100 and 150 A. D. It is in the catacomb of St. Priscilla. It is entitled the "Breaking of Bread". A Bishop or President (clad in the Pallium of rank as well as the tunic) sits, in the act of breaking bread, at one end of the table. Around him are grouped five men wearing tunics only, and one woman. The table is covered with a linen cloth and on it is a two-handled chalice, a plate with five loaves, and a plate with two fishes, the usual symbol of the age for Christ. This picture shows us definitely the method of actually celebrating the Eucharist.

The next mention is that of Justin Mally, and, as in the previous article on Morning and Evening Prayer, here given as an example of a Liturgy.

All of the Liturgies were probably never put in writing, each Bishop using the Liturgy as he had had it passed to him.

In connection with the date of the first written Liturgy, there has been translated by the late Bishop of Salisbury, Dr. Wadsworth, a Collection of Prayers of Serapion, an Egyptian Bishop, who was a friend of Athanasius, and this is dated 350 A. D. In Dr. Wadsworth's book he gives us The Anaphora of Serapion, with The Preface, The Sanctus, The Eucharistical Prayer, which has The Oblation, Narrative of Institution, The Consecration, The Intercession.

These all show a remarkable likeness to their respective portions in our own service today.

By the sixth century there had grown up a fixed service with imposing ritual in various parts of the Church.

Two of them, the Roman and the Gallican, are in particular of interest to us, for it was the Gallican that St. Augustine found in England in 596. It was the Gallican services that Columba and the Irish missionaries introduced into Scotland and England.

This rite has survived only in the Milanese rite of North Italy and in the Mozarabic rite in Spain. There are no complete copies of the Gallican Liturgy extant, but by piecing together the fragments obtainable a very fair knowledge of it can be obtained.

But it had considerable influence in the middle ages, and the Roman rite itself borrowed some of its form and ceremony from it.

When the countries of England, Scotland, Ireland, France and Spain gave up their Gallican rite for the Roman Liturgy, they retained a certain portion of it, and so thus down to the Reformation some of its usages were found in the ceremonial. Out of this combination then of the old Gallican and the Roman rite of Augustine arose several local varieties or uses, the best known being that of Salisbury or Sarum.

This Sarum use had, as did all the other ancient Liturgies, two main divisions:

(i) The ordinary—or variable portion.

(ii) The Canon of the Mass—or fixed portion.

Thus (ordinary or variable part):

1. An invocation of the Holy Ghost.
2. Collect for Purity.
3. Psalm 53.
4. Lord have mercy, Christ have mercy, etc.
5. Introit, hymn sung going from vestry to choir.
6. Confession, absolution, kiss of peace and offering of incense.
7. Gloria in Excelsis.
8. Collect, Epistle and Gospel.
9. Nicene Creed, with hymns called Graduals and Sequences.
10. Offertory, followed by Oblation of Holy Elements.
11. Invitation, Lift up your hearts.
12. Thanksgiving, It is very meet, etc., with proper preface.

Canon Proper—Fixed Part.

1. A long prayer, combining the Prayer for Church Militant, Consecration Prayer, First Thanksgiving.
2. Lord's Prayer and Angus Dei.
3. Insertion of portion of bread in chalice.
4. Prayers preparatory to reception.
5. The communion, preceded by exhortation.
6. A concluding Thanksgiving Collect and Blessing.

This, then, was the final "use" that the Reformers had to remodel and reconstruct. To build a service in English for the people and the priest, to remove the corrupt ceremonial that had crept in and yet to retain its structure, how well they did their work can be seen when we examine the Liturgy of 1549, Roman in Thought to a certain extent, but still the first effort at an Anglican composition, and compare this book to that of 1552, Protestant in Thought and Word, and practically the same as the book in use in England today.

Book Reviews

STUDIES IN NEW TESTAMENT CHRISTIANITY. By George A. Barton, Ph. D., D. D., LL. D. University of Pennsylvania Press, Philadelphia. Price $2.00.

This is a thorough study of first century Christianity. It will repay a careful reading. In the first chapter the author overturns many accepted ideas concerning the fulfilment of prophecy. But one will have to forgive that in exchange for a better understanding of the Old Testament.

One could hardly do justice to the other six chapters in a short review—The Person of Christ; God; Sin; The Death of Christ; The Eucharist; The Christian Life. They are much too compact for that and deserve a careful examination by those who are willing to benefit from the painstaking study of an earnest scholar.

A few sentences: "To have the 'mind of Christ' we must study his own words long and lovingly." The name Lord was sacred because it was believed to sum up in itself the attributes of God. "In using it, St. Paul was saying as emphatically as a Jew could that God had given Christ that which he had denied to Adam, equality with Himself."

Jesus speaks of God as the Father of mankind. "The Father whom Jesus knew so intimately and of whose presence He was so conscious was a loving Father."

By many utterances "our Lord makes two things very clear—he regards sin as committed in the heart; it is in good degree a matter of the inward life".

"God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but might have everlasting life." "The fact is the heart of the new covenant, and that covenant is attested by our Lord's life's blood." "The real gospel of St. Paul . . . was his doctrine of the mystic union of Christ and the believer. . . . More than a doctrine, it was a living experience."

When Jesus directed His disciples to "do this in remembrance of me", "there is no hint that the repetition was a repetition of the sacrifice; it was only a memorial that a sacrifice had once been offered. To interpret our Lord's words to mean more than this is to read into them that which is not there."

The climax is in the last chapter—The Christian Life. To St. Paul faith was the response of the soul to the love of God magnified in Christ; it was instinctive and unpremeditated. It was a sort of glorified love. It resulted in such union with Christ that the believer became identified with his Master.

INSPIRATION, HISTORY, THEORIES AND FACTS. William Albert Ericson. American Tract Society, New York. Price, $1.50.

The writer has given a very clear and useful book on the doctrine of the inspiration of the Bible. It is written in a style that will render it useful to the average student of the Scriptures. It is fitted for today, when the average reader of the Bible is apt to be confused by the various theories of inspiration, too many of them lowering the Bible teaching on the subject.

In the chapter on the history of the doctrine he gives the teaching of many of the fathers and some of the later authorities on the subject. He quotes selected passages from these writers so that the reader may have their words before him for reference.

He wisely avoids human theories on the subject of inspiration, but after describing several theories that have been suggested, he gives briefly their strong or weak points and then goes to the Bible itself for a word that will describe the unique nature of the Book. From 2 Timothy 3:16 he takes the word "Theopneustos"—God—breathed, this word he believes sums up all the true theories of inspiration.

A final chapter examines some of the alleged discrepancies that unbelievers urge against the Bible, and provides excellent answers for the use of the worker. The book will serve well its purpose, namely, to strengthen the faith of its readers, and to cause them to believe more implicitly in the inspired Word of God.

GENESIS (Continued).

Individual Application of the Seven Men.

Adam, as the head of the race, is a type of Christ, the Head of the new race of believers (Rom. 5:14; 2 Cor. 5:17).

The first Adam followed his own natural desires and was defeated. The second Adam trusted and obeyed the Word of God and overcame the enemy (Ps. 8:2; 1 John 5:4).

Every one of Adam's race is tempted like the first man and like the second Man in all three points—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life (Gen. 3:6; Luke 4:1-12; 1 John 2:16; Heb. 4:15).

Every one who will believe and obey God's Word, like Christ, when tempted, will overcome through Him (Rom. 8:37).

All who believe the Word of God concerning the person and work of the Redeemer will, like Adam, wear the garments of salvation (Heb. 4:13; Isa. 1:18; 61:10).

Abel is a type of the One whose "blood speaketh better things" (Heb. 12:24; 11:4).

In Abel we have a picture of the spiritual man, who learns the meaning of the cross in his separation from sin and the world, and who in Seth, as "the seed in his stead", was made fruitful in the power of the resurrection life (Rom. 6:11; 7:4; 8:13; Phil. 3:10).

Noah, as one who was expected to remove the curse, is a figure of Christ, who was made a curse for us (Gal. 3:13; 2 Cor. 5:21).

Like Noah in the ark, believers in Christ have been brought safely through the waters of judgment into the enjoyment of newness of life (John 5:24; Rom. 6:4; Ps. 42:7; Eph. 1:3; Col. 3:1-3).

Abraham, through faith and obedience enjoying friendship with God, points to Christ who, by faith, left His place in glory and lived and died for us on earth, in order that promised blessing might be ours (Heb. 11:8-19; 12:2; Phil. 2:5-8; 2 Cor. 1:20; 8-9; Gal. 3:14-16).

If we, like Abraham, walk by faith and not by sight, we will enjoy the friendship of God, and our lives will be made fruitful in blessing to others (2 Cor. 5:7; John 7:37-39; 15:1-16).

Isaac, the son of promise, is a type of Christ, the promised Seed and Heir of all, offered as a sacrifice, who will receive His Bride and enjoy His blessings in the heavenlies (Gal. 3:16; John 16:15; Heb. 1:2; 1 Thess. 4:13-18).

Children of promise, as Isaac was, it is our privilege to enjoy now by faith God's blessings in Christ in the heavenlies, and when we are caught up to be with Christ we will enjoy them by sight (Eph. 1:3-14; 1 Pet. 1:4; 1 Cor. 13:12; Gal. 4:28).

Jacob is a type of Christ, who learned obedience by the things He suffered (Heb. 5:7, 8; 2:10).

Not until the self-will is crucified in us, as in Jacob, will we receive by faith the blessing of God and be made a blessing (Rom. 7:18-25; 8:1-4; Gal. 2:20).

Joseph prefigures Christ, God's well beloved Son, hated by His brethren, suffered in service for others, but is now exalted next to the One on the throne, and is the Saviour of all who will believe, and will yet succor His brethren (Matt. 3:17; 27:18; 1 Pet. 3:18; Phil. 2:9-11; Eph. 2:6, 8, 9; Jer. 30:7).

Dispensational Application of the Seven Men.

Adam. Like him, all who believed with promise of Gen. 3:15, from Adam to Noah, became children of light, while all the unbelieving ones were children of darkness (Gen. 4:16-24; 4:25 to 5:22; 1 Thess. 5:5).

Abel, hated and killed by Cain, a city builder, pictures the believing souls hunted by the mighty Nimrod, the builder of a city and tower, in the age from Noah to Abraham (Gen. 10:8-10; 11:1-9).

Abel also foreshadows the remnant of Israel, hated and persecuted by the Anti-Christ during the great Tribulation (Rev. 7:1-8; 12:14-17).

Noah, passing through judgment into a renewed earth, points to Israel passing through the judgment into Canaan, the place of blessing, and to the remnant of Israel brought through the judgments of the Tribulation into the Millennial earth (Ex. 7:14; Josh. 1-3; Isa. 26:20, 21; 61:2, 3; Rev. 14:1-5; Jer. 30:7).

Abraham, blessed and made a blessing, typifies Israel in Canaan, from Moses to Christ, and also in the "age to come" when, in the land, enjoying the fulness of God's blessing, they will be made a world-wide blessing (Gen. 12:1-3; 22:17, 18; Isa. 27:6; 61:4-11).

Isaac, promised son and heir enjoying his possessions, figures God's Son and sons from Pentecost to the rapture, called to enjoy God's blessings in the heavenlies (Eph. 1:3-23; 2:5, 6; Heb. 4:9, 10; 10:12, 13).

Jacob, brought through discipline, trial and suffering to the place of dependence upon God, is a type of his sons, the Jewish remnant, sorely tried in the great Tribulation, and brought to the place of dependence upon God, blessed and made a blessing (Jer. 30:7; 31:31-34; Ps. 85:7-13).

Joseph, through humiliation and exaltation, made a ruler and a saviour of his brethren, represents the Humbled One exalted and ruling as the Saviour of all the believing ones of Israel and the nations during the Millennium (Phil. 2:8-11; Rom. 11:26; 9:8).

RESIGNED TO A RESIGNATION.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend", and as melody are the moans of an adversary. The following letter is one of the most gratifying received at this office in a long while:

Church of the Messiah,

Harford Road and White Avenue,

Baltimore, Maryland.

September 18, 1928.

Mr. Langbourne Meade Williams,
Owner, "Southern Churchman",
Richmond, Virginia.

My Dear Mr. Williams:

I have been questioning for some time the ethics of the situation in which, unwittingly, I find myself. Is it right for a man to be the Diocesan correspondent for a Church paper when he so heartily disagrees with the editorial policy of said paper that he thinks the Episcopal Church would be healthier and more Christian if the paper, under the present management, were eradicated from every home? I have known the "Southern Churchman" from my youth up; it was one of the influences in my Christian education. Perhaps that is why I feel it so bitterly, now that its present position disgraces its noble traditions.

Please understand me. I believe absolutely in free speech and a free press. You have a perfect right to be the most bigoted fundamentalist and to spread your propaganda by whatever honorable means your personal financial condition warrants, though I think it is very bad in principle that any one man should have absolute control of a paper which supposedly represents the viewpoint of the Episcopal Church. What I object to most strenuously is the method by which you are spreading this progaganda. I consider many of your editorials and articles ungentlemanly and un-Christian. Your last editorial under date of September 15th, entitled, "A Preach Who Puzzles", being a personal attack on an honored clergyman of this Church, has reached the depths of blatant discourtesy and unbrotherliness, unworthy of any Christian Southern gentlemen, and has finally decided the point of ethics which I mention.

Kindly take notice that henceforth you will receive no correspondence from the Diocese of Maryland from my pen. I should appreciate having this resignation from several years of service as your correspondent published in your letter column in order that it may be perfectly clear to your constituency why one of your correspondents is withdrawing.

Very truly yours,

(Sgd.) JAMES A. MITCHELL, Rector.

P. S. I am sending a carbon of this letter of resignation to the Bishop of Maryland.

Letters received by the Southern Churchman almost daily from real scholars and sincere believers in the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Common Prayer, warmly commending its policies and utterances are very encouraging and always comforting and welcome. Obvious loss of temper by an obvious opponent is a priceless compliment. It is surrender all the more complete because ungraceful and ungracious. The hurling of harmless insult at victors is the traditional vengeance of the hopelessly and helplessly vanquished fleeing the field.

It is a plainly fair inference that Mr. Mitchell, writer of the above letter, could find no facts and devise no argument for defence of his friends and allies of the Baptist and quasi Protestant Episcopal churches who were rebuked by the Southern Churchman for public sneering at the Holy Scriptures and the laws of our Church requiring them to be read at every service. Consequently, he separates from us, shouting a little shower of accusation, epithet and ugly conduct and wishes for the eradication of the Southern Churchman from every home. In this wish we hope and believe every unbeliever, half believer, three-fourths believer, Modernist and Unitarian and pseudo Romanist and spreader of confusion will unite.

Mr. Mitchell's resignation as correspondent of the Southern Churchman for the Diocese of Maryland is accepted gratefully. He goes on his way accompanied by our cordial hope that the clear light of the early Christian education he acquired from the Southern Churchman may break presently through the fogs now apparently enveloping his understanding. Heresies and treasons are not new in the history of the Church. They have developed from time to time from diligent vociferations of vain and shallow men, sometimes misleading really valuable men; but always they have vanished and our Church has stood serene and secure on her old foundations. So, by the mercy and guidance of God, it will be, and the gates of Hell cannot prevail against it.

The Southern Churchman will continue to appear regularly every week, as hitherto, notwithstanding the disappearance and defection of Mr. Mitchell. It is reassuring to know that in the Diocese of Maryland there remain some most excellent, even if bigoted, churchmen and churchwomen properly classed as Fundamentalists. The Southern Churchman, undismayed, will continue to uphold the timehonored, time tried, doctrines and teachings of the Protestant Episcopal Church, on which the Church was built, with which it has done its glorious, beautiful and holy work, with which it will continue to live and grow and do. Demands that persons who at heart are Unitarians or Roman Catholics shall cease from pretending to be members of ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church will be repeated frequently by us.

Despite the clamors of the vulgar and the vain, the babblings of the foolish and occasional wanderings of the well meaning among us, the great body of our membership is now, as always it has been, loyal to the old, simple, plain, clear faith. Forf these and to these the Southern Churchman will continue to speak even after extermination, excommunication and eradication from the home and system of the Rev. James A. Mitchell, and the perambulating meandering peregrinations of the mental gymnasts will not divert us from the main line of simple faith in the Christian's plan of eternal salvation as set forth in our infallible Bible, which is the sacred inspired word of God.

L. M. Williams.

PENNSYLVANIA CLERGYMEN.

Mr. Editor:

The colleges and universities are about to open, and many young men and women who have grown up in the Church will be leaving home to attend them. These young people will come under new, and sometimes non-Christian influences, which will greatly affect their whole lives. It is of the greatest importance, both for them and for the Church, that they should not drift away from the practice of religion.

The clergy of Parishes from which students are leaving for college within the Diocese of Pennsylvania can be of great assistance if they will send notice of the names and addresses, and, if possible, of the department of the colleges in which the student will be enrolled, to the Rev. J. K. Shryock, Chairman on Student Work, the Church House, 202 S. 19th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FARMERS!

September 14, 1928.

Mr. Editor:

I was in the country a few days ago and some of the farmers were telling me that there was very little sale, if any, for their apples, potatoes, etc. Yet, they are asking us here in Richmond four dollars a barrel for apples and two dollars a bushel for potatoes.

We have over one hundred children to feed three times a day, and we are greatly in need of anything that grows on a farm, such as cabbage, potatoes, apples and all other vegetables and fruits. Since I was told that these things were rotting in the field, I am writing to ask if you will not do us the very great kindness to say that we are terribly pressed for funds, and with such prices as quoted above, I feel that we have friends, who, reading your valued paper, will be glad to send us something if they knew we would pay the freight on same, which we shall gladly do. Will you also ask them to send us a post card at the same time so that we may be on the look-out for this greatly needed food?

With over one hundred children and winter coming on, we need everything to help us take care of them. Also, there are hundreds of others needing to come in us at this time. We also need good homes for these children where they may be received and become a part of the home and a joy to the hearts of the people. There is no greater service in the world than this of taking care of our own Virginia white children.

LIGHT CLOTHING NEEDED.

Mr. Editor:

In answer to our inquiry to Bishop Colmore as to what he most needed immediately to meet the emergency in Porto Rico, a cable was recieved today saying there is great need for light clothing and cotton blankets to supply families of our Porto Rican congregations.

The American Red Cross will, of course, care for the great bulk of the Porto Rican population. The Bishop desires to give immediate relief to some of our own Church people.

On September 22nd we shipped one thousand cotton blankets to San Juan.

If there are any friends of Porto Rico who want to send a new cotton blanket or a used blanket in good condition, such packages may be mailed directly to the Rt. Rev. C. B. Colmore, D. D., Box 1115, San Juan, Porto Rico. Packages of light clothing for men, women and children of all ages, may be mailed to the same address.

Careful attention should be given to the Bishop's request for light clothing. No woolens of any kind are needed.

The Department of Missions will gratefully appreciate co-operation in providing what is needed, whether by gifts of clothing or blankets. or gifts of money.

Sincerely yours,

John W. Wood.

Porto Rico Bulletins Nos. 3, 4 and 5.

September 18, 1928.

Bishop Ferrando cables today as follows:

"Unable communicate with Bishop Colmore in St. Croix. All communications entirely cut off with Porto Rico. Roads in neighborhood of Suebrada Limon are now impassable, owing to rains. Fallen trees should be removed in order to save coffee crop. Chapel and residence at Penueles totally destroyed."

Bishop Ferrando expects to sail for the United States this week.

Miss Ellen T. Hicks cables:

"Board of Directors of St. Luke's Hospital advise my sailing this week."

It is not certain, however, that Miss Hicks will carry out this plan, although she hopes to be at the General Convention.

Rev. K. O. Miller and family arrived in New York on September 17, having left San Juan just before the hurricane struck the island.

September 19, 1928.

Bishop Colmore cables September 19 as follows:

"Returned to San Juan September 18. All our missionaries are safe. Church property in St. Croix damaged to estimated extent of $3,000. No damage in St. Thomas.

"In San Juan, St. Luke's Church, the Bishop's house badly damaged, and residence and personal effects Rev. Esteban Reus Garcia total loss."

At the Bishop's request, money has been cabled to Bishop Ferrando and Rev. P. D. Locke at Ponce, Rev. F. A. Saylor at Mayaguez and Rev. Hubert Pigott and Rev. E. A. Anson, of St. Croix, for emergency relief.

Rev. F. A. Saylor cables from Mayaguez, September 19:

"Storm did much damage. Repairs on property in progress, but not completed. Please accept our thanks for authorization to make repairs to the extent of $350 in accordance with our first cable."

September 22, 1928.

Bishop Colmore cables in answer to our inquiry as to what he most needs at present, as follows:

"In great need of light clothing and cotton blankets for members of our native congregations. Money also needed to rebuild native houses."

One thousand cotton blankets have been purchased and shipped on the steamer leaving New York September 22. Friends desiring to add to the number might send single cotton blankets by mail to the Rt. Rev. C. B. Colmore, Box 1115, San Juan, Porto Rico. Those who desire to help pay for blankets already forwarded may do so at the rate of one dollar apiece, which will include cost and shipping charges.

Packages of light clothing for men, women and children can be mailed to Bishop Colmore at the above address. No woolen clothes are needed.

The American Red Cross will presumably provide funds to assist the Porto Rican people in rebuilding their homes.

In a second cable Bishop Colmore says:

"Damage at Ponce approximately $2,000. in addition to the total loss of St. Luke's Hospital. Miss Hicks sailed for New York September 21.

Mr. Valentine, at Quebrada Limon, cables as follows:

"Two hundred dollars needed to clear the coffee fields from hurricane debris and save coffee crop. Cost of rebuilding chapel and residence at Penueles, $1,500. Bishop Ferrando now on his way to New York."

Mr. Valentine has been authorized to expend $200 in saving the coffee crop.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew Convention, which precedes the General Convention, will have among its many splendid activities two outstanding services. On Sunday morning, October 7, at 7:30, in St. Thomas' Church, there will be the Corporate Communion of the men and boys here for the Convention. This is always an inspiring service, attended usually by many hundreds of men and boys. In the afternoon of the same day there will be a mass meeting in the amphitheater, Mt. St. Alban, where thousands may be seated out of doors. The singing, led by the Cathedral choir and accompanied by brass instruments, will consist of old and familiar hymns, in which all may join. The speakers of this service will be Hon. George Wharton Pepper, of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, and Dr. Rodolf Teusler, of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan. Bishop Freeman will preside at this service.

M. M. W.

"Missionary House."

"Missionary House" is the name which has been given to Woman's Auxiliary headquarters during the Convention. The house is located at 1719 Eye Street, and is the loan of Mr. Boss, a real estate operator in Washington and a member of St. Margaret's Church. A member of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary will be in residence there all the time and serve as hostess. Open house will be kept and tea will be served every afternoon. Lodgings, also, will be provided there for missionaries, four of whom will be nurses from St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo. The second floor of the building will be called the "B Branch Floor", where "B Branch" girls may find accommodations when necessary. Missionary House will probably be the scene of some interesting happenings, bringing together, as it will, workers from the "four winds" and of many different kinds of endeavor.

University of the South Shows Good Enrollment.

The sixty-first academic year of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., opened on September 20 with capacity enrollment.

At the opening service in All Saints' Chapel the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Finney, announced a registration to date of over 300 men, with more to come—a number which taxes the University's housing capacity to the utmost. As is well known, Sewanee does not seek to develop a large college student body, but strives rather for the Oxford ideal of small colleges centered around the University, thus making for the intimate individual cultivation and development of each student. Rather than permit the present College of Arts and Sciences to grow much larger, the next step in the University's plan is to build another college.

While the University reports a banner freshman class, the more gratifying fact is the high percentage of upper classmen who have returned. The Theological School, so Dean Wells announces, has thirty-two students enrolled or in prospect—the largest enrollment in the history of the Seminary.

The University authorities also report progress in the effort to increase the endowment. "All in all," says Dr. Finney, "the University confidently looks forward to its best year of service to the Church and the nation through the medium of Christian education."

The Annual Migration of Communicants.

The time of the year has come when boys and girls and men and women from nearly every parish in the Church are going off to school and college. The home church has no way of keeping in touch with them, except by an occasional letter or visit of the home rector to the college. These last are all too rare.

The most effective, immediate thing that can be done is for the home rector, parents or friends to write to the rector of the church nearest the college and tell him about the student coming to college. The list of clergy nearest our colleges is found in the "Living Church Annual", page 179. Where no name appears, write to the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Some of the clergy near colleges call on all the Episcopal students. Many have no time for this, but all of them make it a rule to look up any student about whom some one has written them. So if you have some one going off to college, write to the nearest church at once. Do your part to keep our Church students in touch with their Church.

South Carolina's Bishop-Elect.

The Diocese of South Carolina is highly fortunate in the wise selection of a man so eminently fitted as is the Rev. Albert Sidney Thomas to succeed the late Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., in the high office of Bishop of the Diocese.

For many years preceding the lamented death of Bishop Guerry the Rev. Mr. Thomas was in close contact with his leader and was one upon whom the latter greatly relied in the conduct of the affairs of the Diocese. Then since the Bishop's death, as chairman of the Standing Committee, the present Bishop-elect has already been administering the affairs of the Diocese. He will take his office, therefore, as one familiar with the great work which lies before him.

The election, as previously stated, was held at a special convention assembled in St. John's Church, Florence, on September 18. On the initial ballot six other clergymen received votes, but on the fifth round the Rev. Mr. Thomas received the necessary majoriy of clergy and laity and was then declared the unanimous choice of all the parishes.

Preceding the election a memorial service was conducted by Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, in honor of Bishop Guerry, the great Christian leader.

The consecration service will probably take place in Charleston some time in November after the election has been officially confirmed by the General Convention meeting in Washington next month.

The interests of the Rev. Mr. Thomas have always been centered in South Carolina. He was born in Columbia, S. C., on February 6, 1873, the son of John Page Thomas and Mary Caroline (Gibbes).

The South Carolina Military College awarded him his B. S. degree in 1892. He studied for the ministry at the General Theological Seminary, and from there obtained a B. D. degree. He was ordained deacon in 1900 and priest in 1901 by Bishop Capers.

On the 17th of December, 1908, he was married to Miss Emily Jordan Carrison, of Camden, S. C.

The first eight years of his ministry he devoted to the churches at Darlington, Marion and Society Hill, all in the Diocese of South Carolina. Then in 1908 he became rector of St. David's Church, Cheraw, S. C., where he continued until 1918, at the same time serving as minister in charge of St. Paul's Church, Bennettsville, from 1908-10. From Cheraw he was called to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, but in 1919 returned to Cheraw again to the charge of St. David's Church. Here he remained until 1921, when he received the call to his present charge of St. Michael's Church, Charleston.

From 1903-23 the Rev. Mr. Thomas was Secretary of the Council. Since 1913 he has been the able editor of the Diocesan paper. In 1907 he was appointed Deputy to the General Convention and also a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese. In 1922 he became chairman of the Department of Missions of the Diocese of South Carolina, and in 1921 Historiographer of the Diocese.

The South Carolina Bishop-elect, through his close contact with Bishop Guerry, through his lifelong connections by birth and ministry with the State, through his able performance of official duties allotted to him by the Diocese, would seem to be well prepared to carry on the work of the Diocese, but that which seems to weigh even more is that he is a man well loved by the many who know him. An editorial in the Charleston Post describes him as a devout Christian, a man of fine character and warm human sympathy.

Thousands to Attend Open-Air Services at Washington Cathedral.

Open-air religious services attended by thousands of Episcopalians, gathered from all sections of the country, will be features of the forty-ninth General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church to be held in Washington, October 10 to 28.

Four great outdoor gatherings are planned. They will be held in the natural amphitheater on the close of Washington Cathedral. Located in the shadow of the majestic gothic edifice, which is rising to dominate the northwestern horizon of the capital city, this open-air auditorium provides seating accommodations for 15,000 persons. A system of amplifiers will enable additional thousands to hear the occupants of the outdoor pulpit.

The first service of the series will take place on October 7, when members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the young men's organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church, assemble for an inspirational meeting at which the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will preside.

This service will be the climacteric point of a five-day conference at which representative clergy and laymen will discuss lay evangelism and its opportunities. George Wharton Pepper, of Philadelphia, executive chairman for Washington Cathedral, and Dr. Rudolph Bolling Teusler, director of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan, will address the Brotherhood members at this time.

The impressive opening service of the General Convention will be held in the Cathedral amphitheater on October 10. Between 125 and 140 Bishops in their robes, together with clergy and laymen from all corners of the earth, will be in this assembly, worshipping on a hillside in the open air, as did the multitudes at the dawn of the Christian centuries. The Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, will be the preacher.

Two other services will be held in the amphitheater during the course of the General Convention. One will be a service for the general public, with the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, Bishop of Tennessee, as the preacher. The other will be held in the interests of international peace, with addresses by internationally known speakers. Music for all four services will be provided by a band and a trained choir of 150 men and boys from the Cathedral and representative Episcopal Churches of Washington. The ushering will be cared for jointly by the Laymen's Service Association of Washington and the Washington Cathedral Guild of Ushers.

Wonderful Service for Church Women.

One of the most impressive incidents of the Triennial Convention at Washington will be the celebration of the Triennial Corporate Communion service for the Woman's Auxiliary, on the main floor of the Cathedral, beginning at 8 o'clock the morning of October 11. It will be the first Prayer Book service on that floor. It is expected that 2,500 women will take the Holy Communion; and the United Thank Offering of the Auxiliary, probably in excess of a million dollars, will be laid on the Cathedral altar in a golden alms basin.

The Jerusalem altar, made of stones from the temple quarries at Jerusalem and presented by the American Dioceses, will be used as the High Altar. Temporary altars will be placed in the choir aisles. The Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland, will be the celebrant of the Holy Communion, assisted by Bishop Freeman, of Washington, and eight missionary bishops. The offering will be applied for missions of the Church, especially women's work for women. The United Thank Offering at New Orleans in 1925 reached the total of over $912,000 and the million dollar goal was fixed for this year. The alms basin to be used is twenty-two inches in diameter and has been used for reception of this offering at each convention since 1889.

Church to Be Free of Debt.

Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council of the Church, predicts that the deficit of $1,500,000 in Church finances, reported at the General Convention at New Orleans in 1925, will be completely wiped out by the time the Convention of 1928 meets at Washington in October. Mr. Franklin's report will show $3,866,831 spent in 1926, leaving surplus of over $62,900,000, and in 1927 expeiditures of $3,741,802 and surplus of $130,926. In 1926-27 undesignated legacies formerly used for current expenses were available for mission field work. "A church free of debt" will summarize the Treasurer's report.

Huge Church Revival Campaign.

One of the subjects to be considered at the approaching Triennial Convention is a country-wide campaign for revival of religious faith and interest, to be conducted along the lines of a political campaign. It is proposed that every city, town, village and hamlet be made a centre for preaching missions and expression of Gospel teaching by spoken and written word. The campaign is to be under direction of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, which already has enlisted ninety experienced missioners and will increase the number to 200 or more before beginning work. One feature and purpose of the campaign will be organization and training of lay evangelists of both sexes. Special attention will be given the universities and colleges of the country, some of which are said to have been made centers of atheistic influence.

Drama for General Convention.

Drama will have its share of emphasis in the coming General Convention of the Church, and will be demonstrated for its power as teacher, especially of religious truths. The chairman of the National Church Drama and Pageant Society, who is also rector of St. John's Church, Minneapolis, plans to bring a very beautiful and finished religious pageant to Washington during the Convention, as the society's contribution to the Convention. The play, entitled "Adam", will be produced by the Actors' Guild of New York in several performances, all of which will be given in the parish hall of Epiphany Church. The first performance will probably take place on October 18.

The Church Periodical Club has also under way plans for a series of scenes to be enacted during its evening meeting on October 17. These scenes will tell of the far-reaching work of the C. P. C. The great local dramatic contribution to the Convention, however, will be the showing of "The Cross Triumphant", a pageant written by Mrs. Minnegerode Andrews and formerly produced out-of-doors on the Cathedral grounds and in several other cities.

The pageant has been revised and made suitable for an indoor production, which will be given in the Washington Auditorium. The caste includes hundreds of people and will be drawn from churches and other sources all over the city.

The Cross Triumphant, as produced in Washington before, is a work of art, and visitors to Washington in October will find a treat in store for them in this and other dramatic productions.

A. A. A. Offers Aid.

Convention enthusiasm spreads! The American Automobile Association, through the pages of its official organ, The American Motorist, has sponsored the cause of the Convention Motor Corps, and is helping to round up cars. It is splendid to have such liberal cooperation. One whole page of the American Motorist is given to this worthy cause. It is worth reading.

College Work at the General Convention Under the Auspices of the Adult Division, Department of Religious Education, National Council.

Those who are interested in the college and university work of the Church will want to know about the following meetings in Washington at the time of the General Convention:

1. Celebration of the Holy Communion, Wednesday, October 17, 7:30 A. M., at the Church of the Epiphany, Fourteenth and G Streets, N. W.

2. Four Conferences on the Ministry, 9-10 A. M., October 12, 13, 17, 18, at the Washington Hotel, Fifteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Under the auspices of the Commission on the Ministry, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., chairman. The subjects are as follows:

Friday, October 12—Report of Study of Recruiting Forces. The Rev. C. L. Glenn, College Work.

Saturday, October 13—Effective Recruiting for the Ministry. The Rev. A. L. Kinsolving, Amherst, Mass.

Wednesday, October 17—Report of Study of Placement. The Rev. T. R. Ludlow, Adult Education.

Thursday, October 18—The Problem of Placement. Speaker not yet selected.

These conferences last one hour. They consist of a short paper followed by a general discussion.

3. Two joint meetings on College Work, 9 A. M., October 16; 10:30 A. M., October 17, Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K Streets, N. W. Under the auspices of the Commission on College Work, the Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., chairman. The following groups will be present:

(a) Students attending the Triennial Student Assembly.

(b) Student workers, including members of Diocesan and Provincial Committees on College Work.

(c) Members of the Commission on College Work.

(d) Any others who may be interested in student work.

4. The Class on College Work (Class No. 23 in the National Council's Training Institute) will be merged with these meetings on October 16 and 17. The first meeting of the class, at 11 A. M., October 15, will be for discussion and exchange of ideas.

The Triennial Student Assembly brings together representatives of student-work groups from all parts of the country. Each college and university having a group belonging to the National Student Council is entitled to send one delegate and as many non-voting delegates as it chooses. For further information about representation in this or the other groups mentioned above, write the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

The Commission on College Work is anxious to secure for these meetings the broadest possible picture of student work for the impact that this may have on the General Convention through personal contact with its members.

There will be a permanent exhibit of student work at the parish house of St. John's Church, Lafayette Square. Student workers and others familiar with various phases of the problem will be there for consultation during the week of October 15.

Those who come to Washington in the interests of student work will receive concrete suggestions and the inspiration of a fellowship in a common task. But more important than this, they should have in mind the opportunity to lay before the delegates and visitors to the Convention the urgency of the present situation among students, and the necessity of a more compelling presentation to them of the claims of Christ and His Church.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington made its last presentation of the United Thank Offering, before the great Triennial presentation in October, on Sunday, September 23, at 8 o'clock in St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street. The address was delivered by Dr. Robert Johnston, rector of St. John's Church.

The fifth anniversary of the consecration of Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., will be marked by a celebration of the Holy Communion on St. Michael's and All Angels' Day, Saturday, September 29, at 10 A. M., in Epiphany Church. The consecration of Bishop Freeman took place at the same hour and place on St. Michael's and All Angels' Day in 1923. Bishop Freeman will be the celebrant at the service on Saturday, and there will probably be in attendance of Church people from all over the Diocese.

The Laymen's Service Association, in line with its plan to carry services to the vacant parishes of the Diocese, has been busy during the summer months and has made several inspiring pilgrimages to the rural sections of Maryland.

West River, La Plata and Bennings are some of the places visited recently. These pilgrimages, usualy made on Sundays, consist of two services during the day and conferences on different phases of Church work. Church people of Washington are invited to accompany the lay speakers, and in several cases as many as fifty people have attended, bringing enthusiasm and interest to the undertaking. Luncheon is usually taken in the out-of-doors near the church, and is followed by the afternoon conferences. Some of the active laymen in this work are Dr. Sinclair Bowen, Major Jack Finney, Mr. Lawrence Choate, Dr. Earl Clark, Mr. Busey Howard and Mr. Harris Franklin.

Lectures Postponed.

The lectures of Professor Pupin, of Columbia University, at the Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., have been postponed on account of the lecturer's illness. Due notice will be given as soon as Professor Pupin can make another date.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Conference of Clergy.

The Diocese of Springfield reports a most successful conference of its clergy, which convened at St. Paul's Church, Springfield, on Tuesday, September 18. The conference was under the inspiring leadership of the Rev. Frederick G. Deis, one of the General Secretaries of the Field Department of the National Council. All but one or two of the active clergy of the Diocese were in attendance throughout the day. In the opinion of some of the leaders of the Diocese, it is tremendously helpful to have as a conference leader one who has put time in the mission fields, as the Rev. Mr. Deis has done. All through his addresses there was to be seen that fervor for the missionary cause which, after all, means so much to one who is working for the Church.

Springfield Laymen Spend a Day in Conference on the Church's Program.

Some fifty laymen from eleven parishes and missions in the Diocese of Springfield attended the first annual Conference of Laymen held at Christ Church, Springfield, Wednesday, September 19. There were a number of men at the celebration of the Holy Communion with which the Conference began. Breakfast and luncheon were served by the women of Christ Church, and throughout the day there were conferences on various phases of the Church's work. It was interesting to hear the reports as made by representative laymen of a number of the parishes and missions as to what the men of those places were doing.

In the evening there was a dinner and this brought out a large number of men. Each one listened with great interest to the Rev. Dr. Deis as he told of some of his experiences while a missionary of the Church in China, and his address went a long way towards helping the laymen to more clearly understand some of the wonderful things the old Church is doing abroad. The Rev. Robert H. Atchison, as chairman of the Diocesan Field Department, brought a great challenge to the laymen of the things that they should do and could do in 1929. He predicted, out of a six months' experience in the Field Department, that in 1930 the Diocese of Springfield would pay its obligations to the National Church in full. Mr. Dan G. Swannell, former Treasurer of the Diocese, who was among the laymen present throughout the day, told his impression of a layman's job in the Church today. Mr. Spencer, as Executive Secretary of the Diocese, spoke briefly and incidentally reminded his hearers of the seven or eight Church Club dinner meetings which are being arranged to be held following the General Convention, to give the people of the Diocese an opportunity to catch the message of the great Triennial gathering of the leaders of the Church. The Bishop was most happy over the attendance of his laymen and took them into his confidence in his address to them and urged them to do even more in the days to come than they had been doing up to the present time. Mr. Pascal E. Hatch, chairman of the Department of Finance of the Diocese, was the presiding officer of the dinner and showed by his grasp of financial matters his deep interest and leadership.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Rector Installed at Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg.

On Sunday, September 9, service was held in the new edifice erected by the congregation of Grace Memorial Church, on Fort Hill, in Lynchburg, Va., the occasion being the installation as rector of the Rev. William G. Pendleton, D. D., formerly rector of the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg. The procession was formed at the door, led by the choir. These were followed in order by the Senior Warden, Dr. George J. Tompkins, with the Junior Warden, Mr. Harrison T. Nicholas; the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, with the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, rector of Christ Church, Big Stone Gap (a former rector of Grace Memorial Church); the Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Dean of the Theological Seminary, Alexandria, with Dr. Pendleton, rector of Grace Memorial; the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. The Rev. Mr. Barnwell had Morning Prayer and the Rev. Mr. Smith read the Lesson. The Senior Warden turned over the keys of the new church to the rector. The sermon was preached by Dr. Green. Holy Communion was celebrated by Dr. Pendleton, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Smith. The music was rendered by the choir of Grace Memorial, with the assistance of visitors from other choirs in the city, the organist and choir director of Grace Memorial being Professor Emil Berger, of the music faculty of Lynchburg College.

The first service in the new building was held on the previous Sunday, September 2.

The congregation of Grace Memorial is planning its future with the greatest enthusiasm, and it is believed that the progress of the Episcopal Church in Lynchburg from now on will be steady and sure under the leadership of the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of St. Paul's; the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, of St. John's, and the Rev. Dr. W. G. Pendleton, of Grace Memorial.

Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

Twelve of the thirteen members and associate members of the Department of Religious Education were present at an important meeting held in the parish house of St. John's Church, Roanoke, the evening of September 12, at which time committees were appointed and plans were made for the prosecution of the department in the coming year. The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley had previously been appointed by Bishop Jett as chairman of the department and presided over his meeting. The Bishop was in attendance and spoke briefly of his own ideas as to the proper functions of this department.

Colonel W. M. Brodie was elected vice-chairman of the department and the Rev. Roland J. Moncure was elected secretary.

Fine Conference of Diocesan Clergy.

All of the active clergy in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, with the exception of three, attended a Clergy Conference called by the Bishop, which met in the parish house of St. John's Church, Roanoke, from September 10 to September 12. Splendid discussions of various subjects were led by certain clergymen and participated in informally by the others.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Unusual Ceremonies.

Unusual ceremonies accompanied the breaking of ground on Sunday, September 16, for a new church at Dunton, in the Parish of Grace Church, Jamaica.

The congregation and visitors, including twelve or fifteen of the clergy, met in the public hall, which is at present used for a church. With many banners, several crucifers and a trumpeter, the vested choir of the mission, and the clergy in their vestments, the procession moved to the recently acquired property, about three blocks distant. The Sunday school and a large number of parishioners and friends followed after. On arrival at the new property, a halt was made, a psalm and prayers said, and a purple guidon planted at the nearest corner of the boundary. The procession then resumed its way to the second corner, where another psalm was read and a prayer offered, and another guidon planted. This was continued until the whole boundary of the plot had been traced and four guidons left to mark the corners. Following this ceremony, a way-side cross was set up and blessed, upon the spot where the tower of the future church, God willing, will stand. Being close to the corner of two streets, the cross will be conspicuous, and the prayer that through its suggestion of the death and resurrection of our Saviour it may "be comfort, protection and defence to all that are weary and heavy laden" was most appropriate. The cross is two sections of a white cedar trunk in natural state: six or eight inches through at the base and about ten feet high.

Leaving the front of the property for the future church, ground was then broken at one side for a parish house, which will serve also as a church for the time being. The building has been planned by the vicar, the Rev. Henry Mesier, and a small model was shown to make clear the manner in which the parish hall, with well appointed stage, can quickly and cleverly be trans-

Beyond the war-clouds and the reddened ways,
I see the Promise of the Coming Days!
I see His Sun arise, new charged with grace,
Earth's tears to dry and all her woes efface!
Christ lives! Christ loves! Christ rules!
No more shall Might,
Though leagued with all the Forces of the Night,
Ride over Right. No more shall Wrong
The world's gross agonies prolong.
Who waits His Time shall surely see
The triumph of His Constancy—
When without let, or bar, or stay,
The coming of His Perfect Day
Shall sweep the Powers of Night away—
And Faith, replumed for nobler flight,
And Hope, aglow with radiance bright
And Love, in loveliness bedight,
Shall greet the morning light!
—John Oxenham, in "All's Well"!

THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS.

Once a year we hear about them in the Christian world. They blaze suddenly with startling brightness as they did at Bethlehem. Then, after Christmas passes over, like Santa Claus they are forgotten until the next Christmas.

Children all believe in the good angels. Are the skies not their playground, and the stars their forget-me-nots, which they set on wet, foggy nights and pluck them in full bloom when the wind is north and the frost is on the pumpkin?

Poets woh, after all, are only men and women, with the fresh spirit and the eyes of little children, all believe in angels. Why should they not? Do they not whisper secrets in their ears? Artists see in the dark and catch glimpses of what others are just dying to see. They believe in the blessed presence of the angels. They have given the world its ideas of the angelic host. The fact that they are all female, in pictures at least, and have wings, is due to the imagination of the artists. The poets have borrowed their conception of them from artists. But really, all that creative artists and the work-a-day world knows about these heavenly visitors has come out of the Old Testament Scriptures.

We would gather from revelation that they are by nature celestial, spiritual beings, a little higher in dignity than man, neither marrying nor giving in marriage. In their glorious company there are ranks and dignity, archangel and ordinary angels, fallen and unfallen. They move about among homes, dominions, principalities and powers.

It was one of their number out of heaven who called Abraham, the star worshipper. He became father of the Hebrew race; one of them found Hagar by the fountain. There were angels that talked, redeemed, blessed and helped; angels that ministered and were the messengers of the Covenant. Jacob, Moses, Joshua, Elijah and Daniel had dealings with them and nearly all the minor prophets had dialogues with similar angelic visitors.

After the prophet age had passed, Jewish theologians began to reason on the things of God, and after their fashion, gave everything its place in the heavens and earth. They loved to dwell on the variableness of the angelic nature. Angels were supposed to live only as they ministered to men. "They were renewed every morning:" Whether it was contact with men spoiled their nature or their service robbed them of celestial power, we know not. But some sort of regeneration had to be granted them.

Persians and Parsees in India have recognized their existence, even going so far as to assign them ranks and names. Perhaps this is also due to Hebrew influence. Israel seems to have enjoyed a monopoly of them, and whatever the modern world knows or thinks about them comes from the Israelites.

The Scandinavian temperament has made that race kindly disposed to the idea that God has white-winged messengers He sends down to earth.

English poetry from its beginnings has dwelt on the heavenly hosts, especially in the early days. Every poet with English blood has something to say about angels.

That every soul born has a guardian angel appointed at birth, was and is in some sections a fundamental belief. We have, according to the old belief, a good and a bad angel hovering somewhere near us. Of course, the guardian angel was originally a Hebrew idea. Samuel Rodgers went further by saying that over the lives of these they presided, "they doubled his pleasures, and his cares divided". Campbell makes the angels sad over good men's sins, weeping and blushing over the record of them.

Waller, one of the Puritans, who lived in the tempestuous times when theological disputes raged, and men argued endlessly over doctrines, said all we know about what the blessed dead do in heaven—

" . . . is that they sing and that they love.
Could we further dispute and practice love,
We should agree as angels do above."

Pope called them sister spirits. Gray's angels trembled when they looked on men. Tom Moore, with vivid Celtic fervor, said they folded their wings and rested as they flew over dear Green Ireland, entranced with its beauties.

Shakespeare's characters often invoked the aid of the angels of Grace. Whatever be the cause, modern poets are strangely silent on the subject. Do they not believe in them? Frances Thompson is a notable exception:

"The angels keep their ancient places,
Turn but a stone and start a wing!
'Tis ye, 'tis your estranged faces
That miss the many-splendored thing."

Old school mystics had vivid sense of their presence. One of their fancies was that in reading Scriptures we were in the School of the Angels. There is more solid fact in this than appears on the surface. For the New Testament has much to say on their presence and ministry in human affairs. Naturally this is also part of their Jewish training.

Wherever the Celtic mind and temperament has prevailed in the Church, and been stamped deeply by the spirit of the Old Testament, there has been a strong belief in the visitation of spirits, good and bad, from the other world. At present, in Protestantism we hear very little said about angels. Discussions, pictures and even poems about them seem to be discouraged. In those periods when the doctrines of the last things such as resurrection, reunion, heaven and hell have been flourishing themes, somehow there has arisen a vivid sense of the healing presence and cheering ministry of God's angels.

The legends and stories that have grown up in the course of history about angels, like the old Greek myths, have always had a kernel of truth in them. There is one that runs to the effect that in heaven there are two messenger angels sent out every day, one bearing a basket wherein all the petitions of men are to be brought back to the heavenly throne, the other bearing a basket in which is to be placed thanksgiving for blessings received. The angel of petition comes back nightly to the heavenly land with a basket loaded up with petitions for the blessings of heaven. But the angel carrying the thanks and gratitude of men returns with a basket almost empty.

Wherever the legend originated, it carries the truth that people are far more ready to ask new favor of God than they are to give Him thanks for those they have received. They forget all His benefits in the multitude of petitions.

Angels are supposed to guide all erring sons of men. Three travelers arrived at a cross road once and stood disputing about the path. They were good men, but they could not agree. So they started off in their own direction, each perfectly sure that he was right and on the road to the inn, where travelers were sheltered for the night. Some how during the day each became conscious that he was not alone on the highway, that at times he was visited and guided.

Just as the sun began to set they all gathered at the inn on the edge of the forest.

Said the first, "I was sure of the way; something whispered, 'Go on'". The second said, "I was quite sure that I was on the right road. Somebody kept guiding me, and I could not see who it was". The third man said, "It was the angel of God's presence that guided us. We were all wrong, but He brought us all home at the end of the day". —Dr. George MacPherson Hunter, in Presbyterian Banner.

The Adventure of Prayer.

Prayer is being with God.

You can't choose at all about it, except just in choosing to be with Him.

Perhaps He will take you up on the mountain with Him.

Perhaps He will take you into the night with Him, or into the mist where you will not be able to see Him.

Perhaps you will be with Him in pain, or in exaltation, or in happiness, or in tiredness.

He just says, "Come to Me", and you say, "I will", or "I will not".

You make no stipulations, that is not your part; you know that He wants you, and you know what kind of wanting that is by the Manger and the Cross.

You know that if you say you will not come, He does not leave off wanting you, so you imagine what that means.

You know that if you come to Him, He will ask you to help Him about the Kingdom, that He will in the end give you that work for it that no one else can do.

You know that He will bring you into the fellowship of His friends, and that you will be allowed to bring Him into the fellowship of your friends.

But, of course, you will also go with Him before His enemies; and the things that they say about Him, will be said about you.

And you will also go among the people who don't care whom He is trying to arouse to a sense of His love.

Quite often He and you will be left desolate with the doors locked before you, and the people on the other side scornful and amused.

You will find that He will ask you to do things which you can only do if you forget about yourself and the sort of person you thought you were, or He may ask you to face death or complete shame as He does Himself.

And all the time you will fail Him so often, that by and by you will have no self-confidence left, only a growing confidence in Him instead, because He does not fail you.

And prayer must be fearfully difficult, because it isn't easy to be with God, although it is simple.

It means that some things must go, like pride, unkindness and self-indulgence and self-importance.

But all the same it is a choice which the best part of you wants, so that the most glorious souls in all the ages do choose the Adventure of Prayer.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Long Toot and the Short Toot.

We had traveled across the Ocean, I and the daughter of Keurah. And we returned, and met the Statue of Liberty face to face, and I appreciated the salutation of the American Soldier returning from France, who said as he sailed past her, Good-bye, Old Girl, if thou dost ever see me again, it will be necessary for thee to turn around.

And we continued to the Dock. And as we tied up to the Dock, and the Voyage came to its Official End, the Whistle of the Ship gave One Short Toot.

Now the Whistle had been more or less active during the Voyage, tooting for Noon, and for Fire Drill, and blowing monotonously for Fog, but it had made no noise so insignificant in length or volume as that with which it announced that we were Home.

And I remembered that when we sailed away, it had blown for Two Long and Emphatic Minutes, waking Echoes from the Whole Water front, and calling for answering Hail and Farewell from Ships and Tugs and Ferryboats, and various other craft. But when we came back, we simply slipped into our place at the Dock, and gave one little unpretentious Toot.

But the good ship had brought back Three Thousand souls, and conveyed them all in safety, so that no life was lost, nor was any one sick. And we had come through Inhospitable Seas, and had weathered Storms, and ploughed through Fogs, and kept our Course and our Reckoning, and we were home on Schedule Time. And we were Making No Fuss about it.

And I thought much of the long, Loud Toot with which we started away, and the very quiet, little short Toot with which we came back.

And I said, It was said by them of old time that he who putteth on his Harness should not Boast Himself as he that putteth it off. But I have noticed that the man who putteth off his Harness after a Real Achievement hath very little Occasion to Boast. The Deed boasteth for him, and he can come into Port with a Short Toot.—Exchange.

THE DEBT.

I dreamed the plowman told me: "Grow your bread
And tend your fields alone; I plow no more."
The weaver bade me spin the clothes I wore,
The masons quit the wall above my head.
Deserted so by all who warmed and fed
And sheltered me, my heart was sad and sore,
For seek what path I would, I heard the roar
Of sullen lions; and the sky was lead.

My eyes fell open, and I saw the sun.
I heard a hundred hammers beat as one,
The plowboy whistle, and the builder call;
And then I knew my happiness—and then
I felt my endless debt to other men.
And since that morning I have loved them all.

—Sully Prudhomme, in The Christian-Evangelist.

The Art of Going Slowly.

I listen with pained reluctance to those who claim to have walked forty or fifty miles a day. But it is a pleasure to meet the man who has learned the art of going slowly, the man who disdained not to linger in the springy morning hours, to listen, to watch, to exist. Life is like a road; you hurry, and the end of it is grave. There is no grand crescendo from hour to hour, day to day, year to year; life's quality is in moments, not in distance run.

Fallen trees are to be sat on, laddered trees to climb, flowers to be picked, nests to be looked into, song birds to hear, falcons to be watched. . . . The green roof of the mole's track is to be followed till you find the gentleman in velvet in his home. The sound of the tapping of the woodpecker shall guide you to the loose-barked tree where with watchful eye a bird of beauty is hunting the unmannerly wood louse. You shall approach gently the deer who, in a group, wait for you with startled eyes. They run from the crashing and speedy—they can be won by the gentle. Wild nature is not so wild as we think, or we are wilder—it is not so far from us, and we are nearer.—From "The Gentle Art of Tramping", Stephen Graham.

A Breeze in the Mind.

One has only to sit down in the woods or the fields, or by the shore of the river or the lake, and nearly everything of interest will come round to him—the birds, the animals, the insects; and presently, after his eye has got accustomed to the place, and to the light and shade, he will probably see some plant or flower, that he has sought in vain, and that is a pleasant surprise to him So, on a large scale, the student and lover of nature has this advantage over people who gad up and down the world, seeking some novelty or excitement; he has only to stay at home and see the procession pass. The great globe swings around to him like a revolving showcase; the change of the seasons is like the passage of strange and new countries; the zones of the earth, with all their beauties and marvels, pass one's door, and linger long in the passing. What a voyage is this we make without leaving for a night our own fireside!

St. Pierre well says that a sense of the power and mystery of nature shall spring up as fully in one's heart after he has made the circuit of his own field as after returning from a voyage round the world. . . . The great trouble is for Mohammed to know when the mountain really comes to him. Sometimes a rabbit or a jay or a little warbler brings the woods to my door. A loon on the river, and the Canada lakes are here; the seagulls and the fish hawk bring the sea; the call of the wild gander at night, what does it suggest? And the eagle flapping by, or floating along on a raft of ice, does not he bring the mountain? One spring five swans flew above my barn in single file, going northward—an express train bound for Labrador. It was a more exhilarating sight than if I had seen them in their native haunts. They made a breeze in my mind, like a noble passage in a poem.—John Burroughs.

A Climax of Beauty.

The old caretaker of our little park is somewhat of a philosopher. This morning I found him in a surly mood.

"This tree," he complained, "should be cut down! Though summer is but fairly started, its leaves are beginning to fall. And thus it will be for months—a few dropping every day—enough to spoil the lawn and to keep me busy with my rake.

"Now, this one"—and he indicated another tree—"is altogether different. The leaves remain in their places all through the summer, furnishing a delightful shade, and then turn to gold and crimson before they fall in a mass of blazing glory.

"Well," he continued, bending to his task, "folks are like trees! Some of them are always requiring attention and never do much; others finish their tasks in a fine, brave way, reaching a wonderful climax of beauty at the end."

And, as I walked away, I found it in my heart to thank this humble child of toil for three precious bits of wisdom:

1. Not requiring attention. My friend, if you have a burden, a sorrow, a cross, bear it with brave courage. For, doubt it not, some one not far away is drinking a cup quite as bitter as your own.

2. Finishing life's work. The work you can do is a big, important thing. The great Taskmaster made you for a mission. Do it quickly while the sun shines.

3. Ending in a beautiful way. Though the day be dark, have a glowing sunset hour. Let faith rift the clouds, weaving a rainbow of wondrous beauty out of the dark nests of life.—Lutheran.

IN EXTREMIS.

Charles Ballard.

When I fell in the road-dust you raised me,
And took me into God's garden.
Past the flaming sword you led me,
Hiding my face in your robe.

When I fainted with hunger you found me,
And carried me to the holy place,
And broke bread, and set it before me—
God's bread—from the altar.

PEACE, BE STILL!

Charles Nevers Holmes.

Upon the sea of Galilee,
There raged the wind and wave;
Amid storm's roar, afar from shore,
A boat was near its grave.

And in that boat now scarce afloat,
Christ slept without fear;
Him they awoke, to whom they spoke,
"Lord, save us—death is near"!

Christ calmly said, "Why do you dread?
Your faith is weak and small;
Trust in the God of sea and sod,
Who heeds a sparrow's fall."

And from that boat, now scarce afloat,
To wave and wind spake He;
The storm was gone, the sunlight shone
On the Sea of Galilee.

And all the men much marvelled then,
Among themselves spoke they,
"What man is He, what man, He be,
Whom waves and winds obey"?

St. Michael and the Angels.

Myrtle Humphreys.

Michael (who is like unto God) is the great archangel who fights for God and His Church against the powers of evil. He is chief of the angelic band, and the Old Testament speaks of him as the guardian angel of the Jewish people.

Angel is the Greek word for messenger, and the Bible tells us a great deal concerning their work. It was an angel who brought to the blessed Virgin the announcement that she was to be the mother of our blessed Lord; and the tidings of His birth came to the shepherds through an angel. It is inspiring to recollect that most frequently these visions were vouchsafed to people who were poor and obscure.

The Gospel of St. Michael and All Angels' Day speaks of the sanctity of childhood, and the duty our Lord enjoined upon us—namely, that we all imitate the humility of little children. There is a well-known picture which represents a child crossing a log below which rushes a dangerous torrent. Hovering above the child is the shadowy figure of the guardian angel.

We are too prone to think of angels' ministry as a thing belonging to the remote past. A recent issue of a magazine devoted to psychological principles gives the following incident as an actual fact:

A man carrying a large sum of money was going home alone one night. Apparently he was not a religious man, but as he approached a certain corner, something impelled him to pray for protection. A moment later a disreputable-looking man drew near, but after looking at the other, he abruptly sheered off into the darkness.

Next morning the gentleman read of a sensational hold-up which had occurred on this same corner just after he had passed on the preceding evening. The criminal was captured. Curiosity impelled the gentleman to go to the police station, and upon seeing the prisoner, he recognized him as the suspicious-looking man who had sheered away from him the evening before.

"Why did you not hold me up?" he asked the criminal.

"You!" ejaculated the prisoner in surprise. "Certainly NOT. There were three of you." The man who had carried the money had been entirely alone; yet the thief who intended to attack him was deterred from his purpose because he saw two shadowy forms accompanying the late pedestrian, and supposed the other man had two companions.

"He shall give His angels charge over thee." Only last autumn, this incident really happened. Along Lake Keuka, some of the cottages are set so much lower than the highway that the upper windows are on a level with the road. A mother kneeling to accompany her small son in his bedside prayers suddenly became overwhelmed by a sense of impending danger. She offered a prayer for protection just as two motor cars came together in the highway outside; and one of them lunged through the retaining wall and into the house. A bath tub turned the car from its course, otherwise it would have struck the kneeling mother and child, and then inevitably gone into the lake. Being deflected from its course, the car plunged onward to the roof of a wood shed, and ended by hanging by its wheels, nose downward, from a wall with water eighty feet deep below. The two occupants of the car scrambled out without a scratch.

It was the Angel of the Resurrection who rolled the stone away from the sepuchre of Jesus Christ; and when the Assyrian army came up to destroy Israel it was owing to the Angel of Death who entered their camp that thousands were found dead in the morning. During the Great Plague in London, many marked their doors with the sign of the cross, and the words, "Lord, have mercy upon us!" During the long, dreary nights when hundreds died in the stricken city, people hoped the sign upon the door would cause the Angel of Death to pass them by.

The great feast of St. Michael and All Angels falls upon September 29th, and in England this season is designated "Michaelmas", the term being synonymous with autumn. The color for the day is white.

The Angels That Stayed Behind.

M. L. G.

One day in Heaven two little angels, Dariel and Hamiel, were playing in a green pasture. As they tossed their ball it glistened in the sunshine like a great opal, of many colors. At last they threw themselves down to rest, beneath a tree of golden fruit. Then there came by a company of angels, who talked together quietly, and yet with joyful faces.

"This is the hour to tell the sorrowful earth of the coming of her King," said one of the company.

"Let us hasten, then, that those whom He has appointed may learn the glad tidings," answered another.

"Oh!" cried Hamiel and Dariel together, "let us journey with you, and join in the song of glory and goodwill! Let us!"

"Have ye learned to praise God with heavenly melody, and the music of true hearts?" asked the angel who had last spoken.

"Yea, good angel, we have sung with many cherubims, telling of God's glory," and they sang together, in music such as the stars made in the beginning.

"Come then, for truly by your voices with those of all our company the good news may find a way to the dull ears of men," answered the angel.

Then all together the angel band uprose, and Dariel and Hamiel with them, and they journeyed far out of the heavenly coasts, and passed many spheres, and through uncharted realms of space; yet because the King had gone before them, the way was marked with light. At last they neared the earth; and there it was night, and shepherds watched their flocks on the hillsides, talking together as they drew close to the fire they had kindled.

"Lest they fear at sight of us all," said the angels, "go you first, good brother, and tell the tidings; then will all we join in the singing of God's glory." So one angel went alone, and even at that sight the shepherds were affrighted.

"Fear not!" cried the angel; and he told in joyful tones the news that meant the earth's salvation. And suddenly the multitude of the angels joined him and sang of God's glory and of His gift that brought peace and love to men. Dariel and Hamiel sang, too, with all the beauty they had learned among the cherubim. Strange it was to them, to see darkness, and men, and to hear the softly-bleating sheep; so when the song was ended they lingered to stroke the soft coats of the little lambs, which the shepherds had brought near the fire to keep them warm. They did not see that their bright companions were winging back through the starry sky; and the eyes of the shepherds being closed again to heavenly sights, they could not know that as they started to Bethlehem to see the thing the Lord had done, the two little angels went with them.

In the stable entrance stood Joseph; and as the shepherds told him in low tones of their vision, he motioned them to come with him; and within, cradled in the manger, with His mother near, lay in truth the King; though He lay as a little unknowing babe, Dariel and Hamiel stood with the shepherds by the manger, and worshipped with them, and when the Baby opened His eyes He saw them and smiled.

Soon the shepherds went away, to tell their friends of the wonder; but the two little angels stayed in the stable and dwelt there. And as the Holy Child grew they sang to Him and played with Him, and did not long for Heaven, being with Him whose presence brings all heavenly joy with it.

But one night, when Mary and Joseph slept, and the two little angels watched drowsily above the Christ-child's cradle, there came one of their own company of shining seraphs; and he spoke hastily to Joseph as he dreamed, bidding him arise and flee to Egypt with Mary and the little One, for there were those that sought the life of Jesus. Joseph arose quickly, and he and Mary hurried to gather their few possessions together and to wrap the Baby warmly for the journey.

"Wherever Egypt may be, thither let us follow the King," said Hamiel.

"So will we," answered Dariel. But the great angel who had spoken to Joseph, drew near.

"Little angels, why do ye tarry here on earth?" asked he.

"So that we may companion the Babe of Heaven, good angel," they answered.

"Nay, but ye should return to the blessed land from whence ye came, for now the sweet Child needs but His mother's love, and Joseph's watchful care, with which the Father in Heaven has encompassed Him. But the days will come when He will need succor, and there will be none to offer it save angels only. Come back with me, and so learn strength and comfort that ye may be able to relieve His distress in those days."

Then Hamiel and Dariel bowed their shining heads; and when they had said farewell to little Jesus, they rose with the great angel to enter again into Heaven.

And there they learned with diligence, and grew strong and wise to comfort; even as on earth the Holy Child, returned to Nazareth, grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.

One day when they had become great shining seraphs, there came a messenger to Hamiel, who said:

"The Son of Man faints and is weary. He has for long taken no food, and has been sorely tempted by the evil spirit. But him has He vanquished. Go thou, therefore, bringing Him heavenly strength in His great need."

Then Hamiel flew swiftly to earth, and to the desert where Jesus was, sore spent from hunger and the conflict. And to Him Hamiel brought heavenly strength, and the bread of the knowledge that God's will had been perfectly wrought.

Then later, when in all Heaven there was wonder and silence, and the angels gathered themselves into legions, that they might stand ready to His call, came the messenger to Dariel.

"Thou Dariel," he said, "go to the garden where He prays, forsaken of His friends; and comfort Him." And Dariel, swifter than lightfi sped to the garden where the Lord knelt alone; and he brought to his Master comfort, and the peace of God.

And once again to the two little angels grown great and wise came the messenger.

"To you ,Dariel and Hamiel, who sang at His birth, comes the word to go and roll away the great stone that lies before His empty tomb. Go then, and tell those who come to bring spices and ever!"
that He has conquered death for ever

Then instantly Dariel and Hamiel rose and came like lightning to the earth. They descended into another garden, where soldiers kept guard before a sealed stone while the dawn broke. The soldiers fled trembling before them; and they rolled away the stone and entering with reverent tread sat, one at the head and the other at the foot, where the body of the Lord had lain.

In a little while the women who loved Him came, fearing and weeping. And the angels who had sung, "Glory to God" on that first Christmas night, now filled their hearts with joy as they cried:

"He is not here! For He is risen, as He said!"

The Book That Every Churchman Must Have

THE GENERAL CHURCH PROGRAM

1929-1931

A compact, convenient, readable book that gives the reader a birds-eye view of the whole work of the Church in mission fields at home and abroad.

Work in every field, and the work of each Department of the National Council, are described, that the people of the Church may know the whole story, and be able to judge for themselves of the worth and effectiveness of the Church's missionary effort.

Brief tables, clear and easily understood, show where the missionory dollar is being spent, and how it is spent.

A Bibliography is appended to the statement covering each field, dollar is being spent, and how it is spent.

MORNING.

I walked into the open morn
Where pale sky deepened into blue,
And watched how in the color-changing dew
Tears laughed from every thorn.

Those tears that through the silent night
Had gathered, now at break of day
From thorn and grass and spider's cobweb grey
Shone merry in the light.

So merry, too, at break of day
Tears shall be shining in their eyes,
For whom the Son of Righteousness shall rise
To wipe all tears away.

—A. J. Young.

The climax of Christian character does not consist in marvelous illuminations and gifts, nor simply in resignation to God's will, but in an experience that no matter what may come exercises all patience and long-suffering, with joy. Patience at home, with neighbors, with fellow-workers, when misunderstood, when opposed, when neglected, when suffering, in absence of feeling—joyfully patient, always and everywhere!—M. M. Knapp.

formed into a chapel with a decent and suitable chancel. Those who are seeking a way to make one building serve temporarily both these purposes would do well to examine this model.

The president of the Borough of Queens, the Hon. Bernard S. Patten, was present and turned a sod at the breaking of the ground; and so did representatives of several congregations of various denominations in the neighborhood as well as the clergy present and the officers of the mission.

Prayers were offered for God's blessing upon the rector of the Parish, the Rev. Rockland T. Homans, who a few days previously had suffered bereavement by the death of his wife.

Dunton is southwest of Jamaica, within the borders of that old colonial Parish. A mission known as St. Mary's was started in the neighborhood about thirty years ago, when the region had a scattered population; but after a number of years' trial it was given up. Recently, however, there has been much building in the vicinity, and a great increase of population; and the new attempt to establish a church, under the leadership of the rector of Jamica, seems sure to be successful.

Mrs. Henry L. Hobart.

The death of Mrs. Henry L. Hobart, who for many years spent her summers in Easthampton, will be felt as a personal loss by many in this Diocese, as well as in New York. No one who knew her personally could fail to be influenced by the reality of her faith, and the unique clearness of her spiritual vision. In particular, Mrs. Hobart's religious dramas, and her personal interest in the reverent production of them, have had much influence in our Diocese, for a good deal of use has been made of religious drama here, and those who have done most in this kind of work in Long Island have been for the most part her pupils. Through them, her work will live after her, and continue its spiritual influence.

Officers and Teachers of Church Schools to Meet.

On October 1 a dinner conference will be held by the officers and teachers of the Church schools of Brooklyn and Queens, and October 29 for Suffolk and Nassau. ### Young People's Conference.

On October 27 there will be a Young People's Conference at Oyster Bay. "Christ and I" will be the topic for group discussion to be led by the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, student secretary, at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

HISTORICAL TRAVELOGUE

SEEING RICHMOND

Occupying twelve acres in the center of the city is the Capitol Square. Here, under Lee and Jackson, many of the Confederate soldiers were mustered into service during the Civil War. In the grounds are the Capitol Building, where the "General Convention of the State of Virginia" met in 1861 and signed the Ordinance of Secession, and where the "Congress of the Confederate States of America" held its sessions from July 20, 1861, to March 18, 1865. The Governor's Mansion occupies one angle of the Square, and on its eastern side are the State Library and Administration Building. The original Caiptol was designed by Thomas Jefferson, and in its rotunda is the famous Houdon statue of Washington.

Richmond is a motorist's Paradise, for the scenery of the surrounding country is beautiful beyond description, whether one goes down the Government Road to the Williamsburg Highway, which passes through the famous Chickahominy Swamp, where McClellan's army was held at bay; along the Mechanicsville 'Pike, where one of the most bitter battles of the war was fought by the men under Jackson and Porter; along the Brook Turnpike to Yellow Tavern, where "Jeb" Stuart was mortally wounded; or along the beautiful road to the Country Club and Westhampton, over the heights of which Dahlgren retreated with his raiders in the Civil War.

YEOCOMICO CHURCH COPLE PARISH

WESTMORELAND COUNTY, VIRGINIA

AN APPEAL

The Executive Committee of the Association for the Preservation of Yeocomico Church desires to bring to the attention of the members of the Association and of the many friends of the church the condition of the building and the steps that must be taken immediately to secure its preservation.

The exact date of the establishment of Cople Parish, of which Yeocomico is one of the old parish churches, is not known. Westmoreland county was formed about 1653. Cople Parish was probably established by the court at the same time or perhaps some years earlier. There is a record that Rev. William Scrimgour was rector of Cople Parish in 1680.

In 1706, as a brick over one of the south doors of the present building testifies, the present building was erected Of the twenty Colonial churches now in possession of the Diocese of Virginia, none exceeds Yeocomico in beauty of setting or quaintness of design. Through the vicissitudes of three wars fought over the ground on which it stands, through the more trying time of the fall and rising again of the church in Virginia after the Revolution, the old church has stood as an unfailing witness to the faith of our fathers and the recurring faith of each new generation. At times deserted and desecrated, despoiled of its original furniture, except for the font and communion table, Yeocomico is to-day the center of a strong work, as well as a beloved shrine.

But two centuries and more had left their mark upon the foundations, walls and roof of the building, until, for its very preservation, something had to be done. So in 1906, on the occasion of the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the building of the present structure, the Association for the Preservation of Yeocomico Church was formed.

The first and most necessary step in the actual reconstruction was the putting of a concrete foundation under the walls of the whole building. This was done some fifteen years ago. Now the architects tell us that enlarging cracks in the walls and the structure of the supports in the roof render the walls and roof entirely insecure and liable to very speedy disintegration, unless immediate steps are taken to preserve them. For this purpose the Association will need $6,000, of which $1,300 is in hand. The remainder must come from the friends of the old church who are willing to give that the structure may be preserved. The architects state that the improvements to the walls and roof which are now being undertaken will put the fabric of the whole building in permanent repair.

When this has been done, the beautifying of the interior by memorials and otherwise may be carried on with the assurance that the structive in which the memorials are to be placed is in such shape that it will stand while time adds another two centuries and more to its history.

The Association has in the past few years secured an endowment fund of about $2,700, the income of which is to be used perpetually to keep in proper shate the buildings, grounds and wall surrounding them, a further guarantee that, once the old church is put in first-class repair, it will remain so for generations to come.

The Executive Committee of the Association, with the approval of the rector and vestry of Cople Parish, and of the Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, are making this appeal to you to help as promptly and liberally as possible. Bids have already been advertised for and it is hoped that work will begin in the early Spring.

Please send your contribution to Mr. Frederick Griffith, Treasurer, Hague, Va.

A CHURCH ATTENDANCE CAMPAIGN

By DYSON HAGUE, Toronto

It begins by thinking—prayerful, practical thinking—with opened eyes and earnest hearts—men thinking of their brothers—the men who need their care and prayer—the great army of the indifferent. There they go, those thousands and thousands of men and women, once baptized into the Threefold Name, on a Sunday morning and evening, passing the door of the house of God as if it were not open. They are not disdainful. They are not defiant. They are simply without interest, as if the church has no meaning for them. It is their church. It is their home by birth and profession. But on they go to their pleasure, or to their recreation. And who cares? Oh, churchmen, it is yours to think, think, think!

It is followed up by men whose hearts God has touched with a longing to get back to grace and life those absentees—longing to save them from the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the Devil—offering themselves to the parson to go to work and visit every man in the parish, at his home or boarding house, in his office or place of work, and give him an earnest invitation in Christ's Name, for Christ's sake, and for Christ Himself, to come into the church.

It is inspired and controlled by the clergy who are alert and eager to give the lead and to forward in every possible way an effort to stir the church, for without the inspiration and enthusiasm of the clergyman, it is not likely to begin, and if it begins will likely die out like a fire without fuel.

And it is made possible and gloriously successful by continued and earnest prayer. The trouble with most things of this kind is that it is the case of an earnest parson pushing a reluctant laity, instead of parson and people being alike animated by a great desire to go after men and young people and all, not for money, but because they can say with the apostle, "We seek not yours, but you." No one can estimate the far-reaching value of one soul won for Christ; of one wanderer brought back to the church.

Let me tell you something that happened in our own Diocese some time ago. There was a man living in our city who was unattached to our church, and apparently indifferent to Christ's call. Sunday after Sunday went by, and the sound of the church-calling bell was unheeded. A church attendance campaign was begun in faith and hope, and the men of the church near which this man lived were caught in the tide of its movement and went out seeking to bring back the indifferent. One day a couple of earnest men called at his house. An appeal for Christ and His Church was made. The careless man said: "I'll come." He did come. He not only came to the church, but he became interested in the church. He brought his children to Sunday School. He became more interested. He seriously examined his soul. And then he heard the Calling Voice, and his soul responded, "Here am I" to the challenge of Christ. He followed on, and he followed Him more fully. That man became a candidate for the ministry. He entered Wycliffe College, Toronto, as a student and began to study for the church. He was ordained and became a minister, and afterwards went to the States. And where is he now? He is now one of the earnest clergy of your church in the Diocese of Virginia and a supporter of The Southern Churchman. Why, if that church attendance and service campaign had done nothing more for Christ and the church than to save one soul, and get one man consecrated for the glorious work of winning the world to Christ, it would repay all the energy and expense, all the time and trouble.

There can be no doubt that the large proportion of men who never go to church have no real antagonism to religion, the Bible, or the church. In many cases it is sheer indifference. And in many cases, alas, the cause of that indi ference is the indifference of the clergy and of the church. We are not in earnest. We are not at work. We are not making serious effort to visit, to speak, to welcome, to encourage. Many of our leading churchmen forget the tremendous force of example. If they go out in the motor on Sunday to the golf club, or to the country, that very example discourages others from church attendance. One of my church workers said to me some time ago: "Rector, I'm not going to play another game of golf on Sunday." I said, "Why?" "Well," he answered, "I was just thinking of my influence, and I made up my mind that no man was going to point to me and say, 'There goes H—, he's a good churchman; if he plays, why, I will.'"

Oh, what a splendid hour this is in the history of our church! What a glorious open door lies before us amidst the welter of pleasure-rushing and money-worshipping; through the noisy voices of firvolity and trifling, and shallow dreams! There is a deeper longing in thousands and tens of thousands who are feeling that life is real and life is earnest, and the way they are living is vain and unsatisfying! They are lonely! They long for communion! They are wanderers; they are restless for home! O, what a time this is for men who have not lost their love for God, to go out and touch those that know not of life! What a moment this is for men whose hearts God has touched to speak a word for the Lord who bought them! And for women—like Lydia—by going to the place where prayer is wont to be made, not only to get a blessing to their own soul, but perhaps awaken many to hear the pleading voice: "Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech" (Isaiah 32:9). O, these churchless men! O, these careless women! May God touch our hearts with a longing desire to take up with heart and soul the longing to win them back for Christ and His Church.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Defeat may serve as well as victory
To shake the soul and let the glory out.
—Edwin Markham.

To those who are of a noble disposition the whole world is but one family. —Hitopadessa; Hindu. 246 B. C.

"If men only understood
How love conquers; how prevailing
Is its might, grim hate assailing;
How compassion endeth sorrow,
Maketh wise and doth not borrow
Pain of passion; they would ever
Live in love, in hatred never—
If they only understood."

Giving to others does not exhaust our own supply. The apostles had twelve baskets of pieces left after all the people were fed. It is always so. The more love and sympathy we give out to others the more we have in our own hands. Showing kindness to those we meet does not empty our own hearts of kindness.—J. R. Miller.

Let others trust God for Salvation, but my spirit can nevtr rest till it dares trust God with Salvation."—Isaac Pennington.

To mothers in the pangs of woe,
To children starving without bread,
O let us feel that the debt we owe
In self-denying love to go
Wherever Thou hast said.
—Laura Schere Copenhaver.

The great clock bell of Saint Paul's is not heard even a few streets off in the roar of traffic all day long; but it can be heard over half the metropolis in the silence of the night, one reason why God so often spoke to His servants in the night. What we need above all things in these crowded days is the setting apart of many listening times; times of quiet in which we can hear the heavenly voices that call to us unregarded in the busy day.—H. G. Knight.

We desire to leave on record our solemn and unanimous testimony that no external and written standards can take the place of that inward and personal experience of union with the living Christ which is the only experience of spiritual vitality, and that the object of our faith is not any statement about Christ, but the Lord Jesus Christ Himself.—From The Findings of the Lausanne Conference.

THE 1892 PRAYER BOOK CAN AND SHOULD BE RETAINED

As I see the autos hurry to and fro in the street below; whenever I hear the hum of an airplane overhead, or listen in on the radio, I am reminded over and over again that when some optimistic soul, in the years long gone, gave birth to the ideas that today have become living realities there were many—and they in the majority—who said, "It can't be done."

The "cant-ers". They were there when Noah built the Ark. They are still with us today.

The "cant-ers". They were the boys who never lifted a finger to help when David went forth to battle against the arch enemy of the Lord, the giant, Goliath. All they did was to belittle the efforts of the man who had the courage to do and to dare.

The "cant-ers". What battle did they ever fight and win? What victory did they ever gain? What Reformation did they ever heed? What Revolution did they ever start? What invention did they ever give to the world? What achievement can they point to with pride?

Every great invention, everything that adds to the comfort and convenience of life, every hospital that ministers to the bodies of men, every university that educates the minds of men, every church that satisfies the spiritual yearnings of hungry souls, every institution that molds and develops character, that makes this world a better, happier, healthier, more worth while place in which to live came into being because there were those who said, "It can be done—and did it".

The Magna Charta, the Reformation, the American Revolution—these and every forward movement in the history of the world from the beginning to this good hour became an accomplished fact through the efforts of men who dared to attempt the "impossible"—the "can" boys, who said, "It can be done—and did it".

So in regard to our editorial of September 8 advocating that the "subject of Prayer Book revision be dropped entirely and the 1892 Book, without amendment, be retained as our Standard Prayer Book", it will neither discourage us nor deter us if some timid soul gives voice to the expression—"It can't be done".

It will not deter us because we are more firmly persuaded than ever that we are voicing the sentiments of that great majority of loyal Prayer Book Churchmen, so long silent, who "are not ready for Prayer Book revision", and now that they realize the nature of the revision are quite certain that they do not want it.

This great, heretofore silent, majority see very clearly that the apparent conflict between the revised Offices and the Articles of Religion will create a twilight zone of debatable ground that will result in a prolonged and intensified doctrinal controversy.

They realize that the re-introduction of Prayers for the Dead and the restoral of the "Canon of the Mass" means a definite break with the work of the English Reformers. They know that this means "Masses for the Dead", fees for praying souls out of Purgatory—the teaching of the Medieval doctrines of Transubstantiation and Purgatory.

There is a Church that teaches those doctrines, but this Church definitely repudiated them when Cranmer and his co-laborers completed their work of reformation and the majority of Churchmen are not willing to return to the discarded prayers, practices and customs of the Middle Ages.

So we again reiterate the appeal that all groups within the Church join us in asking General Convention to adopt a resolution

> 1. Declaring the revision null and void, and
> 2. Restoring the 1892 Prayer Book, without amendment, as the Standard Prayer Book of this Church.

If, when General Convention meets in Washington, both houses will immediately adopt a concurrent resolution to the above effect this "bone of contention" will be consigned to oblivion, the ever-widening breach within the Church will be healed, peace and harmony automatically restored and the energies of General Convention directed in constructive channels instead of being consumed by controversial strife.

Only those who prefer strife to peace, who are more anxious to advance the cause of their particular partisan group than to further the common welfare of the entire Church, would possibly find any reason to oppose such a resolution.

Of course, there may be a few such partisans who will oppose the resolution, but they will immediately stamp themselves as such. We are confident they are hopelessly in the minority.

The "cant-ers" wailed "it can't be done", but the "can" boys only smiled and sang the while, "It can be done"—and THEY DID IT".

---

FOR THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

Let us pray:

For guidance for all Bishops and clerical and lay delegates: that by prayer and study they may make themselves ready to give their very best to the forwarding of the Church's Mission.

That special guidance may be granted to their deliberations in regard to the financing of missionary work at home and abroad.

That more concerted efforts may be made to grapple with the problem of work among the colored people and especially in regard to the election of a successor to Bishop Delany.

That clearer light may be vouchsafed to all those responsible for the work of the Church in China.

In considering all these questions, everything depends upon the conception which our delegates have formed of the Church they are elected to represent: and behind that, the conception which we have who send them.

Let us pray then:

That we and they may hold fast the thought, not of a venerable institution which we would maintain, but of a Church which is really the Body of Christ, in genuine fact able to manifest to the world the fullness of Christ.

Of a united Church, all members bound together in love.

Of a prophetic Church, carrying with power the message of Christ to the world.

Of a Church that will speak as Christ would speak, in the face of materialism, of profit-worshipping, of social systems based upon jungle ethics, of open efforts to renew the horrors of war.

And that all legislation may be made in the light of this ideal.

ABIDE in us, O Christ, that we may abide in Thee; let Thy word dwell in us richly in all wisdom, that we may be full of the thought of Thee, that we may keep our ideals bright in the midst of this workaday world. Keep us ever in Thy presence, that we may bring forth fruit of good works to Thy honor and glory. Amen.

THE LAITY MUST UNITE TO PRESERVE THE FAITH

(Many of the Anglo-Catholic clergy in cynical violation of their ordination vows are teaching the too trustful laity the Anglo-Catholic doctrines stated below, all of which are expressly condemned, repudiated or forbidden by the Articles of Religion, which are a part of the constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church.)

A CONTRAST IN DOCTRINE.

Teaching of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

(From the Articles of Religion.)

Art. XXVIII. Of the Lord's Supper.

" . . . . . .

"Transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of Bread and Wine) in the Supper of the Lord, cannot be proved by Holy Writ; but is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions. . . .

"The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped."

Art. XXXI. Of the One Oblation of Christ finished upon the Cross.

"The Offering of Christ once made is that perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction, for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin, but that alone. Wherefore the sacrifices of Masses, in the which it was commonly said, that the priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables, and dangerous deceits."

Anglo-Catholic Teaching.

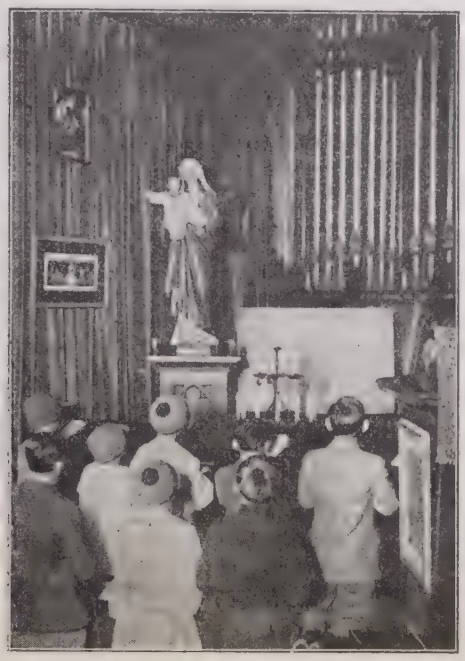
(Declaration of the Central Council of Catholic Societies of England, published in the English "Churchman", June 14, 1928.)

1. We believe that in the Holy Eucharist the Bread and Wine become the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ by virtue of the Prayer of Consecration, and that therefore He Himself is truly present under these outward forms.



2. We believe that the Body and Blood of our Lord thus truly present are offered to the Father as a Sacrifice; that this Sacrifice is one with the Sacrifice of the Cross; and that it is the continual commemoration of our Lord's death and Resurrection and the continual application of his merits.

3. We believe that our Lord Jesus Christ being therefore truly and personally present in the Consecrated Sacrament is there to be adored; and that inward and outward acts of adoration are due to Him in the liturgy after the Consecration.

4. We believe also that our Lord is no less present in the Sacraments when reserved; and therefore is therein alwoys to be adored with like acts of adoration.

"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."—Matthew 7:20.

A Result of Anglo-Catholicism in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Central New York.

This photograph first appeared in the "Spirit of Missions" for February, 1928.

The children, who belong to Calvary Church, Syracuse, N. Y., are kneeling before an image of the Virgin and Child, and are thus being taught to worship idols.

Are parents watching with sufficient care the religious instruction given by some rectors who purport to be Protestant Episcopalians?

At the time of the Reformation all of the Protestant Churches abolished idolatry.

Until recently, the Episcopal Church has been free from it. At present, however, some of the Anglo-Catholics are setting up images.

The Ten Commandments.

I. Thou shalt have none other gods but me.

II. Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth; thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them . . .

The New Testament.

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen" (1 John 5:21).

The Articles of Religion.

Art. XXII. "The Romish doctrine concerning Purgatory, Pardons, Worshipping and Adoration, as well of images as of relics, and also invocation of Saints, is a fond thing, vainly invented, and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the Word of God."

The teaching of the Articles of Religion is based on the Ten Commandments and the New Testament. The practices of some Anglo-Catholics is an imitation of ancient paganism.

Is it any wonder that the Anglo-Catholics prevalently wish to abolish the Articles of Religion.

The laity are asked to support missionaries to convert the heathen to Christianity and also to support clergy who at the same time teach heathen practices to Christians.

Another Illustration of the Religious Ideas Which Are Being Taught to Protestant Episcopalians by the Anglo-Catholic Clergy.

What This Picture Means

Here is "Father" Orum of the Order of the Holy Cross carrying a reliquary which contains one hair from the beard of Charles I of England, who is revered as a saint by some Anglo-Catholics.

In the Roman Catholic Church relics are believed to have miraculous powers in curing disease and averting disaster.

Like belief in magic, idolatry, polytheism and theophagy (eating of God in the Mass), they are a part of that medieval, paganized Christianity which the Anglo-Catholics are trying to introduce into our Church once more.

Rights of the Laity Stated

The Church exists for the laity and is supported by them. That they have the right to resist the Romanizing of their Church by the Anglo-Catholics were made clear by Bishop Fiske in his address to the Diocesan Convention of Central New York (May, 1928), from which a brief extract follows:

"The constitution of the Episcopal Church gives to the laity real authority. They have spiritual authority as well . . . The Prayer Book cannot be revised without their consenting vote . . . No doctrinal changes can be made in our formularies without their approval."

This photograph, taken at St. Andrew's, Tenn., first appeared in the "Churchman".

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Late John L. Williams

EVENING II.

O LORD GOD, our merciful Father, at the close of another day we come before Thee with humble and thankful hearts, beseeching Thee to pity our infirmities, to forgive our sins, and to accept our poor, imperfect services for Jesus Christ's sake.

We are not worthy of the least of Thy blessings. Without Thee, whatever be our place or condition in life, we are in darkness, poor and blind and naked and wretched and miserable. Thou art our only hope, our Light and Life. Look on us in tender mercy: comfort us: lift up our hearts: keep us near Thee, and make us to be purely, perfectly and forever Thine own.

Let us set Thee, our Lord and Saviour, always before our eyes. Let us hear and know Thy voice and follow Thee. Let Thy holy example constantly influence our lives, and Thy gracious teachings direct and rule our hearts and minds. Let the love of Thee move us to all good deeds, and the fear of Thee restrain us from every kind of evil.

Heavenly Father, help us to exercise ourselves day and night in Thy laws, and to study to do Thy will. Let Thy good Spirit be in us a Fountain of life, our never failing Counsellor and Strength. Let Thy Kingdom and righteousness be the dear thought of our hearts, and the purpose and business of our lives. Make it to be our chief desire that we may see the good of Thy chosen, rejoice in the gladness of Thy people, and glory with Thine inheritance. May we, in our day, see Thy Church in great prosperity, and may pure and undefiled religion everywhere prevail. Be Thou our wealth and honor, our wisdom and righteousness, our defense and confidence, all our salvation and all our desire. May we walk with Thee, abide under Thy shadow, and be upheld by Thine everlasting arms. Prepare us to make every sacrifice and to do and endure all that truth, and love and peace may require of us, committing our souls to Thee that judgest righteously, and looking to Thee who art the Author and Finisher of our faith, and who orderest all things that concern us.

We pray Thee, O Lord, cleanse and defend Thy Church: sustain and help Thy ministers and servants everywhere: keep Thy people from error and vice, and make them all to be of one heart and mind in loving and serving Thee.

Give wisdom and virtue to our magistrates, and direct and rule all the affairs of our country for the promotion of peace and happiness, truth and justice among us.

Relieve the sick; comfort the sorrowing. Enlighten the ignorant, change the hearts of the wicked, and cause Thy righteousness to prevail in the earth.

Keep us during the night that is before us. Defend us from all adversities that may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts that may assault and hurt the soul. Refresh us with sleep, that we may be ready for the work of the coming day.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Our Father, etc.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

EXODUS.

The Name of the book of Exodus, in the Hebrew, is "These are the names" (ch. 1:1).

The book contains the names of the people of Israel enslaved in Egypt and redeemed and brought nigh to God (ch. 1:1-7; 28:9-21).

Best of all, in this book we learn the name of Christ as Jehovah, the covenant making and the covenant keeping God of redemption (ch. 3:14, 15).

Subject.

The Subject of Exodus is the bondage, deliverance and relationship to God of Israel.

I. Chapter 1 tells us the story of God's foreknown people Israel, permitted to come into the place of bondage, where under the lash of the taskmasters they multiplied and grew, because of the providential care of God's sovereign grace.

II. Chapters 2 to 18 reveal how the Lord visited Israel, delivered them from bondage and brought them near to Himself.

Chapters 2 to 6 record the coming, care, call and commission of Moses, the longed for Deliverer.

Chapters 7 to 11 inform us of the hardening judgments visited upon Israel's oppressors and the enemies of God, whose mercy they had rejected.

Chapters 12 to 15 reveal God's delivering judgments, redeeming His people from His wrath and from the power of their enemies, the Egyptians.

Chapters 16 to 18 make known to us the steps in Israel's journey, and the Lord's merciful care from the Red Sea to Sinai.

III. Chapters 19 to 40 unfold the relationship of God to Israel under law and under grace.

Chapters 19 to 24 tell us of the covenant of works under which Israel placed themselves (ch. 19:8; 24:7).

Chapters 25 to 31 describe the Tabernacle and its gracious appointments as the Lord's sanctuary in the midst of His redeemed people.

Chapters 32 to 34 record the fearful failure of Israel to keep the law, God's judgment and forgiveness of their sin.

Chapters 35 to 40 tell how the Tabernacle was built, set up and filled with the glory of the Lord.

Purpose.

The book of Exodus was written for us to illustrate typically the necessity, method and purpose of redemption.

I. Chapter 1 pictures our sad state in the place of bondage to Satan and sin, while God's sovereign grace kept up from being destroyed that we might be saved by hearing and believing the Gospel (Rom. 3:10-18; 2:4; Acts 14:17; 17:30; Rom. 8:29, 30; 4:5; Eph. 2:8, 9).

II. Chapters 2 to 18 reveal typically for us the steps in God's great plan of redemption from the advent of the Deliverer to our being brought into the fellowship with God (1 Peter 3:18).

Chapters 2 to 6 foreshadow the coming of Christ to deliver, not only Israel, but His Church from the pain and place of bondage (Rom. 4:25; 11:26-29).

Chapters 7 to 11 typify the hardening judgments of God upon those who reject His mercy individually, or dispensationally in the time of the great Tribulation (John 3: 36; 2 Thess. 2:8-10).

Chapters 12 to 15 figure God's judgments on Calvary delivering us from His wrath and the power of sin (Rom. 5:6; 6:6).

Chapters 16 to 18 mark out for us the steps in the pathway of faith and the mercy and grace that forgives and cares for us even though we doubt God's promises (1 Peter 1:7; 5:7).

III. Chapters 19 to 40 illustrate the covenant relationship and the place of fellowship into which God has brought us through Jesus Christ (Heb. 10:15-20; 4:16; 9:24).

Chapters 19 to 24 reveal the law written in our hearts, because we are delivered from its penalty and given a new life through Christ (Rom. 6:23; 7:4).

Chapters 25 to 31 typify every step in God's great plan of redemption as accomplished through the person and work of Christ (Heb. 8:5; 9:24; 10:1).

Chapters 32 to 34 illustrate man's fearful failure under law, and the sovereign grace that forgives that sin on the basis of the cross (Rom. 8:3; 6:23).

Chapters 35 to 40 speak to us typically of the Builder and building now being framed together for a habitation of God in the Spirit (Eph. 2:19-22; 1 Peter 2:5).

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

III.

ADMITTED that the Scriptures set forth the coming of the Lord, may there be some interpretation of the purpose, consistent with present ideals of expediency? It is too great a strain upon the intellectually-disposed to accept a literal descent from heaven. Hence, there may be ground for the Spiritual Fulfillment of the Promise.

Does He not come all the time, in our seasons of prayer, our common worship, in our immediate need of His succour and supply? Surely, that is true. We may look for the realization of His presence as promised in John 14:21, 23. He must come to the closed heart, standing at the door (Rev. 3:20). But is that what He meant; what the first disciples understood? Does it embrace the clouds of heaven, the holy hosts of heavenly messengers, the voice of the archangel? Intelligence at this juncture should not be difficult to exercise. Dearly as we treasure His nearness in our every emergency, highly as we prize our fellowship with Him in our daily walk and service, we are not free to thus exhaust the provision He has made to come and receive us unto Himself (John 14:3). Then there is the theory that

He Did Come at the Destruction of Jerusalem.

Failure to weigh testimony, to discern things that differ, lie at the root of this hypothesis. The implication arises from the record in Matt. 24 and the parallel passages in the other Gospels. Let us be reminded that the disciples had asked our Lord a composite question and that He had given them a composite answer. Their query was (after He had predicted the fall of Jerusalem), "When shall these things be? What shall be the sign of Hhy coming and of the end of the age?" (Matt. 24:1-3.) The destruction of that Jerusalem was but a part of the entire perspective. A combination of circumstances is embraced in the completed picture. This introduces to us a factor in the study of prophecy, that events described in any single forecast may on close analysis be found to involve widely separated periods of time. So there is ground for holding that not alone the holy city then existent, which was destroyed by Titus in the year 70 A. D., but a yet future Jerusalem is involved in the focus upon which our Lord draws the lens of time. Years ago, this was taught and accepted in naked faith; for until the year 1845, the Turks permitted but three hundreds Jews to dwell within the sacred precincts of their hallowed walls. But slowly did this restriction cease to act; until with the acceleration of the Zionistic Movement inaugurated at the close of the last century, the Jewish population has reached over sixty thousand. With the British mandate and the expressed sympathy of Lord (Balfour) Oxford, the impetus has reached a momentum inconceivably rapid. The city, according to Jeremiah's prediction (Jer. 31:38) has been built from the tower of Hananiel to the gate of the corner; and other elements of fulfilled prophecy are being enacted. A Jewish seminary connected with the new University, with courses in Levitical rites and ceremonies, the growing sense that at last Jerusalem is to become the center of power and splendor, are some of the evidences of the awakening among the Jews for a revival of the former life of the nation. High hopes are throbbing in the breasts of the people that the God of Israel will soon come to His holy habitation. That the Jerusalem now being in process will endure another devastation will occupy our study later, but must be mentioned now, in connection with our Lord's prophecy in Matthew. To strengthen the interpretation we are offering, we turn next to His admonition,

"This Nation Shall Not Pass 'Til all These Things be Fulfilled".

Students of prophecy turn to this ethnological miracle with a warming assurance of the correctness of the above translation. The word "generation" in Matt. 24:34, does not signify the then existing population, as we understand the term. "Genea", which our Lord employs, belongs to the classification of race, descent, people or nation. That these persecuted, down-trodden folk should have survived the cruel dispensations of their unhappy past, while all the over-mastering powers that harrowed them have gone into decay, is the marvel of history and vindication of our Lord's perspective. And relevant to this passage in Matt. 24 is the preceding event with which ch. 23 closes. Weeping over the impenitent city, he exclaimed, "Ye shall not see me until ye say, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord' " (Matt. 23:37-39). This we shall see more clearly as we meet to its fuller treatment. Another theory is that

Our Lord Comes When We Die.

On the contrary, all the Scriptural references indicate that at death we go to Him. "Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ" (Phil. 1:23). "Absent from the body, present with the Lord" (2 Cor. 5:6-8). He assumed that His disciples should follow Him in due time (John 13:24; 17:24). St. Paul, at the close of his dedicated life, declared his expectation of going to be with his Lord, "The time of my departure is at hand" (2 Tim. 4:7, 8).

Then, the most popular interpretation is that, allowing that He will come as He promised,

He Cannot Come Until the World Has Been Converted.

Perhaps the advocates of this theory would now say "Christianized". This, we should heartily endorse if it were the truth as stated by our Lord and believed by His apostles. The very reverse, however, is the portraiture. Why should He in forecasting the long visioned outline of latter-day conditions have lamented, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find the faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8). Is there any indication of a world conversion in Matt. 24 of which we have made brief investigation? When St. Paul discerned the day, he did not trust to his own convictions, but insisted, "The Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and to doctrines which demons teach" (1 Tim. 4:1). See also 2 Tim. 3:1-5. When he writes, "Ye which are troubled rest with us; when our Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7-10), he is far from portraying a converted world. St. Peter gave no uncertain sound in his warnings in 2 Peter 2:1-22. No description of ungodliness could be more definite, as Jude also shows. Soviet Russia is including Atheism in its grade school curriculum. All this indicates a humiliating defeat. Besides which, the Christianization of the world has not kept pace with the growth of its population.

When Lyman Abbott was asked if Christianity is a failure, he answered, "I do not know. It has never been tried". And why? The message of the Church has lost its apostolic ring of uncertainty. It has turned from the simplicity that is in Christ to "another gospel" (Gal. 1:8, 9), the social gospel, which is not the "power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16), but an accommodating compromise with the spirit of unbelief. When Dr. Josiah Strong, a quarter of a century ago, issued his pronunciamento that the era of the regeneration of the individual had closed, and that of society had begun, he little anticipated the coming of the eventual scorching, scornful reproach of Dr. Douglas, who sounded the knell of the Church's social importance in the challenging charge recently uttered, "Hand over the torch!" Our universities are contributing factors in this declension. In addition to this lamentable estate, alien cults are eating into the very vitals of the Church, adopting her nomenclature, simulating her message.

But this is all as our Lord and His apostles foresaw it; and confirms the exactitude of their forecast. Any one scanning the first chapters of the Acts would promptly prognosticate the immediate turning of the world to the Saviour of mankind. But subsequent events demonstrated the futility of that expectation.

There is but one course to pursue. Return to the New Testament order in simple faith in its supremacy for the redemption of the world through the Cross and its correlated sequences. There will be, there can be, no universal turning to the Lord until He comes to establish world-wide righteousness. Meanwhile we pray and labor, trustingly and cheerfully to aid sin-sick humanity to recognize and receive its Great Physician, "looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13).

THOMAS CRANMER, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY

W. F. Bumsted

WITH the General Convention and the revision of the Book of Common Prayer so near at hand, it might be as well to understand something of the life of Thomas Cranmer who gave us our First Book of Common Prayer.

Thomas Cranmer was born July 2, 1489, at Aslacton, Nottinghamshire. He was the son of a country gentleman. He received his first education at home, and after his father's death at the early age of fourteen was sent to Jesus College, Cambridge, studying until the age of twenty-two Sophistry and logic. Afterwards studying Erasmus and Latin authors for four or five years, until the writings of Luther began to engage public attention. He studied these until 1523, when he took his degree of Doctor of Divinity. Thus he accumulated vast stores of learning that stood him in good stead later on in life.

Cranmer first comes to notice in 1529. In this year the plague raged at Cambridge and most of the members of the university left for other parts of England. Cranmer went to Waltham Abbey and resided with a Mr. Cressy. Several members of the King's party stayed a night at Waltham at the house of Mr. Cressy. During the conversation the matter of the King's divorce came up and Cranmer remarked "that the question ought to be discussed and decided by the authority of the Word of God and might be done just as well in England as in Rome". His remark was passed along to the King. It speedily brought him in favor with Henry VIII. It showed Cranmer as the one man who would uphold his opinion based on the authority of Scripture against the claim of the Pope of Rome. In 1529 Cranmer was despatched to Rome and bore himself well. He contended that the Bishop of Rome had no authority to dispense with the Word of God.

During Cranmer's absence on the continent, Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, died, and the King's choice fell on Cranmer. On March 30, 1533, Cranmer appeared in the Chapter House at Westminster and there openly and publicly made a protestation as a precaution that his oath should not be misinterpreted. This protest was witnessed by five civilians and ecclesiastics and is printed in full by Strype. If this oath is examined it will be found that the decided declarations of fealty to the Pope usually inserted in such espiscopal oaths are absent.

After receiving eleven Bulls from the Pope, which he gave to the King, Cranmer was consecrated Archbishop of Canterbury, with the usual form and ceremony of the Church of Rome. Later on, when he received the Pallium, he again took the oath under the same protestation.

Cranmer has been assailed both by the Romanists and Anglo-Catholics for these things. But it seems Cranmer throughout firmly believed in his own mind that Henry VIII was supreme head of the Church of England.

In 1534 he pressed in convocation for a translation of the Bible. In August 1537, a new and revised translation of the Bible was printed. As soon as Cranmer received copies of this new edition he sent one to Cromwell, requesting him to obtain permission from the King that it might be bought and read within the realm.

By Royal authority, commandment was made "that every curate should possess an English Bible, that he might learn to know God and to instruct his parishioners, and that every Abbey should have six".

In 1539 a revised edition called Cranmer's Great Bible was published.

In 1536, the Ten Articles came out. They were largely due to Cranmer. These marked the first doctrinal independence of the Church of England. The forerunner of our own Thirty-nine Articles.

Cranmer's guidance is again seen in the Bishop's Book of 1537.

In 1539 the Six Articles were introduced—Roman in thought, practice and ideals. The outcome of an anti-Protestant reaction. Cranmer fought against these and the persecutions that followed.

In 1544 Cranmer gave to the Church the Litany in English. These inaugurated Worship, that is, Prayer, in church, in English.

Cranmer developed during this period very strong anti-papal, or rather, evangelical ideas, some, no doubt, brought about by his contact with Peter Martyr, Regius Professor of Divinity, Oxford, 1548, and Martin Bucer, Regius Professor at Cambridge, who were both strongly Protestant.

This development was the moving power behind his actions which, during 1549 and 1552, produced the greatest work of Cranmer, the Prayer Book in English, printed in 1549, revised in 1552, and as such to all intents and purposes the same today.

It is sometimes questioned as to whether Cranmer was the moving spirit in this work. But if we remember that Cranmer saw the errors of Rome, that Cranmer was the best educated of the Protestant reformers, that Cranmer was, above all, guided by God and His Holy Word, then there should not be much doubt that it was his mind and his brain that ruled the committee of revision, for as we read the results his touch can be repeatedly seen.

On the death of Edward VI and accession of Queen Mary, there came about a series of events that made Cranmer's life a sad and unhappy one. Cranmer was charged with celebrating the Roman Mass at Canterbury. Cranmer wrote a deniol and soon after this he was sent to the Tower, and confined with Ridley, Latimer and Bradford.

At length it was determined by the Queen that he should be removed to Oxford, there to dispute with the doctors and divines. The manner in which these disputations were carried out is described in a letter of Cranmer which he sent to the Council:

"Dr. Chadsley was appointed to dispute against me, but his disputation was so confused that I never knew the like, every man bringing forth what he liked, without order; and such haste was made that no answer could be suffered to be taken to any argument before another brought a new argument."

The matter was rushed through and all three were condemned of heresy.

On September 12, 1555, Cranmer was brought before Dr. Brooks, Bishop of Gloucester, the Pope's sub-delegate. Dr. Brooks charged Cranmer with heresy, treason and adultery. The latter charge was always brought by Romanists against Protestant clergy. Cranmer answered their charges and then was cited to appear at Rome within "four score days", there to make his personal answer. On the fourth of December he was declared to be contumacious, that is, willingly absent, and sentenced to death.

According to Fox and others Cranmer recanted six times, but yet in spite of his recantation, the Queen intended to put him to death.

When we think of Cranmer's recantations, we must visualize a man, nearly seventy years of age, brow-beaten by the enemies of his Church, weakened by imprisonment, depressed in spirit, sick in body, and in mind, and in this state a prey to the strategists of Rome, Garcina and Sydall, and so signing his recantations, which in his heart and soul he did not believe.

In closing, let us look at the reason for Cranmer's death and also that of Ridley and Latimer.

To see this exactly, we must examine the three articles that were submitted to them, and on which their fate hung:

First: In the Sacrament of the Altar, by virtue of the divine word uttered by the priest, the natural body of Christ, conceived by the Virgin Mary, is really present under the spiecies of Bread and Wine, and also his natural blood.

Second: After consecration the substance of bread and wine no longer remainest, neither any other substance, save only the substance of Christ, God and Man.

Third: In the Mass there is a life-giving propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of the living as well as of the dead.

Their signature and belief of these three articles were required.

They replied: "We are not minded to turn," and so were burnt for denying the doctrine of Transubstantiation and maintaining the doctrine of the Anglican Communion, as set forth in the Services and Articles of our Religion in our Prayer Books.

Let us, therefore, hold fast to the same doctrines of our Church and leave no loophole for the errors to creep in, by the removal of the Articles, and by alteration of our services and our doctrines.

Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, was burned March 21, 1556, at Oxford, opposite Ballial College.

We are told that when he was bound to the stake, and the fire lit that he thrust in his right hand and waited until it was consumed saying, "This hand hath offended this unworthy right hand". And in dying repeated the words of St. Stephen, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit".

Thus died the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, for a faith he loved, for a Church he helped to purify and a doctrine that he gave us.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Psalm 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by G. S. Wright:

> "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee" (Isaiah 26:3).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

GOVERNOR SMITH'S AMERICAN CATHOLICISM: By Charles C. Marshall. Dodd, Mead and Company. Per copy, $2.50; postpaid, $2.60.

Mr. Marshall has again laid the American citizen under obligation by his clear setting forth of the real issues and principles involved in the question as to the conflict between the official declarations of the Roman Church and the principles upon which the modern state is founded. He first, by quoting the utterance of Governor Smith in reply to himself, aligns him with the modern theory of the state, and then goes on to inquire whether we can accept the word of an individual on this question as opposed to the official statements of the authority of the Church.

He answers Dr. Van Dyke's argument, and proves how foolish it is to think that the American voter is to be scared away from a calm discussion of these principles by any falsely imputed charges of "bigotry or intolerance". He maintains the right of the voter to discuss any subject that may affect or bias the candidates' judgment, whether that bias would come from the candidate's own personal views or the views of the sect in which he was trained.

He quotes the formularies of the Roman Church to prove that she does claim jurisdiction in moral matters over her subjects and that that control is a higher one than that of the State. This jurisdiction is a foreign one that claims to supersede the control of the State. He then notes an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York and approved by the Governor March 7, 1928, that gives the Archbishop of the Archdiocese of New York, the Vicar-General thereof, and the Chancellor thereof, and their successors, power to form a corporation to take and hold free of taxation any property, real or personal, without limitation as to amount or value except such as may hereafter be prescribed by law; to apply such property and the income thereof in such a manner as in the judgment of its trustees will best promote its objects.

This act vests vast properties, free of taxation, in a group of men who are directly appointed and controlled from Rome, and violates the autonomy of a sovereign state.

He lists other utterances of the Governor that are in direct contradiction to the official statements of his Church, and concludes that his Church is still unaffected by his liberalism.

He then notes the reaction that Governor Smith's words have had in the Old World, and the feeling there expressed that these words are out of harmony with late events there, notably the Pope's condemnation of L'Action Francaise. The question occurs whether American Catholics are not enjoying a special privilege from the Holy See and whether they allow the Governor's words to stand for the time being as a matter of expediency rather than of right. In view of events Mr. Marshall feels that we should have a clear statement from high Roman authority, proving that they recognize officially this American Catholicism of the Governors. He feels "Within the Roman Church great changes may be developing toward 'American' Catholicism, but of it Rome gives no sign of consciousness, and the Supreme Pontiff within the current year reaffirms the decrees of 1870 as integral in Catholic faith".

In the beginning of this review it was said that we are indebted to Mr. Marshall and it should be repeated. Here is a book that lifts the present issues above personalities and discusses the matter in the light of principles that underlie our views of government. The author, therefore, refuses to be turned aside by cries of intolerance, or to be led into intolerant statements himself, and at the same time refuses to be satisfied with the merely personal assurances of one candidate, but rightly sees that the threat to our institutions will not be entirely removed until there is an official change of heart from the authorities at Rome. We may all hope with the author, that the pressure of the opinion of our freedom-loving American Catholics will impel even unchanging Rome to alter her age-long polity.

KENYA, OUR NEWEST COLONY: By J. A. Wray. Marshall Brothers, Ltd., London and Edinburgh.

The author was for thirty years a missionary with the Church Missionary Society and assisted in the foundation of an enterprise that has become famous wherever missions are known. The beginnings of his labors were in conjunction with the martyred Bishop Haunington, and his memory extends back to a time when that section of Africa was virgin territory for missionary work.

The book deals with the depredations of the slave traders, the uncertainties of life among people who are in the grip of superstition, and with the ravages of famine and pestilence among people whose lives are entirely lawless. One realizes what triumphs God must have won in the life of the author to keep him courageous in the midst of these difficulties, and one is permitted to see, later in the book, pictures of the results wrought under God by the preaching of the Gospel in converting these people from superstittuion to light.

PRAYER BOOK REVISION.

Mr. Editor:

The proposed changes for the revised Prayer Book fall into two groups. The first includes those which are vital and significant, because they affect the fundamental doctrines of the Church. The second consists of three which are comparatively superficial and immaterial, because not concerned with the basic elements of Christian faith, but with varying conditions of life. Such are the omission of the Forms of Prayer for use at sea and in prisons and the addition of prayers for social service, good government and world peace.

The one salient and striking feature of the revision is that nearly all the changes in the first group, the vital and significant changes, lead toward a common goal. Prayers for the dead have been added and the new burial service and the office for the visitation of the sick encourage their use. Such prayers have been associated for centuries with belief in purgatory, a state of suffering from which souls can be freed by the saying of masses.

Provision is made for the administration of Holy Communion in connection with the marriage and burial services, thus encouraging the introduction of nuptial and requiem masses and also masses for the dead.

The additions to and transpositions in the Communion Service bring that office nearer to the Roman Catholic "canon of the mass".

The omission from the Prayer Book and consequent abolition of the Articles of Religion, which renounce masses as "blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits", obviously clears the way for the introduction of the mass.

That additions, transpositions and the one really significant omission should all promote the revival of masses is a coincidence so impressive as to carry the conviction that it cannot be accidental, that behind it lies a definite purpose to restore the mass, the great goal of Anglo-Catholic endeavor. It affords cogent and weighty evidence that the revision of the Prayer Book in nearly all essential particulars is being made under Anglo-Catholic influence, to realize Anglo-Catholic aims.

When revision was begun in 1913, General Convention definitely promised the Church that no changes should be made affecting doctrine. In spite of that pledge, many alterations aim at the ultimate substitution of the half-pagan mass for the Holy Communion, a dignified and Christian service. Mr. Morehouse, the Anglo-Catholic, must have known of the Convention's solemn promise to the Church, yet he introduced in the Convention of 1925 the resolution to suppress the Articles of Religion, the official formulary of the Church's faith. He thus initiated the most sweeping possible change in doctrine, except the abolition of the Apostle's and the Nicene Creeds. How he and his supporters in the Convention can reconcile their action with the promise that revision should leave doctrine undisturbed is difficult to see.

The revision was undertaken, moreover, according to official statement, "to enrich and modernize" the Prayer Book. The present method of "enriching" it is to abolish the Articles of Religion, the Church's confession of faith, which gives our belief its reformed or Protestant character. The present method of "modernizing" it is to clear the way for usages and beliefs, which were rejected four centuries ago as errors and anachronisms, such as the mass with its magic, blood-sacrifice, idolatry and God-eating, pagan practices all. The more the Prayer Book is "enriched", the poorer it becomes in evangelical religion, in Scriptural and Apostolic Christianity. The more it is "modernized", the closer it approaches to the paganism of antiquity. We can appreciate the unconscious and ironical humor of the revisionists, but not the logic of their procedure. The fact is that Anglo-Catholic influence has discredited and confounded the revision.

Nowhere is this more evident than in the treatment of the burial service. As pointed out above, this office is used as a means to restore masses for the dead, while arrogant ecclesiasticism of the Roman and Anglo-Catholic type yet holds sway in the rubric which forbids the reading of the service for those who are unbaptized or have committed suicide, a prohibition utterly repugnant to the spirit of the day, as well as to the spirit of Christ. A revision marred by gross inconsistency, a revision which seems to mask Anglo-Catholic designs beneath progressive changes of a minor or trivial character, cannot be accepted with confidence and a quiet mind by the Church at large.

The leaders of General Convention are now confronted with the question whether they will yield to Anglo-Catholic pressure and carry through the proposed revision, or whether they will abandon, or greatly modify it, and thus preserve the peace of the Church. They have before their eyes as impressive a warning of the impending menace as any deliberative assembly can need. They know that the Church of England is demoralized, disrupted in sentiment, without solidarity of feeling, and all as the result of Anglo-Catholic aggressions. Heavily and squarely on their shoulders rests the responsibility to decide whether the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States shall be thrown into similar confusion, whether it shall retain its present faith and therewith the loyalty of its members; or whether thousands of them shall be estranged through the wholly needless introduction of alien and archaic usages. To settle this question wisely will require other than Anglo-Catholic counsel, for this party is ready to sacrifice the faith and welfare of the Church to an infatuation for Romanism.

That General Convention can best promote the welfare of the Church, material and spiritual, by abandoning the proposed revision seems highly probable. The other alternative is to proceed in a sincere, ingenuous and single-hearted manner. The present revision is fraught with the worst possibilities for the Church.

RAISED ON SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN.

Mr. Editor:

I was largely raised on The Southern Churchman. A dear aunt of mine, Mrs. Cate Leigh Powell, subscribed to it for fifty-five years, until her death in 1904. She was my god-mother. As Miss Cate Leigh she moved from Amelia County, Virginia, to Yalobusha County, Mississippi, by carriage and wagon in October-November, 1838. Six weeks were required to make the trip. My childhood training was under a Christian and Churchman father, my university training was received at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee. Have been actively engaged in Church work from childhood and am now the Junior Warden of St. Paul's Cathedral here. I am now past seventy-five years old. Until 1913 my Church work was in my native diocese, Mississippi. For nineteen years was a member of the Board of Trustees at the University of the South. I flatter myself to say still would be had I remained a citizen of Mississippi.

I admire the stand you take regarding Church teaching and practice. I believe along that line safety lies.

NEW PRAYER BOOK.

Mr. Editor:

I was surprised on reading the letter, in this week's (September 22) Southern Churchman, of Mr. Whitaker, to find that the proposed New Prayer Book is now the authorized Prayer Book in our Church, that it has already displaced the 1892 Prayer Book.

Let me say that I do not intend to use the new Prayer Book, if it contains prayers for the dead, the proposed committal in the burial service, and other popish teachings. My conscience forbids me doing such a thing.

At my ordination to the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, I did not promise to teach Romanism; I pledged myself to teach only the Word of God, as set forth by our Church reformers, and I do feel that a great injustice is done me, by compelling me to teach doctrines that are contrary to the Bible, and in disagreement with the doctrines set forth by our Church reformers.

If the prayers for the dead, etc., etc., etc., are only made permissible if not compulsory, I do not object to them. But as a loyal Protestant Evangelical Churchman, I do resent the attempt being made by the popish party to compel me to use these prayers, etc.

I would like to know definitely, and authoritatively, if the proposed Prayer Book be passed by the Convention, shall I and other Evangelicals be compelled to use this new Prayer Book?

Do the bishops of this Church wish to see a repetition of Black Bartholomew's Day in 1662, when 2,000 godly and scholarly clergymen were expelled from the mother Church of England? If they do, why do they not speak out frankly and tell us there is no place in the Protestant Episcopal Church for an Evangelical Churchman?

I have lost all confidence in so-called "catholics". I served seven years in a pro-Roman Diocese, and am familiar with the Jesuitical workings of Catholics.

I repeat, my conscience will not permit me to use prayers for the dead, etc., etc. "From the Bishop of Rome and all his detestable enormities, good Lord, deliver us."

Surely the members of the Convention will consider seriously any attempt that may be made to force upon our congregations a pro-Roman Prayer Book, against the expressed wishes of the people.

Surely our bishops will take warning from the unsuccessful attempt the archbishops and bishops of the Church of England made to force a popish Prayer Book upon their congregations.

"Protestant".

REASON TO BE PROUD.

Mr. Editor:

I wish to say that I am delighted with The Southern Churchman, and intend to always take it. I agree with the Churchmanship and spirit of The Southern Churchman absolutely. I wish all of our Southern Church people took it. You have reason to be proud of your paper, and the opposition to Romanism.

General Convention Notice.

All clergymen attending the General Convention, whether as clerical deputies or visitors, as well as members of the National Council, are invited to march in the procession at the Opening Service in the open-air amphitheatre on Washington Cathedral Close Wednesday morning, October 10, at 10:30. White Stoles will be worn on this occasion. Robing rooms will be provided as follows on the Cathedral Close:

Bishops—Saint Alban's Church.

Clerical Deputies—Whitby Hall.

Members of the National Council—Cathedral Library.

Diocesan Clergy—Saint Alban's Parish House.

Visiting Clergy—Chapel of the Resurrection in Cathedral Crypt.

Members of the above groups in procession do not require any tickets.

Lay delegates to the Convention will receive tickets to the Service in their envelopes when they register. They will be given reserved seats in the front of the amphitheatre.

All taking part in the procession are requested to be robed prior to 10 A. M. The procession will be by fours, except in the case of Bishops who, as is customary, will walk by twos.

Help Needed in Florida.

Church Missions House,
New York City,
September 27, 1928.

To My Fellow Church Folk:

I have received the following letter:

"West Palm Beach, Fla.,
September 23, 1928.

My Dear Bishop Mann:

Just arrived this morning; was away during storm; my daughter answered your telegram of sympathy. I suppose you have received it ere now. Thanks for your comforting words.

Though we have suffered and lost much, yet, faith in God remains. Held services today in the only dry room in our parish house. The church is a total wreck. The chancel is the only part of the structure remaining. I fear that the damage to the parish house is beyond repair. When the roof of the church fell, it fell across the roof of the parish house, and tore great holes into the building. The wind and the rain warped and twisted the floors. I would recommend that it be torn down.

As for our new rectory, which is adjacent to the parish house, the roofing is gone and the ceilings on the walls and overhead are badly warped. We have been hard hit on our rectory; for, during the August storm, the building suffered a similar fate, only, this time, it was worse. It cost $300 to restore the roofing and to remove the warped ceiling. Now it will take at least $600. to get the rectory fit for my family to occupy.

While we are not discouraged, yet, with our present indebtedness coupled with the cost of necessary repairs, we feel it deeply. However, we appreciate your godly counsel, and would appreciate whatever you may find it possible to do for us among friends.

My flock is scattered, many without homes and still without money or clothing. Pray for us. Believe me to be

Faithfully,
J. R. Lewis,
Priest-in-Charge St. Patrick's Church,
West Palm Beach, Fla.

P. S.—Perhaps these figures may be of service: Church estimated at $35,000; parish house at $18,000 ($6,000 present indebtedness); rectory, costing $3,500 ($3,500 unpaid); total indebtedness, $9,500."

The writer of this letter is a priest of ability, honor and devotion. I can rely absolutely upon his statements. I hope they will bring sympathy and aid sufficient for the present needs.

The Church folk of South Florida have suffered calamity upon calamity during the past two years and are unable to do much towards repairing the damages of the recent hurricane.

I ask, therefore, for contributions to be sent to my Coadjutor Bishop Wing, who has immediate charge of all our Colored Missions, and I trust that the response now will be sufficient for the imperative demands.

I could multiply words, but what would be the use? The facts speak for themselves.

Cameron Mann,
Bishop of South Florida.

Bishop Matthews Resumes His Work.

The Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, Bishop of New Jersey, who was obliged last March on account of serious illness to designate the Coadjutor, Bishop Knight, as the Ecclesiastical Authority until he should be sufficiently recovered to resume his work, has notified the Standing Committee that he is now able to take his full duty as Bishop of New Jersey and that he will resume his work on October 1. In his letter he put on record his "deep sense of gratitude to Bishop Knight for the generous way in which he has given himself to the work of the diocese during my disability. He has undertaken large additional responsibilities and much extra work in the most cheerful spirit and I feel that his administration of the diocese has been very wise". The Standing Committee received the announcement with gratitude at the Bishop's recovery and cordially re-echoed his appreciation of Bishop Knight.

President Will Address Convention.

President Coolidge will speak before the Triennial Convention of the Church at Washington. No day has been decided on, but the announcement is made by Bishop Freeman, of Washington, by authority of the President.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Washington Ready.

Washington, the capital of the nation, and often called the Convention City, is soon to witness another and perhaps the greatest Convention in its history. For weeks Washington people in and out of the Church have been speaking of "The Convention", not designating which particular one, because this seems to take precedence over the others. Secular papers are rarely without some notice of it. Clergymen in their chancels and through their weekly bulletins are talking about it. Business details are being cared for in downtown offices by outstanding laymen and laywomen. The great climax is almost at hand, and all is in readiness. Open-air services, if October weather in Washington follows its usual way, will be, perhaps, a dominant feature of the Convention. In case of unfavorable weather, the Washington Auditorium will be substituted for the open-air theatre.

Music for the several services will be provided by combined choirs of the churches. All music at the Cathedral will be under the direction of Edgar Priest, Cathedral Organist, who has arranged for orchestra and band accompaniment for the out-of-doors services.

Adolf Torovsky, organist of Epiphany Church, will be in charge of the music of the services held in Epiphany Church, and is also arranging and conducting the music to be used in connection with the two large dramatic productions of the Convention, "Adam", to be presented by the Actors Guild of New York, and "The Cross Triumphant", by Mrs. Minnegerode Andrews.

The Brothernood of St. Andrew local committee carried on a piece of intensive work during the last few days preceding their Convention, and by personal visits to the parishes, brought to the people a more definite understanding of their program and plans.

The open-air mass meeting on October 7 will be the first of its kind during this Convention and will, in a measure, "set the pace" for those to follow.

Parish organizations in the Diocese of Washington, including the Girls' Friendly Society, Boy and Girl Scout Troops, Daughters of the King, Church School membership and others have been invited to march in procession at this service and occupy seats reserved for them.

Daughters of the King.

Epiphany Church will be the scene of the Eighteenth Triennial Convention of the Daughters of the King, which will begin on October 5, at 3 P. M., with a quiet hour, conducted by the Rev. Hendree Harrison, rector of Christ Church, Jacksonville, Fla.

The Daughters will hold a fellowship tea in the Willard room of Epiphany Parish House at four o'clock, to which all Daughters are invited. Then at eight o'clock in the evening, the real opening session of the Daughters' Convention will take place with addresses of welcome by National and Diocesan officers. The chief address of this session will be made by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop, who will speak on "The Vision and Mission of the Daughters of the King". Business sessions and other services will follow the next day, October 6.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Clergy Conference.

A Clergy Conference was held in the Cathedral of the Incarnation on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 25 and 26. The Rev. Dr. William H. Milton made an address on Tuesday evening, on "Evangelism". Holy Communion was celebrated at 7:30 A. M. Wednesday, after which breakfast was served in the parish hall. During the morning Bishop Helfenstein talked on "The Church's Program in the Diocese", and the Rev. Dr. Schmuck addressed the Conference on "The General Convention and the Church's Program"—"Parish Education and Enlistment"—and "Practical Plans for Parish Problems". In the afternoon the Rev. Dr. Milton made an address on "A Priest in the Church of God".

Woman's Auxiliary.

The Rt. Rev. Harry Roberts Carson, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Haiti, will be the speaker at the opening meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Memorial Church, Baltimore.

The Presentation of the United Thank Offering from the women of Maryland will be made at a service in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, on Wednesday morning, October 3. The Holy Communion will be celebrated by Bishop John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop of Maryland, assisted by Bishop Helfenstein, the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, rector of Emmanuel Church, and the Rev. Harry Stansbury Weyrich.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, are arranging to have Pullman buses run from Baltimore to Washington for several sessions of the General Convention. These busses will enable many Maryland folks to have an enjoyable trip to the Convention and will take them direct to the meeting places, thus making it very convenient.

The Day Nursery, under the direction of the Rev. George J. G. Kromer, Church of the Guardian Angel, Baltimore, is still doing a wonderful work. This summer the Nursery cared for about forty little ones.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, has received and accepted a call to St Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo. Dr. Brown holds several important diocesan offices, being secretary of the Standing Committee, a trustee of the Cathedral Foundation, member of the Board of Examining Chaplains, and a trustee of St. James' School. He came to Maryland about eight years ago and succeeded Bishop Cook, who was rector of St. Michael's and All Angels Church, when he was elected Bishop of Delaware. Dr. Brown has done wonderful work in Baltimore and he will be a loss to the Church in Maryland as well as the community.

The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, has received and accepted a call to St. Chrysostom's Church, Chicago, and will leave Baltimore about the first of December or January.

Dr. Abbott came to Baltimore in 1919, at which time the communicant list of Grace and St. Peter's was three hundred and eighty and the revenue about 22,000. Today the communicant list numbers 1,290 persons and the revenue for 1927 was about 128,000.

Dr. Abbott is a member of the National Council and has been elected a deputy to the General Convention. He has been most active in all diocesan affairs and his enthusiasm and loyalty will be greatly missed both in his parish as well as the diocese at large.

Emmanuel Church Responds to the "Call".

The rector of Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, Maryland, in preaching Sunday, September 16, on the "call" of the prophet Isaiah and his response, referred to the two young men who were assisting him in the service that morning as officially appointed lay readers, both of whom are candidates for Holy Orders and entering the Theological Seminary this week to begin their theological studies. Both of them are college degree men. One of them is the rector's son and goes to the Virginia Seminary, the other goes to the General Seminary. Two other young men, as postulants for the ministry from Emmanuel Church are taking their college or preparatory training.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop

Memorials Dedicated and to be Dedicated at Old Fletcher Church.

On Sunday afternoon, September 2, at four o'clock, there was held a "Christian Reid" Festival at Calvary Episcopal Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C. To honor this great North Carolina novelist, who gave to Western North Carolina the name, "The Land of the Sky", a bronze tablet was unveiled in the "Open Air Westminster of the South", at Calvary Church. Dr. Archibald Henderson, of the University of North Carolina, was the speaker. The Rev. Louis J. Bour, of the Roman Catholic Church in Asheville; the Rev. George Watkins, of the Roman Catholic Church in Hendersonville; Dr. Leland Cook, of the Christian Church in Asheville, and other Protestant ministers assisted the rector of Calvary Church, the Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., in the service inside the church. There was an elaborate musical program rendered also. On Sunday afternoon, September 9, at four o'clock, the Sidney Lanier Festival took place and a tablet was unveiled to the greatest of Southern poets, who spent the last days of his life in Western North Carolina. Noted musicians and speakers from Macon, Ga., the birthplace of Lanier, took part on the program. On Sunday afternoon, September 30, at four o'clock, the Arkansas Division, U. D. C., are to unveil a tablet to Albert Pike, Arkansas poet of the Confederacy, and an attractive program has been arranged by citizens of Little Rock and Benton, Ark. On Sunday afternoon, October 7, the Jewish people of Asheville are to unveil at this church a tablet to Zebulon Baird Vance, noted War Governor of North Carolina. Rabbi Moses P. Jacobson and the Jewish choirs of the Asheville synagogues are to assist the rector of Calvary Church in the service at Calvary Church.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Page returned to his office September 13, after a summer at Vineyard Haven, Martha's Vineyard, Mass. Mrs. Page will remain in the East until October, when she will meet the Bishop at Fall River, Mass., and motor with him to Washington. Bishop Page will preach in his old parish, St. John's, Fall River, on October 7.

Mrs. Robert N. Berry, sister of the former Diocesan Treasurer, Mr. R. McClelland Brady, and the daughter of the late George N. Brady, died suddenly at her home in Birmingham on July 16. Among the many bequests for religious and charitable purposes in Mrs. Brady's will was one of $5,000 for Camp Frisbie. The property used by the camp was given to the diocese by Mrs. Berry's father shortly before his death.

Mr. H. J. Maxwell Grylls, first alternate Deputy to General Convention from the Diocese of Michigan, has been appointed by Bishop Page to fill the vacancy in the delegation caused by the illness of Mr. C. R. Wells, of Bay City.

Miss Opal Willard is acting Superintendent of William House, Detroit, during the six months' leave of absence granted to Miss Wolbert by the Board of Directors.

The Episcopal Book Shop of the Diocese of Michigan has developed so rapidly during the past twelve months that it has been necessary to employ a full-time librarian to handle the business. Mrs. E. O. Hatfield is the Librarian with office at the Diocesan headquarters, 63 East Hancock Avenue.

Mr. Irwin C. Johnson, Director of Boys' Work and Executive Secretary of Young People's Work in the Diocese of Michigan, was married in Christ Church Cathedral, Hamilton, Ontario, on Saturday, September 1, by the R.t Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, Bishop of Niagara, to Miss Evelyn Gladys Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will reside in Birmingham, Mich., after their return from their wedding trip, October 1.

The Rev. Leonard P. Hagger has accepted Bishop Page's appointment as Archdeacon of the Diocese of Michigan to succeed the Rev. Charles L. Ramsay. Mr. Haggar came from Ontario to Michigan in 1923 to take charge of St. Jude's Church, Fenton. Under his leadership the parish has grown and a fine Church School has been established. A week-day school of religious education, one of the early ventures in this field of activity in the diocese, has been maintained for several years. Mr. Haggar will assume his new duties October 1. His office will be in the Diocesan House, 63 East Hancock Avenue, Detroit.

In two attractive booklets, "The Diocesan Program" and "The Church in Action", the Field Department of the Diocese of Michigan has set forth the history and present organization of the diocese, the program it presents for the coming year, and the help of various kinds that the diocesan forces are prepared to offer its parishes and people. The booklets, which compare favorably with similar productions of the National Field Department, will be used this autumn by study classes and discussion groups, in preparation for the Annual Forward Movement. They were edited by Mr. C. O. Ford, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Michigan.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Fall Convocation.

The Fall Convocation of the Diocese of Lexington will meet in Christ Church, Richmond, Kentucky, on November 7. The leader of the Conference will be the Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Newark, and Canon Missioner of the same Diocese.

The Cathedral Chapter of the Diocese will meet during the Convocation.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Memorial to Bishop Brown.

As a memorial to Bishop William Cabell Brown, seventh Bishop of Virginia, a beautiful stained glass window has been placed in the Chapel of the Virginia Theological Seminary. It represents Paul before Agrippa and several daily newspapers have published large pictures of it. The window is Gothic "three opening" of Tiffany favrile glass. The picture, which occupies the middle of the three panels, was designed and executed by the ecclesiastical department of the Tiffany Studios. It presents St. Paul as a small, bent man in a simple robe of deep rose, girdled with gold, the king and his wife on golden thrones and in richly colored raiment, the king leaning forward, intense interest expressed in his countenance. Festus, standing apart, spectators and attendants, the banner of Rome and a glimpse of tropical landscape through an archway, make the background. The outer panels are decorative. The window is the gift of Mrs. Henry B. Gilpen, of Winchester, and the dedicatory inscription says the giver, grateful for the Bishop's life and work, 'believes the blessed years of his service will be the permanent possession of those who came here to worship God".

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Died While Traveling.

Dean Howard W. Diller, his wife and daughter began a tour of the West in July. They got to California where Mrs. Diller deveolped appendicitis and was taken to Santa Monica Hospital. The doctors found it impossible to operate safely on account of Mrs. Diller's health. Other treatment seemed to be effective when peritonitis set in and caused her death. Mrs. Diller was Miss Susan Kline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kline, of Manheim, Pa. She was beloved by everybody in the large congregation of Trinity Church, Pottsville, of which congregation Dean Diller has been rector for more than twenty years.

The body was brought to Pottsville for burial. The services were in charge of Bishop Sterrett. Interment was in Pottsville Cemetery on Tuesday, August 28, 1928.

Bible Vacation Schools.

More Bible Vacation Schools were held this summer in the diocese than ever before. In a number of places they were a new thing and at first looked upon as propaganda for the Church. After the parents and children found out what they really were there were more applications for membership than could be handled. One rector said: "I have had the happiest July in my minsiter teaching, praying with and playing with the youngsters of the whole town."

Lord, we beseech Thee, grant Thy people grace to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil; and with pure hearts and minds to follow Thee, the only God, through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

THE CALL.

"Come unto me!" How oft that kingly call
Has fallen on ears unheeding: yet would all,
If bidden by an earthly monarch, speed
To obey the royal command, giving due heed
To suitable apparel, time and place,
That one lose naught set forth of royal grace.
Monarch bids subject—and the favour ends—
Nor can one him invite as friend with friends.

But we—O King of kings, Maker of all,
To Whom we owe allegiance—slight Thy call,
Or hesitate having no fitting robe:
Delay awhile, our consciences to probe,
Questioning worth; and so we do not come.
O Friend of sinners, let us seek Thy face,
O patient Saviour, draw us by Thy grace,
That we may run to Thee and take our place
'Mid the redeemed: Thy banner o'er us Love,
For dress Thy Righteousness; ne'er to remove
But feast with Thee, and find with Thee our Home.

Not worthy I, dear Lord, that Thou should'st come,
Yet—how I want Thee—enter, make Thy home
Within my heart: see, 'tis unclean and here
It needs Thy cleansing, and Thy gracious care
To furnish it: a throne, that Thou may'st reign;
A table—Thou Thyself must give the food;
'Tis dark, and Thou Thyself must bring the Light.
Come, only come, and then all will be right.

Abide, and fill the house; then ne'er again
Shall self have room, and Thou wilt make it good.
Now, 'tis not mine at all, but just for Thee
And for Thy purposes to be shown in me.
He, who Eternity inhabits, saith,
With him of contrite heart is My abode;
I will revive and heal, and he by faith
Find Heaven on earth because he walks with God."

Thought Lore.

Louis Deschamps.

To calm distemper, break unpleasant moods, and relieve the subtle strain of petty worries, there is no better way than simply to change the kind of thoughts with which the mind is filled. More attention should be given the problem of keeping an eye on one's thoughts, in order to exercise conscious control over conditions within the mental pilot house. Thoughts affect behaviour just as a rudder affects the course of a ship. Angry, irritable thoughts loosen the tongue in all manner of rash and harsh words. Sullen, bitter thoughts bring moods of distemper. Despondent, gloomy thoughts make the grouch. Once the individual forms the habit of introspection, mentally standing aside and observing himself, the spell of moods is broken. Since thoughts are the determining factors of behaviour, it is necessary to keep a supply of the most helpful kinds available for emergencies. The first purpose of conscious thought control is to divert the attention from the undesirable conditions often prevailing in the mental foreground. Uncontrolled thought circuits carry out the involuntary impulses of a mood. Who has not wondered at the ease with which some vicious or unhappy thought has permeated consciousness until the very deeds were done that were most detested and feared?

The mind is a wonderful place for individual exploration. Strange though it may seem, there is a vague consciousness by which one can view one's self almost impartially, like an observer in the mysterious functioning of one's own mind. It is the power of Will that may or may not succeed in securing command of the thoughts. Some fortunate minds are under such conscious control that they become noted for their serenity, strength of will, and wholesomeness of outlook. Long before the present days of psychological fads, Milton wrote the famous lines:

"The mind is its own place, and, in itself,
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven."

There is great pleasure and benefit in the accumulation of thought lore—thoughts of such power, beauty, and soothing effect that they serve as restoratives for nervous strain, or stimulants for mental lassitude. Such thoughts vary with individual minds and temperaments. The Bible contains thought lore that appeals to every human emotion. There are stirring calls to action, soothing psalms for meditation, profound truths for study, and comforting religion for all mankind. Nature inspires great thoughts, if one takes the time to learn the thought lore of sea and sky, trees and birds. It is more than mere poetic fancy that made Byron write of the "pleasure in the pathless woods" and the "rapture on the lonely shore". Thoughts of such depth refresh the soul. Like gardens that grow in beauty and fragrance, great works of literature offer their thought lore to all. It is the joy and privilege of every one to accumulate such an inward store of mental wealth that the mind becomes universal rather than narrow, humanitarian rather than selfish.

The most inspiring example of thought lore is the conception of human destiny contained in the teachings of Christianity. It inspires thoughts that counteract skepticism, pessimism, and the desolate aimlessness of philosophy. God within man! A religion of love and the universal brotherhood of man! Immortality! Such thoughts are dynamic.

In times of despondency, melancholy, and disillusionment, one should be able to retire within the mental sanctuary for such thoughts that may benefit the mood. Often the memory of happy, cheerful experiences can revive mental pictures of scenes and places impressive by their radiance of sunlight and joy. There are thoughts that disclose the ultimate pettiness of many worries, calming the soul like the view of some panorama of majestic hills. Imagine the passing of time, like the recurring seasons—one's own life will have ended, the cares of the moment appear quite unworthy of such ponderous thought. The pyramids, once swarming with the feverish toil of thousands of slaves, now stand mute and lifeless tombs.

When anger tears at the tongue and tightens the muscles, the mind is being drawn into an intensely narrow focus of attention. One "outside" thought can do wonders in checking the onslaught. A grim determination to keep silent gives time for thought. From the secret storehouse of thought lore may come a rescuing idea, even no more impressive than a conception of one's self as a fretful, petulant child. Enough! The spell is broken.

Self-control is a dictate of Christian living. It must begin with the thoughts themselves. One's thoughts are always with us, we can not escape them. They may be our pleasant companions, counsellors, and friends, or they may reproach us in the silent hours when the vague sensation of responsibility for conduct reminds us that "whatsoever a man soweth" might well be worded whatsoever a man thinketh.

"O God, My God!"

The flower-bud of prayer unfolds slowly in the soul of a child. Not that there is no certain sacred inclination to pray in the heart at a very early age. But while the bud is early set, the question is, When will it blossom? For many months the young child was present when mother prayed, but had no understanding of it, and not infrequently disturbed mother's prayer by crying. But at last the moment arrives when for the first time in prayer it undergoes a peculiar sensation and is impressed by what is holy. Tender mother piety tries to confirm this impression. And before long the child kneels down when mother kneels, and when he is put to bed the first efforts are made to teach him to pray himself. Then mother folds the little hands, closes the eyes, and says a simple prayer. Ten, twelve words. And the dear little one brokenly repeats them after her.

Here the form is ahead of the reality. The impression of reverence and awe before the Divine Majesty is there. A young child loves that first prayer. But the Eternal has not yet revealed Himself in a clearly conscious form to the heart. Hence a young child learns prayer to Jesus more quickly than direct prayer to the Most High God. He does not express in his little prayer anything original. He only repeats something, and when he first weaves something into his prayer himself, it is not worship, but the request for something that employs his childish attention. It is all, however, a speaking into an unknown holy sphere that is above or around his little bed. It is along a steady but slow development, and prayer from his own impulse to a God Who is to be personally addressed and Who, at least in a limited way, is personally known, is little seen, as a rule, before the tenth year.

What God Himself performed in the child's soul during those early years the holy angels know, but we do not. Only in the end the result becomes evident to us. And this begins to show itself about the twelfth year. At that age it becomes evident whether a spiritual sense is awakened in the heart, or whether indifference, if not aversion to holy things, has risen. If a spiritual disposition of heart shows itself, it is about at this age that God Himself takes mother's task in hand, and allures the lad or the young girl into a first personal prayer, which is born from our own impulse.—A. Kuyper.

TRANSMUTATION.

Helen Bayley Davis.

All summer long my earthen crocks
  Stand in the dairy's shadowed pool,
Filled with honey-colored cream
  Clotted and cool.

And on my kitchen shelf are bowls
  Of shining yellow rimmed with blue,
While closets shelter fat old jugs
  Of faded hue.

But when October flames the trees
  With crimson tapers, or in mirth
Flings a wreath of yellow leaves
  Upon the earth—

Then my jugs drip scarlet sage,
  The crocks are filled with goldenrod,
And russet zinnias in my bowls
  Mirror God.

The Test.

I cannot avoid something of reverence toward those who, without definite belief in God and without hope of future reward, take up all the duties of life with courage, find within themselves the fountains of unselfish love, and spend their lives with joy in the service of their fellow-men. The greatest test of the moral nature comes in the dark eclipse of faith when men learn to love the good for its own sake and not because they hope to gain a heavenly reward or escape a future punishment. No man would choose to walk in darkness, destitute of faith in the personal life and love of God. But if such darkness descends upon a human mind, for any cause, we can only think that the divine Father would view its victim with tender compassion and rejoice to find that through it all he continues to choose and lead a blameless and loving life.—William A. Vrooman, in "Progressive Christianity".

And, for success, I ask no more than this:
To bear unflinching witness for the truth,
All true whole men succeed; for what is worth
Success' name unless it be the thought,
The inward surety, to have carried out
A noble purpose to a noble end,
Although it be the gallows or the block?
—Lowell.

A PRAYER.

God, who touchest earth with beauty,
  Make me lovely, too;
With Thy spirit re-create me,
  Make my heart anew.

Like Thy springs and running waters,
  Make my crystal pure;
Like Thy rocks of towering grandeur
  Make me strong and sure.

Like Thy dancing waves in sunlight,
  Make me glad and free;
Like the straightness of the pine trees
  Let me upright be.

Like the arching of the heavens
  Lift my thoughts above,
Turn my dreams to noble action—
  Ministries of love.

God, who touchest earth with beauty,
  Make me lovely, too;
Keep me ever, by Thy Spirit,
  Pure, and strong, and true.
—Mary S. Edgar.

An Indian's Honesty.

An old Indian once asked a white man to give him tobacco for his pipe. The white man gave him a loose handful from his pocket. The next day he came back and asked for the white man. "For," said he, "I found a quarter of a dollar among the tobacco."

"Why don't you keep it?" asked a bystander.

"I've got a good man and a bad man here," said the Indian, pointing to his breast, "and the good man say, 'It is not mine; give it back to the owner.' The bad man say, 'Never mind, you got it, and it's your own now.' The good man say, 'No, no! you mustn't keep it.'

"So I don't know what to do, and I think to go to sleep, but the good man and the bad man keep talking all night, and trouble me; and now I bring the money back, I feel good."

Like the old Indian, we have all a good and a bad man within. The bad man is Temptation, the good man is Conscience, and they keep talking for and against many things that we do every day. Who wins?—Selected.

Bridget and the Blue Flowers.

When Bridget was a little girl she lived in Ireland. She wore a little green and red plaid shawl around her shoulders. Every other day she went to school, and on the days between she want to the flax mill and spun fine thread. She stood all day and worked a treadle with her little bare feet as she twisted the thread with her hands. Bridget wondered why. She could not think how so much fine thread could be used.

When she went home at night and ate her potato with Granny the hens came into the cottage. They hoped that a bit might be dropped for them, or that Bridget would share the skin of her potato with them. Then Granny told Bridget stories while her knitting needles flashed and clicked. When Bridget climbed the ladder to her little bed in the loft she could hear the swallows talking together, for their nests were in the loft, too. In summer the wasps buzzed in and out between the cracks.

On Sunday Granny and Bridget always went to the chapel. The windows were made of painted glass, and in each window there was a picture. The window with the picture of the child Jesus and Mary, His Mother, was the one that Bridget loved best. When the sun shone through the glass, the painted sky sparkled and the blue of Mary's gown was bright and beautiful. The stone floor was covered with patches of soft colored light.

When spring came the fields where the flax grew were blue with blossoms. They were as blue as the sky, and much bluer than the ocean. The air was fresh, and the world, as far as Bridget could see, was a beautiful sight.

The air in the mill was filled with dust. The machines hummed and the straps slapped. The straps turned the spinning wheels, and thread, that had been just bunches of flax a minute before came spilling off the wheels. There was a child at each wheel to guide the thread and keep it from tangling as other wheels wound it on great spools.

Bridget wanted to run to the blue fields. She looked down the rows of little girls who were working with her and wondered if they did not want to go to the blue fields, too. If only they could all go together!

On one of these springs days, as she stood at her machine, Bridget saw a princess out of Granny's stories coming toward her. No, after all, it was only a little girl, and yet there were silver buckles on her shoes. Bridget stopped threading and her thread snapped. She watched the owner of the mill as he showed the little girl how the spinning was done. Bridget heard him say: "You must see the flax in blossom. I will send a child to show you the fields. Bridget!"

Bridget courtesied. The little girl took Bridget's hand, and they went out through the factory yard to the road. If Granny had been there she would have asked: "It is your tongue that is lost entirely?" For Bridget did not say a word. But she looked at the little girl and smiled, and the little girl smiled back.

Soon they could see the blue fields and the little girl cried: "How lovely! What beautiful stuff to work with!"

Bridget was puzzled. "Is it the threads you mean? See, the threads come from the stems," and she pulled out the long silvery fibers. "It is a pity, it is, to spoil so many flowers."

The little girl took a handkerchief with a blue border from her pocket and gave it to her. Bridget had never seen one like it before. It was too small to tie on one's head and far too thin to keep one warm. Bridget felt of it. It was soft and cool.

"Put it in your apron pocket, Bridget, I want you to keep it," said the little girl. "Somebody must have spun these threads. See, this is the way they go, over and under, over and under, so fine and so close together that you have to look carefully to see them. Now I must go back to the factory. My aunt will be waiting for me. We came from Belfast to see the linen mills, and it's time that we started back."

"And is Belfast your home?" asked Bridget.

"No," said the little girl, "my home is in America. I came across the ocean to visit my aunt."

The little girl told Bridget the name of the city in which she lived, and her own name, too, and Bridget said them over and over to herself, and did not forget them.

That night Bridget went home to Granny with something pretty to show and a story to tell, and Granny said it was like a dream. Bridget thought about what the little girl with silver buckles on her shoes had said, and she looked very often at her tiny blue-bordered handkerchief which the little girl had given her. She could see quite plainly that it was made of fine threads woven together, over and under, over and under, and now she knew what the threads she helped to make were for.

When Sunday came and Bridget went to the chapel with Granny, there was something in the picture she loved best that she had never seen before. The little child Jesus was wrapped in linen, soft and fine and very white.

On the way home after service, Granny looked lovingly at Bridget and asked, "And what was it you were thinking, little one, sitting there so still, with a smile on your lipe, and a tear in your eye?"

"Sure, I was wishing," said Bridget, "that I had been the child who spun the threads for the frock of the little Jesus."
—Friends of Ours.

"If you think of the metaphors which our Lord employs—metaphors of the flowers of the field and the birds of the air—you will see that what He means to warn us against is anxiety, not prevision. . . . Everything is done by bird and plant in view of the future, but done with a tranquility which reposes unconsciously upon the purpose of God. What they do unconsciously we are to do consciously. . . . Repose upon God quietly, and do daily the duties of the day, and bear daily the evils of the day, and, like Christ our Lord,, though it be through cross and passion, we shall come to the glory which is predestined for us by God."—Bishop Gore.

The Supreme Concern.

The highest use of prayer is not to get things for myself, but to forward God's Kingdom on earth. No man or woman amounts to anything in the Kingdom, no soul ever touches even the edge of the zone of power, until the lesson is learned that in Christ's business is the supreme concern of life, and that all personal considerations, however dear or important, are tributary thereto.—James A. Francis.

For The Southern Churchman.

HYMN.

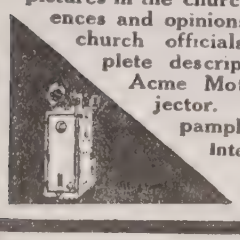
Maude Mumma.



Jesus, my Saviour, I'm longing for Thee,
Help me in all things Thy beauty to see;
In sea-side and mountain, in valley and plain,
Thy manifold blessings before me have lain.

Jesus, my Saviour, Thy goodness to me,
I, in my blindness, can ne'er hope to see;
All of my talents I lay at Thy feet,
To use in Thy service is joy true and sweet.

Jesus, my Saviour, the debt may I pay,
Teach me to serve Thee, and teach me to pray;
In doing each duty, some help may I give,
By helping another the better to live. . .

Ledge vs. Boulder Granite

The purpose of a monument is to perpetuate the memory of the dead. An all-important factor, therefore, is its permanence.

Beautiful Winnsboro Granite is a true granite unaffected by the processes that disintegrate rock because of its protection from the elements, due to being deep in the earth in vast ledge formation. It has retained all of the strength and durability accomplished by the union of its beautiful crystals while molten millions of years ago.

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

therefore, will last many, many years longer than monuments cut from other granite. Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability make it the ideal memorial granite. It possesses wonderful contrasts in shades and shadows. Thus, inscriptions cut on Winnsboro Granite Memorials can be read with greatest ease.

Beware of Boulder Granite.

A boulder is a piece of granite which has become detached from the earth stones, ages ago, and has been left on the surface exposed to the elements. The smooth round edges of boulders show that the stone has begun to disintegrate. Such stone is inferior, having partially lost its vitality, becoming more brittle and tending to crumble though having a fair appearance. It naturally sells at a lower price, but if you get a monument of boulder stone, you have a stone which has already started to rot. It is well to remember, "The sweetness of low prices never equals the bitterness of poor quality."

Typical Granite Boulder.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on causual examination, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treasurer and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

WILLIAM H. TALBOTT.

Resolutions.

At a called meeting of the vestry of St. John's Episcopal Church of Waynesboro, Va., held September 28, 1928, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, Our beloved Senior Warden, Wm. H. Talbott, passed to his eternal reward on September 21, 1928; be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the vestry of St. John's Episcopal Church, Waynesboro, Virginia, express our thankfulness to Almighty God, for the blessing bestowed on us, in that we have the example of this faithful servant, through the years of his activity, and illness.

That we go on record as feeling deeply the loss sustained by us personally, to his family, and to the community, of his friendship, the example of his Christian fortitude, and his devoted service to the Church of the Master; be it Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mr. Talbott's family; that they be published in the town and Church papers, and that they be entered on the minutes of this body.

THE VESTRY OF ST. JOHN'S CHURCH,
W. A. PRATT, Secretary.

MRS. S. A. HAIL.

LUCY STUART FITZHUGH, daughter of R. K. Fitzhugh and Hetty E. Baytop, his wife, was born at Spring Hill, Green County, Virginia, June 9, 1851. In 1866, with her father's family she moved to Augusta, Arkansas, where, on January 21, 1874, she was married to S. A. Hail.

Going at once to Batesville, Arkansas, they established the home in which they lived for fifty-four years, and in which at 3:15 P. M. Wednesday, September 12, 1928, she went peacefully to sleep.

Mrs. Hail was the mother of eight children. Five preceded her to the Other Side, while three, to-wit: S. A. Hail, Jr., of San Antonio, Texas; James Conway Hail, owner of the Hail Wholesale Dry Goods Company, of Batesville, and Mrs. Otto K. McAdams, also of Batesville, together with her aged husband, and seven grandchildren survive. She was first of all a Christian wife and mother. She loved her church, her home, her flowers and birds; and her spacious home was ever open to her neighbors and friends, both rich and poor alike; and her deeds of charity were beyond computing. She was a life-long member of the P. E. Church, and the first paper subscribed for after her marriage was the Southern Churchman, which was her life-long companion.

Truly a good woman has gone to sleep.

MRS. FANNIE H. CORNICK DUNN.

Passed into life eternal at her home in Bon Air, Va., on Friday, September 21, 1928, MRS. FANNIE H. CORNICK DUNN, in the seventy-seventh year of her age, after an illness of almost one year. Her funeral was held at Grace Church, Powhatan County, Va., on Sunday, September 23, 1928. Mrs. Dunn was a beautiful Christian character and she will be greatly missed by her children and grandchildren and friends.

Mrs. Dunn left one son, Thomas H. Dunn, three daughters, Mrs. Hamilton M. Eckenrode, of Fredericksburg; Mrs. Joseph F. Robertson, of Florence, S. C., and Mrs. Amy Dunn Weisiger, of Bon Air, Virginia, and eight grandchildren.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

The reredos was given as a memorial by Mrs. Algernon Blair to her mother, Mrs. Mary King Blue, formerly of Christ Church, Macon, Ga. It is one of a number of handsome memorials which have recently been installed in this church. The church itself was designed by Ralph Adams Cram, and was completed in 1927.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

Church Army Caravan.

A new Church Army caravan, the sixth, will be dedicated by Bishop Darst on October 2, at St. Paul's Church, Wilmington, N. C., for work in the Diocese of East Carolina. Captain E. Hurworth will take charge. He and Captain Atkinson are special preachers in Wilmington on September 30. The van is the gift of the Woman's Auxiliary of East Carolina.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

The Rev. Harwood Sturtevant, one of the Auxiliary General Secretaries of the National Field Department, and who is recognized, of course, as the rector of St. Luke's, Racine, Wis., is coming to Springfield for five two-day program conferences the last of October and the first few days of November. These program conferences are to be held in Bloomington, Jacksonville, Carlinville, Danville and Cairo, and in addition on the Sunday that Mr. Sturtevant is in the diocese he will speak in St. Paul's, Alton; St. Paul's, East St. Louis; St. Andrew's, Edwardsville; and Christ Church, Collinsville.

The Church Club of the Diocese is sponsoring the holding of seven or eight dinner meetings in November in various parts of the diocese to hear the reports from the deputies to the General Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary. It is expected that through these meetings that the messages of the Washington gatherings will be broadcast to many of the people of the diocese.

The Rev. Henry F. Selcer, rector of St. George's Church, Belleville, has been appointed by the Bishop as Chairman of the Department of Religious Education, taking the place of the Rev. R. Y. Barber, who has recently taken up work in the Diocese of Quincy.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Elliott C. Darlington, formerly curate of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, has accepted a call to be minister in charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Milford, Pa., to take effect September 15.

The Rev. Wm. R. Wood has resigned his position as Curate of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, N. Y., to become rector of a parish in Oil City, Pa.

The Rev. Edmund H. Gibson, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Ten Hills, has taken up his new duties as rector of Trinity Church, Galveston, Texas. The Rev. Gideon C. Montgomery, minister-in-charge of Queen Carolina Parish, has been called to Mr. Gibson's assistant, and will leave Maryland to take up his new work on October 9.

The Rev. Francis F. Lynch, formerly rector of Christ Church, Rock Spring, and Holy Cross, Rocks, has entered upon his duties as rector of St. John's Church, Havre de Grace, Maryland.

Ordinations.

On Thursday, September 20, 1928, in St. Sigfrid's Church, St. Paul, Bishop McElwain ordained Joseph Emmanuel Olsson as a deacon. The Bishop preached the sermon and the Rev. Philip Broburg presented the candidate.

The Rev. Mr. Olsson is proceeding at once to China, where he will engage in educational work for the China Inland Mission, with headquarters in Shanghai.

Deaths.

Rev. Addison A. Lamb, rector of the Church of the Trinity, Coatesville, Pa., died September 16 after an illness of six weeks from heart disease and complications. He was a graduate of the Virginia Seminary class of 1898.

Funeral services were held at the church September 19. Bishop Garland officiated. Interment was in the churchyard of Old St. David's, Rador, where his father, the late Dr. James H. Lamb, was rector for many years.

Besides his widow, he is survived by two brothers, the Rev. George W. Lamb, rector of the Church of the Covenant, Philadelphia, and the Rev. James H. Lamb, Jr., rector of Christ Church, Upper Merion.

The Canvass--

Are You Ready For It?

The Every Member Canvass this year will provide the means for carrying out the Program of the first year of the new Triennium. It is a new start toward a larger ideal.

The Field Department of the National Council has suggested methods for organizing and conducting the annual roll-call. Those methods need little change from year to year. Experience has demonstrated their soundness and effectiveness.

Literature is available, and National and Diocesan Field Departments are ready to help.

The result of the Canvass will depend upon the success with which every member is led to see, not merely the giving of money, but the vision of active participation in the extension of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

A Canvass may be a very worldly matter, if we consider it merely in terms of dollars.

The Canvass is, and ought to be, a spiritual enterprise.

Put the stress where it belongs, and success is assured.

Here are sketches of that extraordinary genius, General Lewis Littlepage; of General John Minor; of the Blair Bros., Importers; of Bazil Gordon; of Susan Metcalfe, Savage; of Major Benjamin Day; of Lieutenant-Colonel Gustavus B. Wallace; of the wealthy Scottish merchant, James Somerville; and of lineal descendants of General Hugh Mercer, Colonel Fielding Lewis, and his wife, Betty Washington, and Lady Margaret Sterling. And sketches bearing the well-known names of Grinnan, Chew, Buck, Stone, Knox, French, Carmichael, Ellis, Stanard, Goodwin, Scott, Maury, Heath, Yates, Rowe, Henderson, Green, Wellford, Shepherd, Patton are conspicuous among others.

144 pages; cloth bound; illustrated with 16 charming pictures, mainly from the author's own camera, and the frontispiece is a copy of the beautiful painting by Gari Melchers, The Madonna of the Rappahannock.

THE GREAT LOVE OF GOD

Having provided a glorious salvation, our part is to accept it, and tell others. These are the steps to eternal life:

First—To realize you are a sinner, "Having no hope and without God in the world."—Eph. 2:12; and to know "Ye must be born again."—John 3:7.

Second—Believe. "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name."—John 20:31. "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."

(True repentance is sincere, heartfelt sorrow and humility toward God for past sins, and a firm resolution to forsake them, in expectation of loving favor and forgiveness through the merits of our blessed Redeemer.)

Third—Come to Him. "Whosoever will may come."—Rev. 22:17, "and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."—John 6:37. Receive Him as your Saviour. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, . . . but of God."—John 1:12, 13.

---

"'Tis faith that purifies the heart;
'Tis faith that works by love;
That bids our sins and lusts depart,
And lifts our souls above."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"It isn't the mountain ahead that wears you out—it's the grain of sand in your shoe."

Every difficulty mastered in this life of time is added equipment for eternity. —Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D.

To be despised may be no ill-fortune; the real ill-fortune is to be despicable.

It is a notable fact that most speed records are made by people who are not going anywhere.—San Diego Union.

Design must have had a designer. That designer must have been a person. That pjerson is God.—Paley.

If we are drifting we are going in the wrong direction.

Life is too short to nurse one's misery. Hurry across the lowlands, that you may spend more time on the mountain tops.—Phillips Brooks.

Do not think it is wasted time to submit yourself to any influence that will bring upon you any noble feeling.—Ruskin.

"Courage for the great burdens of life and patience for the small burdens, and then, when you have accomplished your daily task, go to sleep in peace. God is awake."

In one wonderful utterance the mother's strong, consoling tenderness is taken by the Eternal Himself as the only worthy image of His own. He clasps to His infinite heart the tired and broken hearts of His human children. And so an ineffable maternity is found to live and breathe and burn in the depths of the Almighty Father's love.—Bishop Moule.

There is not only a beautiful land on high, but a beautiful land below. In our Father's house are many mansions, and we can well believe it, for this one room where we now dwell is roofed and tapestried with beauty and resplendent with the golden glow of His own lighting.—Selected.

MAILS

In the Book of Job, which is among the oldest literature we are told, somewhat dramatically, of four messengers who arrived in quick succession each with a new installment of bad news. Ever since that long ago time messengers and messages have been awaited eagerly or have appeared unexpectedly bearing tidings of joy and affliction, assurance or disappointment, victory or ruin. The Scriptures tell us of many of them and the history and fiction of every age contain instances, innumerable and in endless varieties of circumstances, from the time of the panting runner with his life depending on his speed to our modern orderly postal system, of blighting blows or beautiful blessings brought by spoken or written words; of the agonies of vain waiting to hear of persons and events beyond sight or hearing.

We may imagine Solomon, man of keen observation and many experiences, disappointed by non-receipt of a longed for letter when he wrote "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick". Writers have woven fanciful and fascinating stories by imagining themselves invisibly present in all the households of residential neighborhoods and relating the tragedy, comedy and drama, the monotonies and agitations, passions, emotions, loveliness and ugliness, noble devotion and self-sacrifice, sordid selfishness and clashing purposes and ambitions of the respective households. Pictures yet more stirring, moving and thrilling would be found if any of us could know and tell the feelings with which people of different ages, stations and conditions, near and remote, in crowded towns and quiet country, are looking today or look any week day of the year for the coming of the mail. If we could peer into all those hearts and minds we would see a bewildering variety of bad and good, of dismal dread and brilliant dreams, of longings and yearnings, of base and noble desires, anxious avarice and cupidity, eager endeavor to be bountiful and helpful—all to be gladdened or saddened, disappointed or delighted or left to doubt and new fluctuations, making hearts sick, as the mail decides.

For each expectant watcher there is somewhere somebody who should answer the expectation, whether the answer must carry pain or pleasure, unhappiness or happiness. Apprehension of calamity or anticipation of relief or success protracted by long delays cause miseries equally acute. Suspense stings and kills more cruelly, because more slowly, than any disaster. If we could have insight to the hearts and minds awaiting the mails we could see also the calls of hearts across intervening space, through night and day, over forest and hill and plain, sometimes seas—the agonized, bitter, pleading calls, heard by nobody in this world. All of us then might be more mindful than we are of our duties and responsibilities and obligations to each other in caring for our correspondence. However we may be engrossed with our own small or large affairs, however strong the temptation to postpone, to put aside to a more convenient season or until we may be more in the mood, the thought of somebody who has written and is awaiting an answer which may be of vital importance trivial as the matter may seem to us, should strengthen our wills to overcome the temptation to neglect. The old Latin maxim is "He gives twice who gives quickly". Surely it applies if we are to send pleasure by mail and if the tidings sent must be bad it is equally certain that the sooner and the more gently and kindly they are given the less they will hurt.

This is a busy age. It is a familiar observation that the old graceful art of letter-writing is lost. We have so many and such diverse interests unknown to the people of a century ago that even those of us who have not been forced to use the typewriter or rely on dictation cannot, or will not, spare time for the long, comprehensive, informing letters that used to circulate among families and groups of separated friends. Do we make it a matter of "can not" or "will not"? And when we can and do produce a real letter do we put into it thoughtfulness and care that would make it a welcome boon rather than a bore or a blister?

At times when we lie wakeful the recollection of a neglected letter and thought of somebody who loves us or has appealed for comfort and help, feeling the dull ache of disappointment, day after day, brings penitence and wretchedness. That is the heart call coming through the night, too often forgotten next day. There is far deeper misery in the remembrance of wounds given and wrongs done with written words—words which cannot be obliterated from memory and which, for all we know, may rise up to testify against us to future generations long after we are in forgotten graves; for we cannot know how many years any letter may endure nor into what hands it may drift.

Busy or idle, young or old, possessing or lacking the gift for writing and taste for it, one of the real and serious duties of all of us is to remember the people who watch and wait for the mail, hoping to hear from us. Be they friends or strangers, near or distant kin, those who love us and have the right to our love, or people trying to do business, all have their feelings, their anxieties, their large or small aspirations and interests, important to them. Clearing our consciences concerning them is a pleasant comfort for ourselves, always. Neglect even of the apparently most inconsequential is a dangerous experiment always. Not until the last great revelation will it be known how much anguish, shame, horror, crime, how many deeds of desperation, have resulted from failures of well-meaning, neglectful, slothful, procrastinating men and women to write when they should have written; the yielding of the well-meaning impulse to write what they should not have written, to send through the mails additions to the great sum of human suffering and sorrows.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD

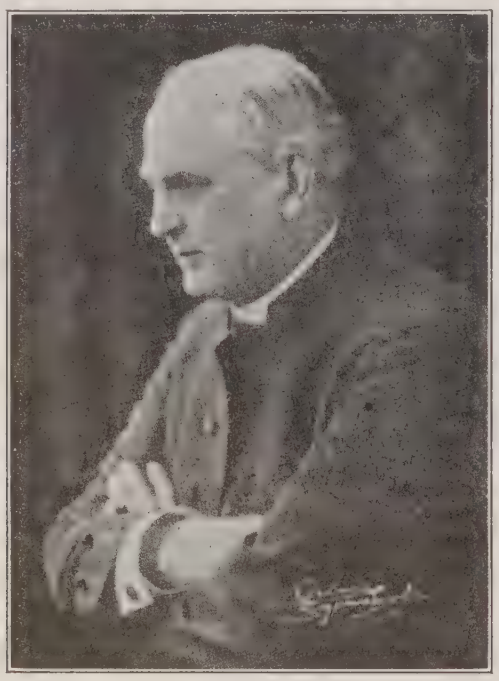
By the Right Reverend Charles Palmerston Anderson, D. D., LL. D.



(The following is a condensation of the sermon delivered by the Bishop of Chicago, at the opening session of the Forty-ninth Triennial General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, meeting in Washington, D. C., October 10, 1928.)

"Whereas God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee show bow, of things in heaven and things in the earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2:9-11).

Right Reverend Fathers, Reverend Brethren, Brethren of the Laity:

"Grace be to you and peace from God the Father and from our Lord Jesus Christ!"

We have assembled in this Triennial Convention to take counsel together once more about the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. We have come together as Bishops, priests and laymen of the Church of God. The Episcopal Church, in and through which we exercise our immediate ministry and discipleship, is not, of course, the whole Holy Catholic Church; but it incorporates us into the whole Church and brings to us all the treasures of grace and the fullness of Christian doctrine. . . . It will tend to keep us on a higher level if we keep in mind that we are not only diocesan delegates, but representatives of the Church of God. We have confessed our faith in the great Catholic Creed of Christendom. We have had our solemn Eucharist. We have had fellowship with the Father and with Jesus Christ and with the brethren. In this divine presence and companionship we have prayed that the Holy Spirit who presided over the Council of the blessed apostles would be with this council of His Church; that we would be saved from error, ignorance, pride and prejudice; that we would be directed, sanctified and governed by the mighty power of the Holy Ghost; that the Gospel of Christ may be truly preached, truly received and truly followed in all places.

That is the setting of this Convention. May everything that is said and done be in harmony with our high calling as ministers and men of God.

I hope that it will not be inappropriate if on the threshold of our deliberations, I venture to suggest that we meditate awhile on some of the central contents of our religion, on its reach and scope and on its application to the conditions and needs of our times.

Religion: Religion relates us to God. Morality is what we bring back from our fellowship with God. . . .

The Christian Religion: The Christian religion starts out with God and proclaims that God and man, heaven and earth, eternity and time are brought together in the person of Jesus Christ who reveals the character of God and the purpose of human life.

Personal Religion: For this reason personal discipleship to Jesus Christ must always be the central feature of our religion. This personal element is conspicuous and startling. "Come unto Me," says our Lord. "Abide in Me." "Follow Me." "I am come that ye might have life." "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness but shall see the light of life." These utterances would be repellent if they did not come from Him who is conscious of His oneness with God. He it is whose disciples and followers we are. We have joyfully accepted Him as our Leader, Teacher, Guide, Saviour and God. We have pledged Him a loyalty which takes precedence of all other loyalties.

Social Religion: But because the Christian religion is such an intensely personal thing, it must also be an intensely social thing. Because it is something between God and Man, it must necessarily be something between man and man, between man and his neighbor, between man and his business between man and his country. . . . It is a great thing for a man to be able to say: "I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." That, however, is not all that there is to religion. God loves you and me, but that does not exhaust the love of God. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." The world is the subject of redemption. "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," is an authoritative definition of the reach of religion. . . .

Religion, Business and Politics: You will not construe this as a plea for the intrusion of politics and economics in the pulpits and on the platforms of the Church. . . . Party politics pollute religion, but religion purifies politics. . . . Ecclesiastical politics are no better than any other kind of politics. . . . It is beginning at the wrong end. . . . It is trying to compel unconverted men to enter the Kingdom of God which their eyes have not seen, before creating in them a passion for the righteousness which is in Christ Jesus. The Church, as such, does not know political parties, nor economic theories. These are not the business of the Church. But it is distinctly the business of the Church to know religion, to know "faith and morals", to "know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge" and which cannot be excluded from anything affecting humanity, to generate the love of Christ and liberate it so that men will seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. It is the business of the Church . . .to insist that business and politics are not outside the realm of morality and religion; and to claim the supremacy of Jesus Christ over every department of human life. . . .

The Episcopal Church and the United States: . . . . The Episcopal Church has been a patriotic Church and has enjoyed the protection of the government in its freedom to worship God in accordance with conscience and convention. It is right that this should be said at this time and place.

Church and State: Nevertheless the most ardent American patriot would have nothing but scorn for the Church if it did not look to a higher source than any national government for its religious authority and sanction. . . . Our religious citizenship is in the Kingdom of God. Our political citizenship is in the United States of America. "A free Church in a free State" is our ideal. . . . "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," said our Lord. At the same time He warned His followers that they would be delivered up into prison and brought before kings and rulers for loyalty to God. . . . Even in Christian countries there have been times when the conflict between Church and State has been keen and relentless. This has been true . . . in the recent impasse between the Church and Parliament of England. Nor are there lacking signs in our own "land of the free and home of the brave" of appeals to Caesar to curb and fetter religious liberty. The Church has not always been blameless in her conflicts with the State and it has endured much suffering which cannot claim the blessing of having been in the name of the Lord. But the incidents and tragedies of history do not release the Church from its imperative duty to claim religious freedom and to suffer, if need be, in securing it. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made ye free; and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." . . .

Free Church in a Free State: The Church, however, cannot consistently claim religious freedom for itself unless at the same time it claims freedom for the State. . . . The State must be free to keep order, to levy taxes, to establish or demolish tariffs, to regulate commerce and traffic, to legislate on matters pertaining to marriage and the school, to accept or reject world courts, and leagues of nations, to declare war or to advocate the outlawry of war as it has recently so happily done. In the discharge of these functions the State can brook no ecclesiastical interference from any quarter, Catholic, Protestant or Jewish.

At the same time, the Church . . . must be free to teach the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man in all their far-reaching social implications— . . . free to preach Christian righteousness amongst nations, even when it is in conflict with government policies—free to preach peace, the peace that rests on righteousness and love and a reverence for human personality, which are outraged by war and the hates and lies that war engenders—free to teach Christian morality even when it opposes or transcends conventional standards. . . .

Religion and Civilization: The Church must also exalt Jesus Christ above the culture and civilization of the day.... Progress is never static. Changes are bound to occur if the world makes headway. "The old order changeth, giving place to the new; and God fulfills Himself in many ways lest e'en a good custom should corrupt the world." Civilizations come and go. . . . Jesus Christ alone is the same yesterday, today and forever, not standing still, but at the head of the procession, leading people onward and upward toward the Kingdom of God. . . . The Church cannot identify itself with the spirit and culture of any age and at the same time keep step with the Christ of the ages. Our Western Church must rise high above Western civilization or else keep out of the East. Our missionary enterprise may help or it may hinder the consolidation of the East against Western imperialism and commercialism. It depends on making it quite clear that the Gospel of Christ is not the same thing as Western culture at his best. Many voices are heard saying, "Give us your Christ, but keep your culture. Give us your missionaries, but keep your factories and your machine guns". . . . One does not have to accept the dictum of a conspicuous American that "life is a combat between jackals and jackasses", or the solemn pronouncement of a prominent Englishman that there is nothing to life but "a firm foundation of unyielding despair". But one has to admit that our civilization "has sacrificed much inner peace and social harmony" in the mad scramble for markets and money and has produced a state of mind in which multitudes have lost faith in God, because they have lost faith in the moral integrity of a civilization where organization tends to crush individuality, where men are machines and labor a commodity, where money is the measure of success and might the criterion of right.

Religion and Science: But no criticism of our times should be allowed to obscure the great achievements in science and invention. They are the crowning glory of the twentieth century. . . . It is not in the interest of religion to go out of the way to pick quarrels with science or to belittle demonstrated facts. The function of religion is to interpret these facts in terms of spiritual value. What is their bearing on human life and conduct? . . . Progress is in persons, not in things. Take personality and character and moral value out of the story and science itself might be turned to man's destruction. . . . Progress consists in the increasing ability of the human race to assimilate and transmit truth, beauty and goodness. These are the attributes of God. Jesus Christ is their greatest exponent. There is none other name given under heaven whereby our civilization can reach to its highest but the name of Jesus Christ. . . .

A Free Pulpit: I plead for a free and courageous pulpit —not a pulpit that invades territories which do not belong to it or that exploits personal opinions and prejudices under the aegis of the sanctuary, but a pulpit of brave and stalwart ambassadors of Christ, who will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God nor cease to teach and preach Jesus Christ in those many spheres of life where He is still a stranger.

Problems of the Church: This Convention would not fulfill its purpose if in its general tone and character it failed to magnify the Lord above all things. . . . Will you permit your preacher to say that our main task is not to provide so many million dollars for the budget (which would be an easy thing to do if our people had the love of God in their hearts), but to awaken in the Church a fresh zeal for the conversion of souls. Our chief task is not to perpetuate the controversies and logomachies of the sixteenth century, but to meet some of the pressing problems of the twentieth century. Our great burden is not to find the choicest language in which to phrase our worship, but somehow to learn how to persuade the wanderers outside the fold and the detached adherents within the fold, to worship God in any language. Our duty is not to define sacraments over again or to haggle about their number. Better would it be for the Church if our people were taught to elevate every means of grace into sacraments than to give such scant recognition to the significance of the two greater sacraments. Our duty is not to restrict people's devotion at the altar but to labor to bring it about that the Christ who is worshipped at the altar is not crucified afresh in parlors and slums and conditions that permanently depreciate the human stock. Our work is not to settle the controversy between fundamentalism and modernism, which exhibits more fear than faith on both sides, but to engender such personal devotion to Jesus Christ as would force this controversy into the background. It is not our duty to find an irreducible minimum of belief and practice which will barely save a man's skin, but to aim at maximum faith and service without being too meticulous as to rigid conformity to some narrow customs.

Secularization: The problems which confront the Church today can all be gathered up into one problem. It is the problem of secularization—the secularization of the home as though the family were the creature of the State and Christian marriage only a civil contract, and as though Christianity could survive in a Church of secularized homes —the secularization of business as though the—chief end of man was to make money, rather than "to glorify God and enjoy Him forever"—the secularization of politics as though the powers that be were not the responsible "ministers of God"—the secularization of the Church, as though building churches and raising quotas and operating clubs completed the design of "the Church of God which He hath purchased with His own blood"—the secularization of life as though men could "live without God in the world" as though there were no such things as the grace of God, the forgiveness of sins and the salvation of souls. . . . These are the lines along which the Church's battles must be fought. . . .

Throughout the world there are many people who see that the real issue of the day is between Christ and the world. . . . Throughout the world there are many priests far removed from the limelight, living in places where Christ is not popular, who are gladly giving their lives in making new allegiances to Christ and securing fresh verdicts for Him. These are the people who should have the backing of this Convention. They can be cheered or chilled by the things on which this Convention lays emphasis. It will break the hearts of many earnest disciples if this Convention squanders time over obsolete issues or current questions of only secondary importance. "Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." . . .

It is the Name of Jesus Christ—that most magnificent and adorable Person, whose spiritual supremacy remains unchallenged, who loved to the death, who can conquer men's sins and obsessions and transform them into a passion for the Kingdom of God, who speaks with authority about God and the Soul—that Person whom God hath highly exalted that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted By Rev. Frank Cox

I WAS reading recently the life of Sadhu Sundhar Singh, that wonderful Christian of India. His mother had wished for him that he might become a Sadhu, a religious teacher, devoting his whole life to that cause, depending entirely on what he received from the people among whom he went, and having no certain home. As a young boy he was much opposed to the Christian teachings, but later, through a copy of the New Testament, was led to Christ.

The Sikhs are intensely proud of their caste, and his relatives felt that his acceptance of Christianity had brought great disgrace upon them. His aged father, as well as his uncle, sought to turn him from his purpose, but Christ meant more to him than all. Finally, failing in their attempt, they drove him from home, and nearly ended his life with poison that they put in his last bit of food.

He was nursed to health in a mission station and, after a period of study and preparation, he set out in earnest as a Sadhu, not an ordinary teacher, but a Christian one, adapting the customs of his people to the Gospel. Possessing nothing but the saffron robe of the religious teacher, depending upon the grace of God for food and shelter, he went up and down India, proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ.

He has been in danger of his life many times. The people, finding that he was a Christian, would turn upon him. At times he was forced to find shelter in the lowest hovel in the town, or even in caves. Several times his shelter has been shared by a wild beast or a poisonous reptile, but never once has he been harmed. Some of his escapes can be attributed to nothing less than Divine intervention. At one time he was hiding in a cave from a band of men. They came to the entrance and there halted, after a whispered conference among themselves, they asked the Sadhu concerning companions that were with him. They claimed that they had seen a number about him, protecting him. The Sadhu believes this to be the Hand of God.

His life reads like a chapter from the Apostolic journeys. In spite of all opposition, the peace of God ruled in his heart. Men who were touched by his patient endurance of suffering would come to be instructed. A band of robbers who had sought his life became disciples.

He felt the call to carry the Gospel into the unopened portions of Tibet. The task was made doubly difficult by the hostility of the people, and the fact that he had to climb the rough mountain trails and cross the snowy wastes in his sandaless feet. Once he was thrown into a deep well and left to perish. To this day he does not know his deliverer. In spite of the persecution he has won converts in that difficult field.

His faithful preaching and his brave endurance have brought him open doors where before there was opposition. Crowds now wait for his coming, and he has stirred large Christian gatherings with his message.

His life provides us a striking contrast with the work of many Christians today. He has proved once more that all things are possible with God. More in the Church ought to start out with the same self-denying spirit, ready to depend upon God for all, not looking for place or salary, but anxious only to proclaim the tidings of One who can save.

LEVITICUS.

THE NAME of the book of Leviticus in the Hebrew is "The Lord called" (ch. 1:1). The phrase, "And the Lord spake" is found fifty-six times in the book.

"In the garden" the Lord called to the lost ones to come back to the One who alone loved and cared for them, from whom they were separated because of sin (Gen. 3:8, 9).

.."Out of the Burning Bush" the Lord called to Moses, telling him that He had heard the cry and seen the affliction of the people whom He foreknew as His own, and that He had come down to deliver them (Ex. 3:4-9; Isa. 63:9).

"Out of the Mountain" the Lord called unto Moses, giving a testimony that He is a holy God and that Israel was a sinful people, for out of the mountain issued the fiery law, with fiery indignation to devour the adversaries (Ex. 19:20; Rom. 3:20, 21; Deut. 33:2; Heb. 10:26).

"Out of the Tabernacle" from between the cherubim, over the mercy seat the Lord called unto Moses, revealing the fact that He is not only a holy God, but a God of infinite love and compassion, for through the offerings and priestly ministry He opened the way for every believing Israelite to come acceptably into His holy presence.

For God to call unto His people out of the Tabernacle meant an invitation from Him to come into His presence and dwell there, that they might be His people and that He might be their God (Ex. 25:8; Rev. 21:3).

Subject.

The acceptable way of Israel's approach unto the holy God, and the holy life becoming them as an acceptable people.

"Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" is the subject of chs. 1 to 16.

"Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls, for My yoke is easy, and My burden is light" is the subject of chs. 17 to 27.

I. Chs. 1-7 tell us of the acceptable offerings as the only righteous basis for Israel's acceptance before the One who dwelt in the most holy place.

II. Chs. 8-10 reveal God's laws concerning the holy priests as the acceptable representatives before God, of Israel.

III. Chs. 11-15 declare the sanctification necessary for Israel's acceptance before a holy God.

IV. Ch. 16 gives us God's program for the great Day of Atonement for Israel, the day on which acceptable offerings were presented by a holy priest for Israel's acceptance in the holiest of all.

V. Chs. 17-22 make known the walk, of life becoming to Israel as an acceptable people in their love toward God and toward man.

VI. Ch. 23 contains the program of the feasts of the Lord, to be celebrated in Israel's worship as an accepted people.

VII. Chs. 24-27 unfold the rest and peace, the blessings of God given to Israel as His accepted people.

Purpose.

The book of Leviticus was written to reveal to us God's way of acceptable approach into His presence, and the holy life becoming those who have been accepted of Him (John 14:6; Eph. 5:1-3).

I. Chs. 1-7 typically point to the Lamb of God as the fulfillment of all the acceptable offerings offered once for all, as the basis or ground of acceptance for every one who will believe the Gospel (John 1:29; Heb. 10:1-18; 9:26; 1 Peter 2:24).

II. Chs. 8-10 foreshadow for us the person and ministry of Christ as our God appointed holy and acceptable High-Priestly Representative who is appearing in the presence of God for us, and able, therefore, to save us unto the uttermost (Heb. 7:25-28; 9:10-14, 24).

III. Chs. 11-15 reveal to us typically the holiness required of us for acceptance in the presence of the Holy

One, which holiness God has given us in Christ (1 Peter 1: 15, 16 R. V.; 2:9; Lev. 11:44, 45; 1 Cor. 1:30; Eph. 1:6).

IV. Ch. 16 prefigures for us the great Day of Atonement on Calvary, telling us of the offering of Christ as the acceptable sacrifice, of His ministry as our High Priest in covering the mercy seat with the cloud of incense, and of sprinkling the blood upon the mercy seat, thus opening, once and forever, for all who will believe God's Word, the way of acceptable approach into the most holy place (Isa. 53; Heb. 9:11-14, 26; 1 Peter 1:18, 19; John 17:19-30; Rom. 3:21-26).

V. Chs. 17-22. The life of separation unto God from evil and the life of service for others becoming us, as those who have been accepted of God in Christ (Rom. 12:1-3; 15:1-3; Phil. 2:4; Eph. 2:8-10; 4:1-3; 5:1-4, 15, 16; 2 Tim. 2:21).

VI. Ch. 23 outlines for us through these typical feasts God's whole program of redemption, individually and dispensationally, from the cross to the crown, from Calvary to the kingdom of Christ (Rom. 8:17; Phil. 2:4-11; 1 Cor. 5:7; Rom. 8:37-39; Matt. 27:37; Isa. 9:6, 7; Acts 3:21; Matt. 25:31; Isa. 32:1-17).

VII. Chs. 24-27 picture to us the blessings which are ours, to be known and made known to others by us, as believers accepted in the Beloved (Eph. 1:3-14; 1 Pet. 2:9; Col. 1:9-12; Acts 20:35).

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

MORNING III.

O LORD, our Heavenly Father, Almighty and Everlasting God; who hast safely brought us to the beginning of this day, defend us in the same by Thy mighty power, and grant that this day we fall into no sin, neither run into any kind of danger; but that all our doing being ordered by Thy governance, may be righteous in Thy sight through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O God, to whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O God, the Father of Heaven, our Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, have mercy on us miserable sinners. Remember not our offenses, nor the offenses of our forefathers, neither take Thou vengeance of our sins. Spare us, good Lord, spare Thy people whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy most precious blood; neither be Thou angry with us forever.

Deliver us, good Lord, from all evil and mischief, from the crafts and assaults of the devil, from Thy wrath, and from everlasting damnation; from all blindness of heart, from pride, vainglory, and hypocrisy; from envy, hatred and malice. and from all uncharitableness; from all inordinate and sinful affections, and from all the deceits of the world, the flesh, and the devil; from lightening and tempest, from plague, pestilence, and famine, from battle and murder, and from sudden death; from all sedition, privy conspiracy and rebellion; from false doctrine, heresy and schism, from hardness of heart and contempt of Thy Holy Word and Commandment.

By the mystery of Thy Holy Incarnation; by Thy Holy Nativity and circumcision; by Thy baptism, fasting and temptation; by Thine agony and bloody sweat; by Thy cross and passion; by Thy precious death and burial; by Thy glorious resurrection and ascension and by the coming of the Holy Ghost; Good Lord, deliver us.

In all time of our tribulation; in all time of our prosperity; in the hour of death, and in the hour of judgment, good Lord, deliver us.

We sinners do beseech Thee, O Lord God, that it may please Thee to rule and govern Thy holy Church universal in the right way. Bless and preserve all Christian rulers and magistrates, giving them grace to execute justice and maintain truth. Illuminate all bishops, priests and deacons, and all ministers and teachers of Thy Word with true knowledge and understanding of Thy Word, that both by their teaching and living they may set it forth and show it accordingly.

Bless and keep Thy people; give to all nations unity, peace, and concord. Give us an heart to love and fear Thee, and diligently to live after Thy commandments. Give to all Thy people increase of grace to hear meekly Thy Word and to receive it with pure affection, and to bring forth the fruits of the spirit.

Bring into the way of truth all such as have erred and are deceived. Strengthen such as do stand; comfort and help the weak-hearted, raise up those who are fallen, and at last beat down Satan under our feet.

We beseech Thee, Good Lord, succor, help and comfort all who are in danger, necessity, or tribulation. Preserve all who travel by land or by water, all women in the perils of childbirth, all sick persons and young children, and show Thy pity upon all prisoners and captives. Defend and provide for the fatherless children and widows and all who are desolate and oppressed.

May it please Thee to have mercy on all men; to forgive our enemies, persecutors, and clanderers, and turn their hearts.

Give and preserve to our use the kindly fruits of the earth, so that in due time we may enjoy them.

Give us all true repentance and forgiveness of our sins and grace to amend our lives according to Thy Holy Word.

We humbly beseech Thee, O Father, mercifully to look upon our infirmities, and for the glory of Thy name turn from us all those evils that we most justly have deserved, and grant that in all our dangers and necessities we may put our whole trust and confidence in Thy mercy and evermore serve Thee in true Holiness and righteousness to Thy honor and glory, through our only Mediator and Advocate, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our Father, etc.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart." Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. G. W. Witte, of Harlem, Georgia:

". . . . men ought always to pray, and not to faint."—St. Luke 18:1.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

Today's seven deadly sins, as catalogued by Canon Donaldson, of Westminster Abey, are as follows: "Politics without principles, wealth without work, pleasure without conscience, knowledge without character, commerce and industry without morality, science without humanity, and worship without sacrifice."—Christian Observer.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION

By Alfred B. Williams

SKILLED writers for innumerable newspapers have exhausted their vocabularies and descriptive powers endeavoring to tell of the beauty of the opening service of the Forty-ninth Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Washington, D. C., the morning of Wednesday, October 10. Nothing like it ever has been seen in this country, probably not in any other country. There was perfect autumn weather, with perfect autumn skies and a background of the great old oaks of the Cathedral Close painted in perfect autumn tints of red and gold and brown and yellow. Beyond this splendid natural barrier rose the massive architecture of what one day will be the greatest and most beautiful and impressive of all cathedrals. To this hedged amphitheatre, a gently sloping hillside overlooked by the yet uncompleted Temple of God, 18,000 devout men and women of the Church marched in procession, led by a great vested choir and an unprecedented array of robed clergy, including one hundred and twenty bishops, wearing their full canonicals. A large band, gowned, played familiar and inspiring hymns of the Church, such as "Holy, Holy, Holy" and "Onward Christian Soldiers". There was a mighty volume of sound as the voices of the multitude rose in grand and solemn unison in praise of God Almighty.

Following the choir came the visiting clergy, the diocesan clergy, lay members and presbyters of the National Council, with the one hundred and twenty bishops at the end. Last came the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, the Bishop of Washington and the Convention preacher, Bishop Charles P. Anderson of Chicago.

Immediately after the procession the President and Mrs. Coolidge were escorted down the aisle, while the chimes of the Little Sanctuary played "America", and greeted by the Presiding Bishop and the Bishop of Washington.

The opening prayer was recited by the Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, Bishop of Oklahoma, immediately after which he led the multitude in repeating the General Confession.

"We have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep—we have left undone those things which we ought to have done—and we have done those things which we ought not to have done. But, Thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us miserable offenders."

The confession arose from the mass of upturned faces like a gentle wind rustling the leaves which carpeted the forest floor around the amphitheatre. Then Bishop Casady repeated the age-old formula of absolution for those who have confessed and repented, ending in the Lord's Prayer.

After the Venite, Bishop Casady read the Forty-sixth Psalm. The Rev. Dr. Charles L. Pardee, Secretary of the House of Bishops, read the First Lesson; the Rev. Dr. Carrol M. Davis, Secretary of the House of Deputies, the Second. Bishop John T. Dallas, of New Hampshire, led in recital of the Nicene Creed. Bishop Freeman then introduced President Coolidge. In the course of an earnest address, the President said:

"We cannot remind ourselves too often," he said, "that the right to be free, the support of our principles of justice, our obligation to each other in our domestic affairs, and our duty to humanity abroad, the confidence in each other necessary to support our social and economic relations, and finally the fabric of our Government itself, all rest on religion.

"If the bonds of our religious convictions become loosened, the guaranties which have been erected for the protection of life and liberty and all the vast body of rights that lie between are gone."

The present Convention and other similar organizations were taken by Mr. Coolidge as evidence that "the major forces of the world are actively and energetically engaged in promoting the spiritual advancement of humanity".

Immediately after the President's address, Bishop Anderson, of Chicago, preached the sermon, which is supposed to be intended as the keynote of the Convention. He stressed the idea of a "free Church in a free State", characterized it as "a thrilling and hazardous experiment", never yet fully tested or realized. "Throughout the world," he said, "there are many people who see that the real issue today is between Christ and the world. They are moved to become followers of Christ, but are perplexed as to how to reconcile discipleship with the spiritual mediocrity and narrow outlook of many a parish. Throughout the world there are many priests far removed from the limelight, living in places where Christ is not popular, who are gladly giving their lives in making new allegiances for Christ and securing fresh verdicts for Him.

"It will break the hearts of many earnest disciples if this Convention squanders time over obsolete issues or current questions of only secondary importance. The Church is here to save people from the world, to show people how to love God and love each other, to transform life and its sordid surroundings into harmony with the will of God. Unless the Church can win along these lines its capitulation to the world will be complete. Men will not longer say, 'Oh, Galilean, Thou hast conquered'. They will say, 'Oh, Galilean, Thou art conquered'."

The newspapers in Washington and elsewhere are giving unlimited pages of space to the convention, including attempted forecasts of its action, outlines of its probable work, sketches of its personalities. The value of these predictions is questionable. Naturally, members of the Convention talking with reporters indicate that matters in which they themselves are especially interested will be in the foreground. As has been proved in the past, however, the Convention sometimes refuses to share the opinions of individual members on the importance of propositions and has a way of quietly shelving matters it does not care to discuss by reference to committee.

Bishop Page, of Michigan, is said to have brought a report on the divorce question, the result of three years' investigation and labor by himself and twenty other active leaders in the Church. Nothing yet has been revealed of the contents of the report or recommendations that may accompany it.

Newspapers which appear to be well informed think that missionary work will hold much of the attention and occupy much of time time of the Convention, conditions in China making special appeal for study and action. It is said, also, that effort will be made to provide for special work in the colleges of this country, described by one delegate as the most needy mission field.

The Rev. Dr. Robert Johnston, rector of St. John's Church, Washington, by dint of tireless labor, has made assignments of clergymen for all local pulpits, there being in the city thirty-one Episcopal churches and nineteen chapels. Of these one church and five chapels are for Colored people. But one Colored bishop is in attendance, the Rt. Rev. Theophilus Mormulu Gardiner, Suffragan Bishop of Liberia. He is the son of a native king who was a somewhat famous and successful head hunter. The Bishops of Haiti, the Philippines and Hankow are white men, and Americans.

Some idea of the magnitude of the Convention can be gained by the fact that the Willard Hotel, Convention hotel of the great Convention city, Washington, has for the first time in its history been compelled to appeal to the federal postoffice department to establish a branch postoffice within the building.

It has been thirty years since the Episcopal Triennial Convention met in Washington. Interest in the Capital City of the United States and eagerness to view the great and yet unfinished National Cathedral have been strong factors in drawing an immense body of prelates, delegates, laymen, relatives and friends.

The Great Commission

ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY, SHANGHAI.

Shanghai, China, September 14, 1928.—After an eighteen months' interval, St. John's University, Shanghai, has been reopened, with a full complement of students. Several of the other schools of the Mission have also opened, St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, Soochow Academy, and the Yu Chi School, Yangchow, the latter a school preparatory for Mahan School, which on account of the great damage done to its buildings during military occupation has to remain unopened for the present.

All the schools have opened well. No changes have been made in the status or work of the schools, and religious instruction is carried on as usual. In no case has there been any official interference. Whatever weight there is to public opinion is all in favor of the Mission Schools, whose patrons have been pathetically eager for their resumption. This eagerness was well illustrated in the case of a gentleman from North Kiangsu, whose only son had been a student in Mahan School. He was one of the old line of Chinese gentry, with no interest whatever in Christianity, but with a deep conviction of the superiority of the education given in Mission schools. In July he brought his son to Shanghai, sought out the Principal of Mahan School and told him that his sole object in making the journey to Shanghai was to get his son into a Christian school. He did not know which of them were open now, but if any of them were open, he proposed to stay until he had arranged for his son to enter one. This represents the attitude of very many towards the Mission schools. Their immeasurable superiority to others is clearly recognized, and there is widespread rejoicing over their resumption. The need of these schools is so widely recognized that any serious interference is not now to be expected.

THE PRAYER BOOK CRISIS: By Sir William Joynson-Hicks Bart, D. L., M. P. Putnam, New York.

The author has emerged from the debate over the Prayer Book as a man of convictions, this book will strengthen his reputation for straight thinking and courageous speaking on controverted subjects. The book abounds in sentences that grip and stir. He says that the vast majority of the clergy used to speak of the Prayer Book as "our incomparable liturgy", and adds, "It has remained to the bishops of the last fifteen years to discover and to announce to a bewildered laity . . . that it is defecteive, jejune and inadequate".

He sketches briefly but clearly the origin of the English Prayer Book and shows what care was taken to eliminate medieval teachings contradictory of Scriptural truth. He notes the rise of the ritualistic movement and the subterfuges concocted by its advocates to get away from the clear intent of the Church's teachings. For example the contention recently revived in this country concerning the Thirty-nine Articles, that they did not condemn teaching concerning Purgatory, etc., but only the Roman doctrine of Purgatory. This quibble had been originated by Newman and more fully expounded by Bishop Forbes. The Rev. Mr. Evans who later moved over to Rome is quoted by Sir William. He had accepted Dr. Newman's idea without question. He said, "In so acting I believe I was only doing what ninety-nine of every hundred of the High Church clergy of the Church of England have done before me. Not one in a hundred has ever taken the trouble to look into the question in any serious way in the original authorities". After he looked further into the matter, he found out his mistake, and went to his own place.

Sir William points out how they have resisted every attempt to make them obey the laws they have sworn to uphold, and how they have resisted bishops or any other authority in an absolutely lawless fashion. Moreover, he silences their cries about persecution by proving that they have themselves not scrupled to use the courts against others whenever possible.

Sir William quotes from their service books to exhibit the foolish practices to which their cult leads. For example, among other trivial and repulsive details in which their book of directions concerning Mass abounds, one in the Communion of the Sick directs that the priest shall: "Here wash his fingers and let the sick man drink the ablutions." This is on a par with the famous whisker of King Charles, used not so long ago for the enlightenment of the people of Tennessee.

He answers the argument that the Deposited Book represented the mind of the Church of England and that Parliament flouted the opinion of the Church. In the first place the laymen in the Church Assembly are usually the ecclesiastically minded, out of touch with the real sentiments of the people, in the next place the opposition had to shift for itself in the general debate on the Book, while the speakers for the Book were thoroughly coached and were given right of way, finally the opposition was stilled by the promise that they would not have to use the Book if they did vote for it. These reasons combined with the fact that the bishops put it on a strongly personal basis and made the cry, "Trust the Bishops!" the rallying-point of the whole debate, made it a foregone conclusion that the Church Assembly would pass it. Parliament's action was immensely popular throughout the country.

He brings the movement to the bar of actual results and describes its almost total failure. In spite of an immense amount of organized energy expended in behalf of their cause, they have failed before the bar of history, in the courts of law, in theological discussions and in attempts to win the people. He notes the steady decline of ministerial candidates, and of candidates for confirmation, the falling off in Church and Sunday School.

He concludes concerning the Deposited Book: "Its emphasis is too much on what is sacerdotal and ceremonial; its ideals are those of an age-long past, and not those of the present or the days to come; and it does not give to Holy Scripture, and especially to the teaching of the New Testament, the supreme and dominant position which is their right."

This book deserves to be widely read. Some layman or group of laymen ought to see that it is widely distributed where it will do the most good.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Mr. Langbourne Meade Williams,
Editor Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Virginia.

My Dear Mr. Williams: If, as we infer from the rather erratic communication of the Rev. James A. Mitchell, of Baltimore, that you are the "sole owner" as well as the editor of The Southern Churchman, I feel that every member of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, should glory in the fact that you are laboring in your noble work for the Divine Master and the integrity of the Holy Bible without the handicap of being controlled or subsidized by any clique or board of directors that might endeavor to divert you from your purpose and cause you to change the policy of your paper, which is a beacon of hope and a staff of comfort to all those faithful persons and loyal clergymen who still cling with all their strength to the "good old-time religion". I, for one, trust that the day will never dawn when The Southern Churchman, "under its present management", will "be eradicated from every home". I would trust rather that those clergymen who feel that they can no longer live loyally up to their ordination vows and maintain the doctrines as prescribed by the Protestant Episcopal Church, and set forth in its creeds, might "eradicate" themselves from the sacred ministry. With multitudes turning away from Him (probably because there was a shortage of loaves and fishes, and being careless of His doctrine), Christ turned to His apostles and asked, "Will ye also go away?" and St. Peter made his famous reply, "Lord, to whom shall we go; Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the Living God".

It is immaterial to me whether or not you publish this communication. I merely desire you to know that down in the humble "diggings" of the Diocese of Easton, just across the Bay from Brother Mitchell, is a clergyman who is deriving as much wholesome spiritual good from reading The Southern Churchman as Brother Mitchell seems to have derived harm, and one who will remain constant in his petitions to the Divine Throne that you may never waver in your stand for the stability of the faith "once delivered to the saints", but will continue to fire your editorial shots into the camp of the enemies until they, too, will at last surrender and finally be able consistently to lead their choirs in the rendition of those glorious words:

"Jesus, and shall it ever be,
A mortal man ashamed of thee?
Ashamed of thee whom angels praise,
Whose glories shine through endless days.
* * * * * * *
Ashamed of Jesus, empty pride,
I'll boast a Saviour crucified;
And oh, may this my portion be,
My Saviour not ashamed of me."

With all good wishes for the continuous success of your publication.

INTEREST.

Mr. Editor:

Please give me the address of Kenneth Mackenzie, and tell me who he is and what he does.

You are getting out a wonderful paper and I read it with the keenest interest.

With high regard and best wishes,

"College President."

UNCOMPROMISING ATTITUDE.

Mr. Editor:

I have wanted to write you for some time to express my great satisfaction over your editorial on "Jazzing the Service, Etc." It was wonderful. Then the last one in which you fixed Guy Shipler up about like David working on Goliath was most to the point. I think you should have a series of tracts issued by The Southern Churchman and these editorials should be among them, Sure. Every clergyman and vestryman in the Church should see a copy. If they were printed while they are "in the form" so to speak, it could be done very economically. Not over a penny a piece. Each issue of The Southern Churchman gives me immense satisfaction. To feel that we have a paper that will stand out for the truth as this Church has received the same is most heartening. I have often wondered if it would be possible to issue a monthly edition of your paper—with the cream of the weekly in it, maybe condensed—for wide circulation over the entire Church. The price is cheap now, but so many people cannot afford any paper much beyond a dollar a year.

The whole Church is stirred by your uncompromising attitude on the present-day questions that are so prominent in the minds of everybody.

I believe the Thirty-nine Articles are going to stay where they are. When I was in the Virginia Seminary we were required to study them carefully and were examined on them. Sure! Bishop Whittle was not to be dealt with as his successors are. A few people feel you are stepping on the gas a little too strong. I do not think so. "Lay on, MacDuff!" &c., in a Christian sense. Amen. These Modernists parade themselves up and down before the Army of Israel and I am glad in my heart that a David has been found to make them bite the dust occasionally, anyway. True.

See Phil. 4:19 for your reward.

Josh. 1:8, 9. Amen.

FORTY-SECOND NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

THE General Convention of the Church was ushered in by pre-Convention gatherings of great interest and importance. Of interest, because they brought men and women together from the "Four Winds". Of importance, because they not only accomplished great things in their own meetings, but in a way set the keynote for the Convention to follow. It was well that the pre-Convention meetings should be the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Daughters of the King, both having as their rules Prayer and Service. In the case of each, very little routine business was done and even that little was made subservient to the great cause for which they were committed. Strong addresses characterized most of their services and meetings, and outstanding words, either as themes or occurring incidentally were Prayer, Service, Purpose, Challenge, Opportunity and Spirituality.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, together with the National Conference on Evangelism, was in session from October 5 to 9, inclusive.

The first official act of the Brotherhood was a visit to the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington, Friday afternoon.

Here James L. Houghteling, son of the founder of the Brotherhood, placed a wreath in the name of the Order.

Headquarters for the Senior Brotherhood was the Mayflower and for the Juniors, St. Thomas Church. For each, the Convention started with a banquet at their respective headquarters. The Bishop of Washington gave his presence to the Junior Banquet for the first part of the evening, going later to be with the Seniors. At both he gave warm words of welcome and expressed the hope that above all else in the Convention, "Spirituality" and "Fraternity" would be outstanding.

At the Junior banquet, Mr. Clarence E. Brickman, of General Theological Seminary, served as toastmaster and inspiring singing was led by the Rev. Gordon Reese, of Vicksburg, Miss. About three hundred boys were present and listened intently, in the latter part of the evening, to a stirring address by Bishop Wise, of Kansas. Bishop Wise spoke of the heroes and martyrs of the Twentieth Century and showed how each boy there, through his own life could make Christ a living hero today. He showed the contrast between the self-centered man and the Christ-centered man and said, "The Christ-made man is the man who is enriching the world".

The boys heard another splendid straight-forward talk that evening, given by John Milton, a young student of Columbia University, and an active Brotherhood boy.

The Senior banquet was held at the Mayflower Hotel. The Chairman was Hon. Sidney F. Taliferro, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and the toastmaster was Walter Kidde, of St. Luke's, Montclair, N. J., Vice-President of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Presiding Bishop of the Church, and Honorary President of the Brotherhood, the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., gave a word of greeting and the principal addresses of the evening, both forceful and inspirational, were on the general subject, "Christ's Commission to the Men of the Church", as follows:

"A Challenge to the Clergy." Samuel L. Joshi, Professor of Comparative Religion and Hindu Philosophy, Dartmouth College.

"A Challenge to the Laity." The Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, D. D., Bishop of Duluth.

Incidentally Dr. Joshi spoke of having behind him forty generations of ancestors in the Brahmin priesthood and two generations in the Anglican priesthood.

He congratulated the Episcopal Church upon having kept out of politics in the present campaign and gave the warning that it should continue so to do. He spoke of the alarming growth of religious intolerance in the world today. He said that every political question of our day involves moral consideration and that he considers the duty of the clergy to be to form public opinion based on the moral and spiritual teaching of Jesus, "leaving the individual member of the Church quite unfettered by the mandates of the Church in his freedom to cast his vote in political elections".

"Man today is considered to a large extent as mere cannon fodder in the economic battles of modern commerce," he said, and he asked "what chance has the Gospel of Christ to make any headway towards world brotherhood and international good-will, when at every step it has to fight against the gods of mere physical efficiency, of mass production, of a lofty standard of comfort at all costs and of Nordic supremacy?"

The Convention was formally organized Saturday morning with Edward H. Bonsall, of Philadelphia, President, acting as chairman. The program for the day follows:

For the Juniors:

7:30 A. M. St. Thomas' Church. Holy Communion. Celebrant, the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., D. C. L., Rector. This service was in conjunction with the Seniors.

9:30 A. M. St. Thomas' Parish House. Business Session. Clarence Brickman, Temporary Chairman.

10:00 A. M. St. Thomas' Parish House. Conference, "Life's Great Opportunity," the Rev. Hope H. Lumpkin, Ph. D., Grace Church, Madison, Wis., Chaplain of the Junior Convention.

10:45 A. M. Response. "Meeting the Opportunity." John Green, Philadelphia. Robert Furniss, Chicago.

11:30 A. M. "The Church Army." Captain Jarvis and Captain Atkinson of the Church Army in the United States.

For the Seniors:

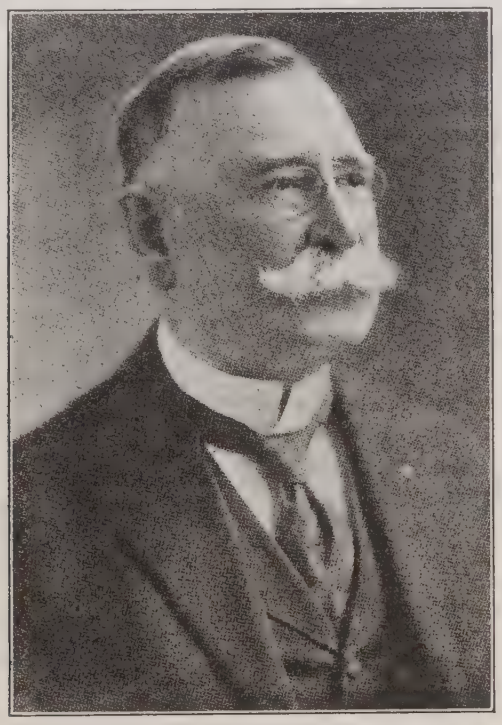
2:00 P. M. The Mayflower. The first of three conferences on "The World's Need." Professor Samuel L. Joshi, Head of Department of Comparative Religion, Dartmouth College. (a) "The Spirit of Buddhism and its Contribution to Human Welfare."

3:00 P. M. The Mayflower. The first of three conferences on "The Great Triangle—Me, Him and It. Man Helping Man with Religion." The Rev. Alfred Newbery, Church of the Atonement, Chicago. (a) "Me," the helper. How to develop the ability to help. (Remaining two conferences at same hour. Monday and Tuesday.)

4:00 P. M. The Mayflower. Address, "The Brotherhood Today and Tomorrow." Leon C. Palmer, B. D., General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.



At 12:30, both Juniors and Seniors visited the White House and a Convention photograph was taken with the President. Each of the thousand delegates, men and boys were cordially greeted by President Coolidge.

At five o'clock in the afternoon Bishop and Mrs. Freeman, assisted by General LeJeune of the U. S. Marine Corps, received the Brotherhood and Daughters of the King in the Bishop's Garden, a remarkably beautiful spot and said, by some to be the most perfect example of an English Garden on this continent.

At 8 P. M., on Saturday, a preparation service for the Corporate Communion was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., of Delaware, and this was a service for the entire Brotherhood.

On Sunday all services were joint with Seniors and Juniors. The day was begun by the Corporate Communion of the Convention at 7:30 A. M., when the members of the Brotherhood rededicated themselves to renewed efforts for the spread of Christianity. St. Thomas' Church, one of the most beautiful in Washington, was well filled with men. The celebrant at this service was the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington. The Brotherhood Boys and Men visited the different parish churches at eleven o'clock, and then the great open-air service in the Cathedral Amphitheatre at four o'clock again brought them together in an inspiring way. A warm October sun, a blue sky, a background of trees still in full leaf, with only one, a bright yellow, as if to hasten on the autumn days, a wooden platform at the base of this bowl of nature, a wooden cross emerging high from a bed of deep red dahlias, combined choirs with their crosses, carried high, a procession in which hoods of varied colors, banners, flags, bishops' robes, and the purple of the Cathedral choir cassocks, were seen, a mass of people numbering about fourteen thousands, good old hymns sung by the massed congregation, with band accompaniment—these and other things, brought a sense of thankfulness and gratitude to those who were there. Many more, beside these, heard the stirring words of the greeting given by the Bishop of Washington, and the two addresses of the day, for microphone and amplifier carried the messages to distant places and unseen listeners. The addresses were delivered by Rudolph Bolling Teusler, M. D., Director of St. Luke's International Hospital, and Hon. George Wharton Pepper, LL. D., of St. Mark's, Philadelphia, both of whom were characterized by Bishop Freeman as outstanding laymen of the Church.

This great open-air service, so beautiful in every respect, seemed a good omen for those planned to follow, and if carried out, to be an unique feature of the Convention of 1928.

The Brotherhood Convention continued through Monday and Tuesday, as follows:

Monday.

Junior:

7:30 A. M. St. John's Church. Holy Communion. Celebrant, the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., D. C. L., Rector.

THE CONVENTION OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

THE Convention of the Daughters of the King was the "Eighteenth Triennial" and was held at Epiphany Church, from October 5 to 9, inclusive. The program of the Daughters' Convention, at first glance, emphasizes the fact that here is an organization concerned with spiritual things, with the working of the Holy Spirit and the spread of Christ's Kingdom. It emphasizes this aspect of the Church's work at home, and in Convention assembled, carries on in the same way.

"Evangelism" was the main theme for the consideration of the Convention, as sounded by Bishop Murray in his address to the Daughters at their opening Friday evening.

Mrs. A. A. Birney, National President of the Daughters, formally called the Convention to order and made a response to the address of welcome given by Miss Lillian Janet Soper, President of the Diocese of Washington. A report on the Convention program was given by Mrs. W. J. Loaring Clark. Prayers were read by the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, and the service of worship was led by the Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church.

Saturday morning there was an early celebration of the Holy Communion.

At ten o'clock Bishop Freeman addressed the Convention and there were also addresses by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D., and the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs.

A Junior meeting in St. John's Church, Georgetown, on Saturday afternoon was addressed by Bishop Howden of New Mexico, and the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn. There were also short talks on the past, present and future of the order, by Mrs. W. B. Ross, Miss Helen McMenry and Miss Helen Long.

A service of preparation for the Holy Communion was held by Bishop Rhinelander at eight o'clock in the eevning.

The Sunday program was in conjunction with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, including the beautiful open-air service in the afternoon, and a mass meeting at 8 P. M. in Ascension Church, when the topic was "The Witness of Youth for Christ" and the speakers were Bishop Frank A. Juhan of Florida and Rev. Bernard I. Bell of St. Stephen's College.

Monday's program included the following services and meetings:

7:30 A. M. Corporate Communion; Renewal of Vows.

9:30 A. M. Meditation, "How to Pray", Bishop Shayler.

10:00 A. M. "The Program of the Commission on Evangelism," the Rev. William H. Milton, D. D., Assistant to the Chairman of the Commission on Evangelism.

10:30 A. M. Business Session.

11:30 A. M. Group Conferences: (1) Evangelism Through Study and Discussion Groups, Miss Laura Boyer, Education Secretary, Woman's Auxiliary; (2) Evangelism Through the Church's Program and Christian Stewardship, Mrs. James M. Maxon, Tennessee.

2:30 P. M. "Bible Study," the Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, D. D., Secretary, Adult Education Division, Department of Religious Education.

3:00 P. M. "Evangelism in Rural Fields," the Rev. Harrison W. Foreman, Secretary, Commission on Rural Work, Department of Christian Social Service.

3:30 P. M. Group Conferences: (1) Evangelism Through Social Service and Rural Work, Mrs. John M. Glenn, President, Church Mission of Help; (2) Evangelism Through Individual Work, Mrs. John R. Wheeler, Director, Women's Organizations, Sewanee Summer Conference.

On Tuesday, the closing day of the Convention, there was a meditation service at 9:30 A. M. and a quiet hour for all women at 4:00 P. M. On this day there was also a business session, when there was an election of National Council members.

Social functions of the Convention included a luncheon at St. John's, Georgetown, a reception by Bishop and Mrs. Freeman in the Bishop's Garden, and a luncheon on the closing day at the Washington Hotel. The topic of the addresses at this luncheon was, "The Order of the Daughters of the King", and it was discussed from the aspect of the Past, the Present and the Future. The Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Western New York, delivered the closing address of the luncheon on the topic, "Helps to Fulfill Our View of Service".

"World Peace" will be the subject of the address of Bishop Brent of Western New York, and United States Senator Wm. E. Borah.

Anglo-Norman Mystery Play on Program for General Convention.

A striking contribution to the program of the coming great General Convention of the Bishops and Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church will be made by the Episcopal Actors' Guild of America in the dramatic production which they will give of "Adam", an impressive Anglo-Norman mystery play of the twelfth century. There will be four performances of the play, to which admission will be by invitation only. These will be held in the Guild Hall of Epiphany Church, 1317 G Street, Washington, D. C., of which the Rev. Dr. Ze.B. Phillips is rector. The visiting bishops and delegates to the General Convention will be the guests at the 5 P. M. performances on Thursday, October 18, and Friday, October 19; and delegates from the various women's organizations of the Church will be the guests at the 2 P. M. performances on the same dates (Thursday and Friday).

"Adam," or the "Mystere d'Adam", is notable on several scores. It is the first of the religious dramas to be enacted outside the precincts of the Church; the first to employ the vernacular exclusively in its dialogue; and probably the first in which any serious attempt was made to delineate character. Moreover in its outward form and its highly developed scheme of rhymes and metres, it constitutes one of the finest achievements of medieval poetry. The translation to be used by the Episcopal Actors' Guild is the metrical form by Prof. Edward Noble Stone of the University of Washington, Seattle, Wash. His translation is from the original Norman French and Latin.

Incidental music for the Guild's production has been composed by Adolph Torobsky, organist of Epiphany Church (Washington, D. C.). Mr. Torobsky himself will render the entire score at the organ during all the performances, and will be assisted in choral work by members of the Epiphany Church choir.

Miss Kate Oglebay, an authority on medieval Church drama, is General Chairman of the Committee of the Episcopal Actors' Guild for putting on the Washington production of "Adam".

The period costumes for the play have been designed by Mrs. John W. Alexander, who has designed costumes for many Broadway productions of note, and who is well known in Washington and nationally as vice-president of the Federation of Arts, which has national headquarters in the Bar Building, Washington.

The Rev. Clarence Parker, of Chevy Chase, Md., is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee for Actors. John Davenport Long, well-known for his dramatic work with the Arts Club of Washington and other groups, is stage manager of the production. The stage settings are authentic in details and are based on the earliest extant pictures of settings of the early mystery plays after they were taken out of the churches and given in the public squares.

The committee of Washington patrons and patronesses for "Adam" include Bishop James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington; Major-General John A. LeJeune, General John J. Pershing, Newbold Noyes, Mrs. Z. Barney Phillips, Mrs. William C. Rives and Major-General Charles F. Summerall.

Several well-known residents of Washington will appear in the cast of "Adam", including Leslie Waudby, the actor, as Aaron, and Owen Potter as the Guardian Angel. Others in the cast include Albert Phillips as The Figure; Anton Bundsman as Adam; Mirriam Cutter as Eve; Col. Reginald Barlow as the Devil; the Rev. Phillips Osgood, rector of St. Mark's in Minneapolis, Minn., as Abraham; Frank Ferguson as Moses; Marius Bernard Wall as David; Harry Neville as Solomon; Charles Dew Clark as Jeremiah; Chas. M. Seay as Habakkuk; Harold Gould as Isaiah; and Percy Moore as Balaam. Mr. Moore directed the preliminary rehearsals of the play this summer.

Officers of the Episcopal Actors' Guild include the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, honorary president; George Arliss, president; vice-presidents, the Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., the Rev. Neal Dodd of Hollywood, and Grant Mitchell; the Rev. Randolph Ray, D. D., rector of the Little Church Around the Corner (Church of the Transfiguration), New York City, vice-president, warden and chairman of the Council; Thomas S. McLane, treasurer; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, recording secretary; the Rev. Dr. W. Harold Weigle, Jr., resident chaplain; and Percy Moore, executive secretary.

Bishop Coadjutor for Pennsylvania Elected.

The Rt. Rev. Edward Makin Cross, D. D., Bishop of Spokane, was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania on October 2, at the Convention called together in Philadelphia by Bishop Garland for that purpose.

Bishop Cross, in accepting the call, will be coming home to his native state. He was born in Philadelphia on March 1, 1880, the son of James Sheldrake Cross and Mary (Callagham). He received a degree from the Philadelphia Divinity School in 1908. He was ordained Deacon in 1907 by Bishop Whitaker and Priest in 1908 by Bishop Hare. From 1907-10 he served at St. Thomas' Church, Sturgis, S. D.; 1910-1916 at St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, Wyoming, and from 1916-1924 at the Church of St. John the Evangelist in St. Paul, Minnesota. On June 24, 1914, he was married to Esther Angela Ware of Alliance, Nebraska.

He was elected Bishop of Spokane in 1924, and on the twentieth of February was consecrated by Bishops McElwain, Page, Freeman, Burleson, Roberts, Thomas and Tyler.

Of the Convention the Rev. J. R. Ellis writes us as follows:

"I was present at the Convention of the Pennsylvania Diocese, which elected its Coadjutor on the second of October, and was so pleased with what I saw and heard that I am moved to write of my impression of this meeting of the brethren.

One was struck with the spiritual atmosphere which pervaded this coming together of the brethren, superinduced largely by and through the godly demeanor of its Bishop, Garland.

Fortunately he is not much of a talker. His words are few and to the point. His men are loyal and disposed to follow him, though at pleasure to differ with him if in their judgment they deem it wise to do so. For instance, incidentally, the Convention voted not to sell its Church House, though such a movement seemed to have the endorsement of the Bishop and the Standing Committee and other interested Church authorities, of which there seemed to be many.

The election resulting in the selection of Bishop Cross of Spokane was speedily and quietly conducted with no apparent contention or controversy. When, on the third ballot, Bishop Cross was declared the nominee of the Convention by the Bishop, the body rose and burst into the Gloria in Excelsis, which it sung with splendid unanimity, led without the organ by the Secretary of the Convention. Surely the Holy Spirit was here with His guiding hand, and when the Bishop bade them to prayer of thanksgiving for the result, the effect was most inspiring.

The Council met at eleven o'clock and adjourned at three—one and a half hours— for luncheon, thus showing that when the "King's business requires haste" brethren dwelling together in unity and harmony may speedily bring about results of a kind to commend our praise and admiration.

It may be remarked in passing that when one hears pleasantly the word Presbyter on the same platform with a brother who crosses himself during the singing of the Gloria in Excelsis the Church in its boasted comprehensiveness has about reached its carrying capacity."

Conference of Church Workers Among Colored People.

The Conference of Church Workers Among Colored People was held at St. Augustine's Church, Brooklyn (the Rev. George Frazier Miller, D. D., rector), from Tuesday to Friday, October 2-5. This conference was organized in 1883, and for many years met annually; but more recently its national sessions have been held in the years of General Convention only, and local or provincial meetings in the other years. The attendance at the present session was more than one hundred and twenty-five delegates, including sixty clergymen; and they came from every Province except the Northwest and the Pacific Coast. At the opening service on Tuesday evening, an address of welcome was made on behalf of Bishop Stires by the Rev. St. Clair Hester, D. D., President of the Standing Committee of this diocese. Of the topics discussed on Wednesday, much interest was developed in the question, "Can the Suffragan Bishopric be Helpfully Adapted to the Needs of Our Work?" and to the "Best Methods of Developing our Missions into Self-

OCTOBER.

1. Monday.
7. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
14. Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18. Thursday. S. Luke.
21. Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
28. Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity. SS. Simon and Jude.
31. Wednesday.

COLLECT FOR NINETEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, forasmuch as without Thee we are not able to please Thee; Mercifully grant that Thy Holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule our hearts; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. LUKE'S DAY.

Almighty God, Who calledst Luke the Physician, whose praise is in the Gospel, to be an Evangelist and Physician of the soul; May it please Thee that, by the wholesome medicines of the doctrine delivered by him, all the diseases of our souls may be healed; through the merits of Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

LET ME BE AWARE.

"God, let me be aware.
Let me not stumble blindly down the ways,
Just getting somehow safely through the days,
Not even groping for another hand,
Not even wondering why it all was planned,
Eyes to the ground unseeking for the light,
Soul never aching for a wild-winged flight,
Please, keep me eager just to do my share,
God, let me be aware.

"God, let me be aware.
Stab my soul fiercely with another's pain,
Let me walk seeing horror and stain,
Let my hands, groping, find other hands,
Give me the heart that divines, understands,
Give me the courage, wounded, to fight,
Flood me with knowledge, drench me in light,
Please keep me eager just to do my share.
God, let me be aware."

—Miriam Teichner."

Spiritualizing the Budget.

The budget is the business side of the church; and it is as important in its place as the spiritual side. Money makes the church go, and the church can no more be efficiently operated without money than can a bank or a steel mill. The church has bills to pay and it must be honest and pay them. Jesus with only twelve disciples had a treasurer and paid His bills. A budget means not only money but a systematic and adequate provision of funds for all the needs of the church. It stands opposed to unsystematic haphazard collections and other ways of gathering money to meet bills and cancel debts. A budget is business reduced to plan and means, foresight and certainty. It is good sense applied to the financial affairs of the church.

Every good thing is attended with disadvantages and dangers. The good is ever an enemy of the better, and the better of the best. The budget may be made so complex and meticulous that it absorbs too much time and energy to run it. A business may be burdened with books, tied and fettered with red tape, smothered under details and trivialities. The office may be larger than the works, and there may be more bookkeepers and accountants than salesmen and customers. The overhead may increase until the running expenses cut into and reduce the profits. Blowing the whistle may so exhaust the steam as to stop the engine. This, however, is not ordinarily a danger with our congregational budgets, although the Boards need to watch this point.

A greater danger is that the budget may seem to be the main business, so that the means becomes the end and the secular smothers the spiritual. This danger has attended religion all through its history. In Jerusalem the splendid Temple of the Lord crowded out the Lord of the Temple, and the same danger still attends not only stately cathedrals and gorgeous ceremonies, but also plain houses of worship and a bare service devoid of taste and beauty. Money may also push into the foreground of a church and make more noise and absorb more attention and energy than its spiritual activities and life. Urgent appeals for money clutter up the pulpit notices until the people are weary, and campaigns for money for special purposes or to clear off debts are an almost continuous performance. The impression may be made that money is the main business of religion and some say outright that the church is only a mercenary institution and the preacher is only feathering his own nest.

A budget, also, may be set too low so that the activities of the church are always pinched and the year ends in debt. Debt is a very demon of obstruction and discouragement with many a church and church board. Sometimes debts accumulate until something desperate has to be done, and as in such cases the pastor's salary is generally in arrears he must go in order that money may be raised under pressure to pay him off and make a new start. And so money is often the misery of a church, getting it into a mess in which its proper work is swamped in the mire.

Is there no cure for this unhappy state of things? Can not the budget be lifted out of this rut and hole and transformed from a burden to a stepping stone, its weights transmuted into wings and its duty into delight? There certainly must be and is. The thing has been done and can always be done.

What is needed is a new point of view and a new spirit. All material things are capable of spiritual interpretation and application. Long ago Jehovah took the rainbow that had been glowing in the sky ever since the sun first kissed the rain and transfigured it into a spiritual sign and pledge of the divine faithfulness in maintaining the stability of nature and the succession of seedtime and harvest. Jesus took bread and wine, two of the commonest and most universal of material elements, and baptized them with a new meaning that made them shine with spiritual light and heavenly radiance. Christianity has a genius for taking material things and lifting them to spiritual uses.

Art does this in another way. The painter takes common paint and canvas and combines and blends them into a glorious masterpiece of form and color that may draw visitors from all the ends of the earth and rule as from their thrones through the centuries. The musician takes the common sounds that fill the air and weaves them into chords and songs and grand symphonies that open a new heaven and a new earth. The poet takes the words that we all use and are scattered by the thousand through the cheapest dictionary, and arranges and ligatures them into magic melody or builds them into stately cathedrals of poetic thought. What is the means by which this is done? Imagination. Imagination penetrates to the inner meaning and magic and beauty of things and sees the painting in the paint and the radiant angel in the rough marble block. Imagination throws a halo around all common things and baptizes and transfigures them with new glory. When the American painter West was asked what he mixed his paints with, he answered, "With brains, Sir". He meant imagination. This is the subtle element that can lift any common thing to the most glorious meaning and use and can throw its transfiguring splendor over all our life.

Imagination can transfigure the budget. Money is religious and has spiritual affinities and easily lends itself to this higher significance. What we need to do with the budget is to see what it is for and what wide service and noble ministry it may fulfill. What lies wrapped up in the budget? It may seem to be only a bag of money or a bank account, but it conceals treasures more wonderful and precious than any bundle of bonds or box of jewels. A church and school in which the gospel is preached and souls are saved and children are taught and led to the Saviour's arms are in that budget. Homes that are purified and strengthened and filled with peace and happiness are in it. A cleaner and better and more beautiful city is in it. Sorrowing sinful souls cleansed and healed and soothed are in it. Missions that can throw their arms across the country and around the world everywhere scattering truth and grace, sweetness and light are in it. The Great Commission of Christ with all its promises and prospects and victories are in it. Our own souls lifted out of the ruts of drudgery and bondage and worldliness into wider and richer life and freer liberty are in it. All the rising palaces and towers of the city of God are in it. The praises of men made better by the gospel on earth and the songs of the redeemed in heaven are in that budget.

Let us disabuse our minds of a fallacy that may be lurking in this view of the subject. A spiritualized budget does not mean a less budget or a budget that will raise itself. Genius never dispenses with work, but it often means the hardest and most exacting work. Napoleon, with his enormous military genius, said there was one thing he never spared himself and that was the most strenuous toil. While his generals slept he worked far into the night. Inspiration can never dispense with perspiration. The budget is still a budget after we have spiritualized it. Imagination is not an easy way of escaping work, and the most buoyant disposition cannot do away with drudgery. The spiritualized budget ought to be and will be a larger budget. Under its spell we shall not pay less but more. And it will still take organization and plan and purpose, personal solicitation and careful and patient work to get it subscribed and paid. The successful business man in the midst of his expanding business and growing profits, the artist in the high-tide of his popularity, does not relax his efforts, but rather increases them. The spiritualized budget is still business and subject to all the laws of business, but it is also lifted to a higher level and kindled and irradiated with a new meaning and lightened with a new spirit. Then the budget will no longer be bondage, but be freedom and joy, all our treasuries will fill and overflow, the wheel of the Lord's chariot will be unloosed from the fetters of inadequate means and from the clogs of debt, and the kingdom of God will come in our hearts and churches and in all the world with ever widening sweep and power and joy.—Presbyterian Banner.

LOVE.

It was Fear that followed me,
Fast I fled alone,
On my cheek its blighting breath,
In my ear its moan.

It was Despair that pressed me close
Close against a wall,
Laid cold hands upon my heart,
Stung my throat with gall.

There I fell and there I lay,
Face against the wall,
Crying out for Death to come,
Come and end it all.

Death came not nor heeded me,
Love drew near instead;
Love knelt down and lifted me,
Gave me wine and bread.

Quickly then Despair and Fear
Fled at Love's command,
Step by step I climbed the wall,
Holding fast Love's hand.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Rooster and the Train.

If the Spelling Book had the least virtue of Consistency, and Worcester did spell Wooster, then Rochester should spell Rooster. And this I think the more since I was there, and beheld an Animal of that genus who had escaped from a Crate at the Railway Station as two men were passing it from a Truck to an Express Car. And when they saw that the Rochester had gotten out, straightway they left the Crate half-way in and half-way out, and pursued the Fowl. And they chased him up the Platform and down, and between the two Trains that stood on either side of the Platform, and they caught him not. And at length the Rochester flew under one of the Trains, and, when men ran around to the other side to head him off, he perched himself on a Truck beneath a car and above the Car Wheels and gave a Frightened but Defiant Crow.

And by that time there were more men in pursuit. And no one seemed to care whether any Trains went out from the Station, but only whether they should be able to catch the Rochester.

And after a good while they caught him, and I heard him squawk as they held him. And I counted the men who were in at the Finish, and they were Fourteen.

But their troubles were not at an end. For the Rochester had gotten out of a smaller hole than they could crowd him in through, and they were desirous that the hole should not be made larger, lest the other fowls escape. And how they managed it I know not, but I assume that they got him back inside, although he may not have been worth all the cost of his capture.

And I wondered how it had fared if the Conductor of that train had professed no interest in that single Rochester, and had shouted All Aboard, and the Train had gone many miles into the Country, and the Fowl had then escaped, and found companionship, and fought his way to Recognition and Supremacy the way men have to when they are hurled out into strange Environments. For he might have become the noted Progenitor of Famous Breeds of Fowl, and been Eminent among birds of like feather.

But I think that instead of all this, he may be doing duty at Thanksgiving for a Small Family, in place of a Turkey.

And upon such narrow chances do the lives of men as well as of fowls appear to turn.

Nevertheless, I do believe that the trains run upon some sort of schedule, and that the lives of good men are ordered by the Lord. But this I hold in faith, for Experience is Variable, and life's Crates break at strange junctions. —Exchange.

Prayer Triumphant.

Louis Deschamps.

The best essay on prayer is the life and work of a praying Christian. Prayer can not be comprehended or explained. Like the sacred silence of a cathedral, or the sublime view of a starlit night, prayer eludes description. It is the mortal expression of the immortal, for communion with God precedes immortality with God. To pray is not only to ask, but also to receive without asking treasures far more glorious than human petitions: the silent, profound awareness of Divine Presence in humble meditation, revealing God's love and wisdom in thoughts like stars in the night of doubts and fears. Prayer is essentially unselfish. God knows every need, and human lips must ask wisdom more than things. Having murmured many petitions, human imperfection would see them answered in human fashion, arising from the knees in expectation of future blessing, rather than conscious of present good. Prayer is two-fold, petition and meditation; petition to ask, meditation to hear the answer, the real answer, in terms of silent, spiritual experience revealing God to man. Who has not been convinced of the folly of some petition during the silent meditation following the prayer? Not that human needs are not granted, but that the greatest answers to prayer are spiritual lessons.

Children talk with parents, even when not asking for something. To pray only when in need or distress is forgetfulness of God. It is during the sacred hour of meditative prayer that the lessons of spiritual truth are learned. In the stress of need or emergency, prayers are necessarily selfish. The experience of life should confirm rather than deny the power of prayer. Yet many Christians conceal in their heart a graveyard of unanswered prayers, where blasted hopes mark the ruins of bright aspirations and dreams. Often the taunting memory of one's past ambitions refuses to die, haunting the silent hour with apparent denial of prayer's victory. This should not be so, because unanswered prayers are never final. There is no human limitation to the divine nature of prayer. Just as immortality is a spiritual existence which the tomb can not symbolize, so prayer is a spiritual power which can not be measured in terms of things. The tragedy of unanswered prayer is more pitiful than condemnatory. It is the difficult problem of reconciling mortal mind with immortal soul. Although the suffering of those who grieve over the bitter disappointment is very real, yet the tomb over their hopes is but the creation of their own desperation.

Prayer is the highway from earth to heaven, and those who would obstruct it with graves and vaults are not guiltless. Despair may deaden an aching heart or relieve a faltering faith by oblivion, but it denies the true nature of prayer. It is a confusion of human standards with divine power. When a prayer seems unanswered, the very silence itself answers the Christian, because he knows it is God's way of warning that enough has not been done, either in work or comprehension, to justify the prayer. Real prayer is a means of learning, rather than exploiting divine power.

When prayer becomes entirely petition, and one would dictate to God; when prayer becomes an argument, as if to convince God of the merit of our will; in short, when prayer is command, the Spirit that answers can not make itself heard in the din of egotism. An unanswered prayer is a misconception, for every real prayer is answered either in fact or in wisdom. God's promises are never broken. A parent's love must ever refuse many childish requests, and so must the Omniscient Father often deny many desires of His children. Every soul has its Gethsemane, when fond dreams are shattered and treasures lost. Even the Saviour cried out in agonizing question. At times the disappointment seems unbearable. Yet the Lord of lords and King of kings said "Not my will, but Thine be done". His example answers the problems of prayer. The supreme purpose of prayer is God's, not man's.

In the maze of circumstances, currents and cross-currents of events, exhausting comprehension in the diversity of fortune; in the unfathomable working of remote causes and effects, there is but one solution of the problem of chance in human life; religious faith expressed in prayer. Prayer is ever triumphant, because its power is superior to worldly fortune. It is not learned mechanically nor reluctantly, though it must be learned dutifully. Spontaneous prayer is real prayer. Victor Hugo expressed this thought when he observed that some thoughts are prayers. Those who flee themselves can not learn to pray, because every mask and disguise of human convenience must be discarded before the Throne of Grace. Faith must be stronger than shame when prayer throws the light of divine laws into the innermost recesses of the soul. If one feels ill at ease in the company of his own conscience, let him learn to pray. There are always times.

"When ended revels leave us lonely men" and something deep within the heart yearns for communion with God. In prayer one loses self; becomes a part of the invisible spiritual realm; discovers the greatest heritage of the ages; and learns "what is that good and perfect will of God."

Move to the fore!
Not yours to shrink as the feeble ones may;
Not yours to parley and quibble and shirk.
Ill fare the world if you do not God's work—
Move to the fore!

For the Young Folks

GIVE TO THE WORLD THE BEST YOU HAVE.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

Two Clocks.

There were two clocks in a certain house. One stood in the hall like a grave warden or a stern old sentinel. It was a tall grandfather clock with a dark case and a sober face and a very slow and solemn tick. Like Longfellow's "Clock on the Stairs", it seemed to say, "Forever—Never; Never—Forever". As you listened to it you felt that Time was a very solemn thing, and when it struck the hour, its slow notes went echoing through the house like bells that tolled to say, "Another hour is dead and gone forever". It ticked one tick to the second, sixty to the minute, year in and year out, and it had done it for a hundred years.

Nor was it any wonder that it thought a good deal of itself and thought it knew everything. It heard people tell how old it was, and admiring its case.

Now, once it had to go off for a visit to the clock-maker, and while it was away a new-comer came to the kitchen. This was a cheery little clock with a bright and shining face. It struck the hours with a joyous ringing note, which seemed to say "Hurrah! a new hour is born, a new hour with sixty golden minutes of happiness. Get busy and enjoy them." Its tick tripped along on the lightest of feet, dancing through the minutes as if it felt Time was a glad and splendid thing.

The old clock came back after awhile to its place in the hall, and was more dignified than ever, for it had been much admired at the clock-maker's.

When it heard this strange sound coming from the kitchen it was puzzled and annoyed. Here was something new! "And in my house, too!"

It decided to ignore it, and much preferred when the kitchen door was shut.

One day the kitchen clock said, "Good morning, I am the new kitchen clock."

But the old clock said nothing.

The new-comer tried again. "Good-morning, I'm glad you're back. We all missed you."

At this the old clock unbent and said stiffly, "What did you say you were?"

"The new kitchen clock."

"Oh! indeed! I thought it was a new egg beater or something. Why are you making that odd irritating noise?"

"Oh! that's my tick; I am telling the time."

"Don't be absurd. There is only one way of telling the time, one tick to the second and sixty ticks to the minute. That's the correct way. My way, 'TICK—TICK', like that. Your way, 'Tick-tick-tick-tick', is not dignified. It's not decent. It doesn't help people to be serious. It's flippant and irreverent. It's not right. You tick four to my one, and I suppose when I say it's one o'clock you'll say it s four o'clock."

"Well," said the new clock, "I want people to be happy. And after all if we agree at the end of every minute and at every hour, its all right surely."

"No, it isn't. I'm a hundred years old, and I tell you if we don't agree in every ticket we don't agree at all."

"But," said the other, "though I tick two hundred and forty to the minute and you tick sixty- yet if we finish the minutes at the same time we do agree."

"How can two hundred and forty be the same as sixty?"

"But two hundred and forty seconds are the same as sixty whole seconds. That's arithmetic and you can work it out and see."

"It's impudence and new-fangled nonsense, and I won't. You must draw the line somewhere, and if you once allow anybody to start ticking four times instead of once to the second we'll have things calling themselves clocks and ticking eight and sixteen and goodness knows what to the second."

"Well," said the kitchen clock timidly, "why not?"

"It won't do. It's not done. It never has been done. I tell you once for all, my way is the only way. We don't agree and we can't be friends. You may have the face of a clock, and the figures of a clock, and the hands of a clock, and a bell with the voice of an angel, and people may cook by you and catch trains by you, but I say you are not a clock at all!"

And therewith the old clock tolled out the hour as if we were ringing the funeral knell over the little clock's grave.

That night the master of the house said, "Put back the kitchen clock ten minutes: it's fast by the hall clock," and the hall clock nearly burst its door open with satisfaction.

But the next evening when the master of the house came back, he said, "The hall clock was ten minutes slow and the kitchen clock right; and I lost my train. I wonder how that happened."

A little later the kitchen door was opened and the old clock hailed the new one.

"Little neighbor," he said, "I have been thinking things over, and I want to be friends with you. I lost time because I lost my temper. I see you were right. There are different ways of telling the time, and the only thing that matters is that we tell the right time."

And then, just to prove it, they struck the hour together, and the serious note of the old clock mingled sweetly with the cheery note of the new clock, for each in his own way, was telling the same time. It was a striking agreement.—Balanced Burdens.

Little Princess Shanti's Jalsa.

Little Princess Shanti was having a jalsa, which means a party. It was a birthday party, and such a birthday party never was! All the little noble children from far and near were invited—one hundred of them. They were playing in the great council room, and having such a good time. My, how they did romp and scamper!

On a table in the middle of the veranda was the birthday cake. My, me! What a cake! It was not one cake, but six cakes, because the little Princess was six years old. And the last cake was the biggest, and the first one was the littlest. And all six were piled one on top of the other like building blocks.

When Princess Shanti and her guests had eaten all the fruits, nuts and sweets they could possibly eat, they ran back to the big council room again.

There the servants' children and the poor children of the city were standing about watching the party. One little girl, Phulwa, which means flowers, was a cripple, and her big brother, Sunni, had to carry her.

When every one was tired with racing and playing they gathered around a big table loaded with toys. The Princess began to give the toys away to the guests.

Little Phulwa watched so wistfully. When the Princess took up a beautiful big Kewpie doll and gave it away to a dear little girl, Phulwa put her hands over her eyes and cried.

Sunni said, "Why do you cry, Little Sister?"

And Phulwa answered, "I have no doll, and oh, Big Brother, the Kewpie doll is so beautiful!"

Now, just at that very moment the little girl with the Kewpie doll happened to be coming toward Phulwa and Sunni. Sunni put his little sister down on the floor and waited till the little girl had come quite close. Then he snatched away the doll from the little girl and gave it to Phulwa.

The children screamed and shouted, and a big servant began to beat Sunni, and the Princess' father, the big Maharajah, came running out of his room to see what was the matter.

"What?" said he. "Tears on the Princess' birthday! This won't do. Now tell me all about."

"My little sister has no doll," said Sunni, "and Princess Shanti has so many. I only took one Kewpie doll."

The little Princess stood quite still for nearly half a minute. She was thinking hard. She put her arms about the neck of the little girl who had the Kewpie doll.

"Will you give me the Kewpie doll back for my birthday?" she asked.

The little girl said, "Yes, of course, because you are the Princess."

So Shanti took the Kewpie doll and gave it back to the little crippled Phulwa, and then she said to her little friends, "I have given each of you a toy. Will you give it back to me?"

And they did, because she was the Princess, you know.

Shanti gave each toy to a poor child.

And when all the poor children had each been given a toy, she said, "And now, father (he was the big Maharajah, you know), let us give all these poor children the rest of the birthday cake and fruits and sweets."

And they did. And everybody said the little Princess Shanti would grow up to be a kind, beautiful Haharrani. And she did.—Apples of Gold.

The Boy That Believed.

A Sunday-school teacher wished to show his class how the free gift of God is. He took a silver watch from his pocket and offered it to the oldest boy in the class.

"It's yours, if you will take it."

The little fellow sat and grinned at the teacher. He thought he was joking. The teacher offered it to the next boy, and said:

"Take that watch: it is yours."

The little fellow thought he would be laughed at if he held out his hand, and therefore sat still. In the same way the teacher went nearly round the class; but not one of them would accept the proffered gift. At length he came to the smallest boy. When the watch was offered to the little fellow, he took it and put it into his pocket. All the class laughed at him.

"I am thankful, my boy," said the teacher, "that you believe my word. The watch is yours. Take good care of it. Wind it up every night."

The rest of the class looked on in amazement; and one of them said: "Teacher, you don't mean that the watch is his? You don't mean that he hasn't to give it back to you?"

"No," said the teacher, "he hasn't to give it back to me. It is his own now."

"Oh—h—h! If I had only known that, wouldn't I have taken it!"—D. L. Moody.

RAIN JOY.

'Tis raining, yet the robin's song
Rings clear from out the trees
And Nature's stringless harp flings forth
Her tunes upon the breeze.

'Tis raining, yet the roses bloom
Around my door today,
And in the willow tree I see
Two mocking birds at play.

'Tis raining, yet the minutes fly—
The day can not last long—
But, oh, how close God comes to me
In rain-soaked bloom and song!

—A. L. W.

The Little Brown Image.

Billy found the tiny brown image in his mother's work basket. On stormy days or when his mother was away and only Aunt Nan was at home, Billy was allowed to amuse himself with the contents of the big work basket. Aunt Nan painted pictures in the little room she called her study. If Billy wanted her, she always came, but he knew just how anxious she was to finish a picture for the big exhibition in the city, so he tried to bother her as little as possible.

That was why Billy was looking over the contents of the work basket one day when his mother had gone to make a call. There were many interesting things in the basket. There were needles of all sizes, pretty colored skeins and spools of silk and thread, a bag of buttons of all shapes and sizes, and a big golden lump of bees-wax, beside many other things. Billy sometimes borrowed some of the buttons and strung them on stout thread. Then he would whirl the thread until the buttons seemed to make just a single bright wheel that sent a multitude of little sunbeams dancing on the white ceiling.

But today as he searched for the brightest buttons, he came upon a queer little brown image. Billy thought it was a tiny doll. It was not very pretty, but it certainly was odd. It seemed to be made of some kind of smooth brown stone and it had a funny homely little face. It was so small that he could hold it in one hand easily.

"It looks like a little brown man," said Billy. "I wonder where Mother got it and what she is going to do with it. If I'm very careful of it, I'm sure she won't mind my playing with it."

He took it out of doors and sat down by the brook. There he scooped up a lot of fine white sand and built a little house. He scooped out the inside of the house and put the little image in it. Then he made a garage of sand and laid out a path and a garden. He stuck twigs into the ground to represent trees and laid out walls with pretty stones from the edge of the water. He was so busy that the time seemed to just fly and he was almost surprised when he heard his mother returning. He scampered into the house, taking the little brown image with him.

"O Mother, I've had a regular game," he cried. "I found the little brown doll in your work basket and I knew you wouldn't mind my playing with it."

"The little brown doll," said Mrs. Hardy. "Oh! I meant to have shown it to you, but I had to go out. That really isn't a doll at all, Billy. Your Uncle Harvey sent it to me yesterday from India."

Billy was alert at once. His Uncle Harvey had gone away across the water to a strange country to teach the little boys and girls about Jesus.

"What is it, Mother, if it isn't a doll?" asked Billy.

"It is an idol," said his mother; "a little heathen god, Billy."

Billy's blue eyes opened very wide. "That funny little stone thing a—a god!" he cried. "Why, Mother, it's nothing but an image."

Mrs. Hardy laughed, but there were tears in her eyes. "That is all it is, Billy," she replied gently. "I'm glad you know it. But if you hadn't been taught any better, you would be very much afraid of this tiny image. You wouldn't have dared to touch it or carry it out of doors, and play with it as you have today. You would have set it up in a little nook called a shrine, and you would have prayed to it every day and given it rice. No matter if you were very hungry, you would have spared some rice for the idol."

Billy could scarcely believe her, though he knew what his mother told him was true. "Pray to a stone doll!" he objected. "Why, it can't hear a word. And it can't eat. You know it can't, Mother."

"Indeed I know it," his mother agreed. "But thousands of poor mothers don't know it. And thousands of poor little boys and girls are being taught to fear that poor little idol. They live in terror of offending it. All their lives they worry about evil spirits and try to please them by making them offerings. Sometimes they even cut their bodies and make themselves suffer dreadfully to try to please a bit of stone they call a god."

Billy drew a long breath. He began to understand now why Uncle Harvey had gone to India. For a moment he was very silent. Once more he picked up the little brown image and looked at it. It was just the same, a mere bit of cold brown stone with a homely little carved face. Billy could not imagine how anybody could pray to such a thing as that. Why, all the afternoon he had tumbled it about just as he pleased! It was nothing but like some the fragments of stone he had gathered from the brook to make his miniature walls with.

Running into his own little bedroom, Billy found his little leather pocketbook that Aunt Nan had given him for his Christmas present. He emptied its contents into his mother's lap.

"I was saving up to buy a new express wagon," he told his mother, "one with red wheels. But my old wagon is still strong, if it isn't pretty. And I want you to send this money to Uncle Harvey and ask him to use it to buy pretty cards like those we have in Sunday School that tell us about Jesus and how He loves us. I'm sure if they understand about Him, they won't be afraid any more of idols and won't pray to them. Will they, Mother?"

"No," said Mrs. Hardy, "no one who learns about Jesus is ever afraid of an idol again. And I will send your gift to Uncle Harvey right away and tell him what it is for. I will give you the little brown image, Billy, and you may keep it."

"I'll keep it," said Billy, "to show to the boys and girls I know, so they'll be glad to help those other boys and girls away over in India. But I'll never pray to it or give it anything to eat," he laughed, "because I know it's nothing but a little brown image."

No Loose Ends.

Louise was spending a week with her Greataunt Hilda, who weaves beautiful rag rugs. "You work every minute, auntie," she said.

"Not quite that, but I'm doing something most of the time. I don't like to leave anything at loose ends."

The words puzzled Louise a little, but watching the brisk old lady made them clear. Aunt Hilda had picked up the rug she just cut from the loom. At each end there was a fringe of warp about three inches long. Aunt Hilda made these ends even and began knotting the warp fringe in groups of six strands. When this was done she rolled the rug and laid it away.

"Suppose you brush up the litter and then we'll go in the other room," she said.

Louise likes to sweep, but sometimes she does not remember to put her broom and dustpan away! This time she did, because she knew just how auntie herself would have done. "I didn't have any loose ends," she told herself proudly as she went to sit beside Aunt Hilda, who had taken her mending basket now. That made Louise recall that she, too, had stockings to darn.

"It's good for me to visit Aunt Hilda," she thought, for she is wise enough to see that she has a habit of leaving many things unfinished. What trouble both she and Brother Carl have because of the things they "leave at loose ends"! Much of their work and even their play has to be done over because of being left like that scarf the kitten raveled so easily. Aunt Hilda knows better than to make herself so much extra work. Everything she does counts, because it is finished right.

Fretful hours, shame, and danger still come from leaving things unfinished. Girls and boys are wise to train themselves to better ways. The difference will show quickly and will also be a help to them their whole lives long.—Mary S. Stover, in The Lutheran.

FLOWERS.

Maude Mumma.

Flowers sent from Heaven above,
Come to tell us of His love;
Of the life beyond the grave,
And His wondrous power to save.

Brightest gems from gardens fair,
Tell of Jesus' tender care;
Can you look on blooms like these,
And not wish His heart to please?

There is at the core of all men something which the whole world of nature, of science, and of art, is inadequate to fill; and this part of man is no mere adjunct of his nature, but his very most permanent and highest self. What this inmost part craves is sympathy something like itself. Yes, high above it none can answer it but God.—I. G. Shank.

THE EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

NOVEMBER 25-DECEMBER 9, 1928

Nine years have passed since the Church officially adopted the Missionary Program known as the Nation-Wide Campaign.

Reviewing those past eventful years, one is impressed with the material expansion of the Church; but still more impressive is the spiritual experience manifested.

Material assets are better than ever before. But the spiritual assets far outrank the material. The Church has found that in carrying out her program, new doors of blessing have been opened to her, and in following the vision courageously she has seen the path of duty more clearly and has tasted the sweetness of the joy inherent in sacrifice.

The end of a Triennium is not merely a time for recapitulation. It is a season for deeper consecration. The Church has come to a Jordan of time rather than place, and "must pass over."

The Church is the speaking lips; Christ is the voice. The Church is the ingathering arm; Christ is the strength. The Church must continue to speak and guide if this world is to hear and be guided into Christ's Way of Life.

If this is a critical time for the Church, it is a desperately critical time for the world, and the Church must rush forward to meet the issue.

There will be no missionary or financial problems that must go unsolved, if with high resolve the people of the Church, in the Every Member Canvass, will dedicate anew both life and substance to His Program.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Sustaining Parishes". But the most enlightening was a paper by the Rev. Geo. M. Plaskett, B. D., of Orange, N. J., who under the subject, "The Black Belt of the Episcopal Church: Mississippi or —?" disclosed facts to show that, wherever the black belt of general population may be, the black belt of the Episcopal Church is in the Province of New York and New Jersey. Here are 12,000 of our 40,000 colored communicants, who contributed last year $154,009.06 of the total of about $500,000 given by our colored communicants. In the Province of Sewanee are about 8,000 colored communicants. Apparently it is in the Second Province that this problem is to be faced and its solution worked out.

A variety of pertinent and helpful topics was present.

New Editor of "The Record".

Miss Sarah Morrison assumed her duties as editor of The Record of the Girls' Friendly Society on September 1. She is a daughter of the Bishop of Iowa. She graduated from Wellesley, received her M. A. from Columbia, and has taught at St. Katharine's School, Davenport, Iowa, and in the high schools of Rock Island, Illinois, and Davenport. Extra-curricula activities in which she has engaged will be extremely helpful in her new work with G. F. S. girls and associates. More recently she has been connected with Macmillan Company in the Department of Educational Advertising.

In addition to editing The Record, Miss Morrison will have oversight of all G. F. S. publications and take charge of general G. F. S. publicity.

Labor Policy For the Church.

It is announced that at the General Convention an earnest effort will be made to enlist the Church in definite work to stimulate and hasten the improvement of the relations of capital and labor. Among the practical suggestions are instruction in all theological seminaries in industrial development, progress and conditions and annual industrial institutes for the clergy, especially in industrial sections. The general idea is to train both clergy and laity to clear and sympathetic understanding of the problems and troubles of both the employing and employed classes that the inculcation of the principles of Christianity in adjustment of differences arising and in realization of their mutual obligations may be suggested, directed and urged intelligently.

When Delegates Return From General Convention.

Too few Churchmen and Churchwomen learn in detail what goes on at General Convention. Secular press reports are inadequate. Too few by far subscribe to Church weeklies. Too few subscribe to The Spirit of Missions. Too few read The Church at Work.

Meantime matters of vital concern and greatest interest transpire at these Triennial gatherings. Certainly great decisions of Church-wide importance should be common knowledge among our people.

How can this be achieved? The Department of Publicity of our National Council has a suggestion to make, outside the realm of printer's ink, but nevertheless, a publicity enterprise, namely, that rectors of parishes or the officers of diocesan and parish organizations invite returned delegates, clerical and lay, to bring a direct spoken message from Washington. Thus tens of thousands may have first-hand information. Let these speakers be asked questions concerning outstanding and vital matters, such as, what came of "Pay as you go?" What was the total of the United Thank Offering? What about the budget in the new triennium? How is it apportioned among the dioceses? What progress in missions? What about advance work, the mightiest challenge for the new triennium? What about our Indian work, our Negro work, rural work? What about St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo? What dramatic features at Convention? What picturesque features? What inspiring features? What controversies, if any?

All will make good telling and when told will make better Churchmen and Churchwomen. It is to be hoped that great groups everywhere, indeed, that all of our people, shall have opportunity to share Washington by proxy, to learn more of their Church, hence to love her more and to serve her better.

Census.

Figures of religious memberships in the United States for 1916 and 1926, compiled and published by the Bureau of the Census show in tabulated form as follows:

| | 1916. | 1926. |
|---|---|---|
| Roman Catholic— | 15,721,815 | 18,605,003 |
| Methodist Episcopal— | 3,717,785 | 4,080,777 |
| Southern Baptist— | 2,708,870 | 3,524,378 |
| Negro Baptist— | 2,936,579 | 3,196,623 |
| Northern Baptist— | 1,244,705 | 1,289,966 |
| Congregational— | 809,236 | 881,696 |
| Protestant Episcopal— | 1,092,821 | 1,859,086 |
| Methodist Episcopal, South— | 2,114,479 | 2,487,694 |
| Presbyterian Church— | 1,625,817 | 1,894,030 |
| United Lutheran— | 763,596 | 1,214,340 |
| Evangelical Lutheran— | | 1,292,620 |
| Disciples— | 1,226,028 | 1,377,595 |

Persons of the Jewish faith reported for 1926 are 4,087,357, compared with 357,135 in 1916, but the apparent increase is explained by the fact that in 1926 all known to be of that faith were reported, while in 1916 none but actual pew holders and contributors. The gain of 767,000, or approximately 40 per cent, in the Protestant Episcopal membership is attributed greatly to inclusion of all baptized persons in 1926, while in 1916 the count was confined to actual communicants.

Expenditures for all religious bodies in the country in 1926 were $814,371,529, against $328,809,999 ten years before, a gain of $483,000,000, or well above 150 per cent.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Missionary House Dedicated.

A short service of dedication of Missionary House was held at noon on October 2, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington, with the Bishop of Washington officiating, assisted by Canon Freeland Peter, Washington Cathedral. A number of Woman's Auxiliary officers, branch presidents and members were present, and viewed for the first time this splendid house, which has been given to the Woman's Auxiliary for use during the Convention. Furnishings have been provided by voluntary gifts and donations of Washington Church people and it is now complete and ready for use as headquarters, social center and lodging for visitors to Washington during the Convention. This Missionary House, as a place where missionaries may live during the triennium is an unique undertaking in the history of Woman's Auxiliary Conventions. After the dedication service and a little later in afternoon the monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in St. Margaret's Parish Hall, where reports of Convention preparations were made. The large parish hall of St. Margaret's Church was filled to capacity and presented an inspiring assembly of women eager to hear more and get more of the spirit of the great days immediately ahead.

Two members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew addressed the meeting, telling of the Brotherhood Convention so soon to assemble and asking the cooperation of the women, especially for the great open-air service on October 7, which was to be the first of a series of such services. Mrs. William D. Hurd, Diocesan President of the Auxiliary, who has been giving of herself untiringly for months, in order that this Triennium might be a great one, presided at this meeting in St. Margaret's, which will be the last Diocesan Auxiliary meeting, before the Convention.

Daily Celebration.

A number of churches in Washington have announced a daily celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M., during the entire period of the Convention. This seems to be entirely in keeping with the desire and wish which Bishop Freeman has so often expressed during pre-Convention days, that the keynote of this Convention be "spirituality".

Many of the churches in the diocese had bishops or visiting clergymen as their preachers on Sunday, October 7. This was the beginning of a series of visiting preachers in the churches on Sundays throughout the Convention.

Washington Church people will also have, in the days near at hand, an opportunity to learn more of "The Cross Triumphant", because a series of talks by way of introduction and explanation has been planned and visiting speakers will come to the several churches and address the congregations along this line.

"The Cross Triumphant," a religious pageant depicting the history of the Church, will be presented in Washington Auditorium on October 19 and 20, in honor of the delegates to the General Convention.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop

The seventy-first semi-annual meeting of the Philadelphia Association of Students of the Theological Seminary in Virginia was held September 27 at the home of Mr. George W. Wilkins in Lansdowne. Luncheon was served at one-thirty and the business meeting followed. The Rev. Robert R. Windley, President, presided. The guest of honor and speaker was Bishop Garland, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and Dean Green of the Seminary was also present and made an address. A rising vote of thanks was extended to Bishop Garland, Dean Green and Mr. Wilkins.

The Rev. Henry S. McDuffy, for twenty-two years missionary in charge of St. Augustine, Philadelphia, has retired from active service, and by appointment of the Bishop the Rev. Joseph H. Hudson, who has been assistant at St. Augustine's since early in 1925, has been appointed missionary in charge of the work.

In retiring from his active ministry, the Rev. Henry S. McDuffy rounds out a record of forty-five years in the ministry of the Church. During his entire ministry in the Diocese of Pennsylvania he has been in charge of St. Augustine, which under his leadership has been greatly developed and is now one of the most promising of the Colored Missions of the diocese, and its faithful priest for more than two decades has been one of the leaders of his race in the community.

Personal Notes

The Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., has resigned as rector of St. Paul's Church, Beaufort, N. C., and as minister in charge of St. Andrew's Church, Morehead City, N. C., and will retire, retaining his canonical connection with the Diocese of East Carolina. His address after October 15, will be Chapel Hill, N. C.

The Rev. Henry S. Paynter, for eight years rector of St. James' Church, Bristol, and whose ministry of nearly twenty years has been in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, except for a year in missionary work in South Dakota, has accepted the call to St. Barnabas' Church, West Philadelphia. Mr. Paynter took charge of St. Barnabas September 15, succeeding to the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. Charles E. Spalding, who accepted a call to Christ Church, Coronado, Cal., where he formerly served as rector from 1900 to 1921.

The Rev. Lewis G. Morris, A. M., D. D., for a number of years rector of Christ Church, Rochester, N. Y., has accepted the call to the rectorship of Calvary Church, Germantown, Pa., and took charge October 1. Dr. Morris succeeds the Rev. A. R. Van Meter, who last spring was elected Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

ORDINATION.

On the Feast of the Transfiguration the Rev. Peter M. Dennis and the Rev. Rupert G. Witt were ordered deacons at the Du Bose Training School, Monteagle, Tenn., the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., officiating. Mr. Dennis has been appointed minister in charge of St. John's Church, Decatur, Ala., by the Bishop; while Mr. Witt has returned to the Du Bose School for graduate work.

DOMINUS FRUSTRA ISIN 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 20, 1928. No. 42.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD

1. The first and chief need of the Christian life is fellowship with God. The divine life within us comes from God and is entirely dependent upon Him. As I need every moment afresh the air to breathe, as the sun every moment afresh sends down its light, so it is only in direct living communication with God that my soul can be strong. I must every day have fresh grace from heaven, and I obtain it only in direct waiting upon God Himself. Begin each day by tarrying before God and letting Him touch you. Take time to meet God.

2. To this end let the first act in your devotions be a setting yourself humbly before God. In prayer or worship everything depends upon God taking the chief place. We must bow quietly before Him in humble faith and adoration. God is. God is near. God is love, longing to communicate Himself to you. God, the Almighty One, who worketh all in all, is even now waiting to work in you and make Himself known. Take time till you know God is very near.

3. Accept and value your place in Jesus Christ. God delights in nothing so much as His beloved Son, and can be satisfied with nothing less in those who draw nigh to Him. Enter deep into God's holy presence, in the boldness which the blood gives (Heb. 10:19, 20) and in the assurance that in Christ you are most well-pleasing. In Christ you are within the veil. You have access into the very heart and love of the Father. This is the great object of fellowship with God, that we may have more of God in our life and that God may see Christ formed in us.

4. Christ is a living Person. He loves His people with a personal love, and He looks every day for the personal response of your love. Look into His face with trust till His love really shines into your heart. Make His heart glad by telling Him that do you love Him. He offers Himself to you as a personal Saviour and keeper from the power of sin. We have not only Christ's life in us as a power and His presence with us as a person, but we have His likeness to be wrought into us.

5. The likeness of Christ may be described as the likeness of His death and resurrection (Rom. 6:5). The death of Christ was the consummation of His humility and obedience, the entire giving up of His life to God. In Him we are dead to sin. As we sink down in humility and dependence and entire surrender to God the power of His death works in us, and we are made conformable to His death. And then we know Him in the power of His resurrection, in the victory over sin, and all the joy and power of the risen life. Therefore every morning present yourself unto God as one that is "alive from the dead."

6. As you meditate on this wondrous salvation and seek full fellowship with the great and holy God, and wait on Him to reveal Christ in you, you will feel how needful is the giving up of all to receive Him. Seek grace to know what it means to live as wholly for God as Jesus did. Only the Holy Spirit Himself can teach you what an entire yielding of the whole life to God can mean. Wait on God to show you in this what you do not know. Let every approach to God, and every request for fellowship with him be accompanied by a new, very definite and entire surrender to Him to work in you.

7. "By faith." Here, as through all Scripture and all the spiritual life, this must be the keynote. As you tarry before God let it be in a deep, quiet faith in Him, the invisible One, who is so near, so holy, so mighty, so loving; in a deep, restful faith, too, that all the blessings and powers of the heavenly life are around you and in you. Yield yourself in the faith of a perfect trust to the ever blessed holy Trinity to work out all God's purpose in you. Begin each day thus in fellowship with God, and God will be all in all to you.

—Andrew Murray.

---

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee.
Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.
The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.
If ye abide in Me and My words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will and it shall be done unto you.
Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things in Thy Word.

BULLETINS BOARDS

Churches have been using outside markers and boards for many years, but a great advance has recently been made. Now they are objects of ornamentation fitting in beautifully with the architecture or the landscape of the church. They have been arranged so that the reading matter is encased in glass, protecting the notices from the weather and keeping them fresh and attractive. Where churches formerly had to redecorate their notice boards often, the up-to-date bulletins boards may be counted on to retain their attractiveness for many years with only ordinary care.

It is now a simple matter to change the notices every week or oftener, and with many that are lighted the hours of usefulness are greatly increased.

If you are interested in the purchase of a new bulletin board or any other piece of equipment for making your church and Sunday-school more effective, we would urge that you write to the advertisers of this publication or to Church Equipment Service, The Southern Church, 628 East Main Street, Richmond, Virginia.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

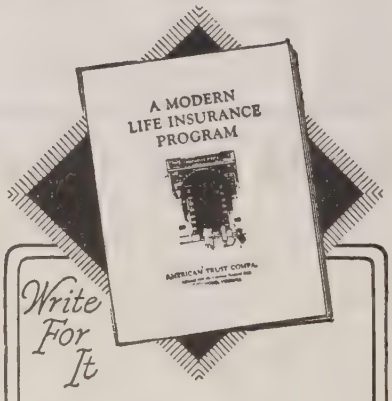
That's a wise delay which makes the road safe.—Spanish Proverb.

There never did and never will exist anything permanently noble in a character which was a stranger to the exercise of resolute self-denial.—Exchange.

God placed the value of infinity upon every human life.

"What will the fault-finding Christian do in Heaven?"



All that He sees in me,
All I can ever be,
That am I worth to God!
—Browning.

The praying heart makes the willing hand.

Though we travel the world over to find the beautiful, we must carry it with us, or we find it not.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"I say that I was lost, far gone astray,
No hope of safe return there seemed to be;
But then I heard that Jesus was the way,
A new and living way prepared for me."

Such help as we can give each other in this world is a debt to each other; and the man who perceives a superiority or capacity in a subordinate and neither confesses it nor assists it is not merely the withholder of a kindness but a committer of injury.—Ruskin.

"WHY"

Thrice the pronoun "Thy" is used in three sentences of the prayer so familiar that most of us, even when reciting it fervently, fail to realize the vastness, the profundity and the majesty of its meaning. "Hallowed be Thy Name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven." Seventeen words, summarizing all the promises of God from the beginning, the glorious, ecstatic vision of the ancient prophets, the dreams of the highest philosophers.

If His Name be hallowed by all mankind, His commandments will be obeyed and crimes of violence, sensuality, selfishness, treachery and idolatry will cease. If His kingdom comes and His will be done on earth as in Heaven, justice and peace and love will prevail through all this world, men will be merciful and brotherly always to their fellow men, the strong will share gladly the burdens of the weak, oppression and wrong, the bitter stings of poverty and the darkness of ignorance will be banished.

Are such conditions inconceivable and fantastic? We pray for them whenever we repeat this prayer. They are promised by and through the prophets of Israel, foreseen by the great heathen thinkers who by application of massive minds to what they saw and knew reasoned themselves near to understanding of God and the destiny of humanity, by His guidance and for the fulfillment of His mysterious, just and merciful purposes. They were proclaimed from amid the stars by the hosts of rejoicing angels when the light shone upon lonely plains the night of the Annunciation. All the history we have and the conditions of the present combine to give assurance that His Name shall be hallowed and His commandments obeyed, His kingdom established here, His will done here.

We read and hear continually of crimes and horrors, vice and wrongs, that sicken and discourage, of blatant indecencies, boastful defiances of Deity and denunciations of religion and piety. Yet, as we study the stories of the recently past centuries and their conditions, we must realize that the progress of our race along the upward path has been swift. The contrast of opportunity and hope for the masses of the people now and but a hundred and fifty years ago is obvious. Standards of conduct for rulers and representatives and those in high places have been lifted and cleansed immeasurably. Endless good, huge reforms, have come from wars and tumults and bloodshed, the wrath of man making praise to God and deliverance for the meek. Never before has the interest of the fortunate and powerful in the spiritual and material welfare of the stricken, the poor and lonely and down-trodden, been manifested so splendidly and bountifully as now. Never has the longing of men to be helpful to their fellow men been so general or so beautifully demonstrated as now.

We may not know when or how the petition shall be granted, the promise fulfilled. We must believe that conditions of humanity a hundred years hence will be bettered beyond our imagination as surely as present conditions are improved beyond the most optimistic imaginations of a hundred years ago. Accumulating achievements of human intellect, ingenuity, devotion, courage, with bewildering rapidity have abolished evils and fears and dangers so long thought inevitable and unavoidable, added to the powers, the liberty, the vision and the hope of humanity. We move forward and upward faster with each passing generation.

"Hallowed be Thy Name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven" may come within this century or the next century or after intervening centuries. We may not know of that, as we may not know, or be able to conceive in our minds, what will be when peace and righteousness reign, sin and vice and strife have become but sorrowful memories. The future of our race and this planet on which we live, the destinies to be attained and the purposes to be completed, are mysteries as deep as the purposes of the beginning and the creation.

The humble part, the only part, for each of us is to strive ceaselessly and faithfully to realize clearly and strongly the prayer as we repeat it. In it are more meaning and purpose and promise than in any other assemblage of words, written or spoken. Nowhere else is there such tremendous revelation and invitation and consolation as in the two words "Our Father", giving us, from the Son of God, sure knowledge that the Almighty Creator has for each of us a Father's love and mercy. It is for each of us to search and humble our hearts as we pray, "Hallowed be Thy Name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven". As we breathe the words it is for each of us to feel them and determine devoutly, with God's help, to do as we can, as so few of us honestly have done, by act and words and life, to bring fulfillment, to hasten the glorious consummation of mighty and mysterious, beneficient and magnificent purpose.

Alfred B. Williams.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasurers, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart", Psalm 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. S. G. Whitlock, of Louisa, Virginia:

> Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me" (Psalm 23:4).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA BEGINNING IN VIRGINIA 1757

Alfred B. Williams

THE BEGINNINGS—1607-1757.

So far as the records tell, the Church of England had been a definitely organized and active force in North America just one hundred and fifty years when the first assemblage of its membership that might be called a Convention was gathered at Williamsburg, Virginia, August 31, 1757. According to Dr. Lyon G. Tyler's History of Virginia in the Federal period, this Convention was not creditable to the clergymen who called and composed it and caused serious and lasting harm to the Church. It was of the nature of a clerical strike against the government and laity of the colony and was instigated and led by four clergymen who were professors of William and Mary College.

The salary of a clergyman in Virginia was fixed by act of 1696 at 16,000 pounds of tobacco a year, in addition to dwelling and glebe land. The ruling price of tobacco then was ten shillings the one hundred pounds, making the salary equivalent to eighty English pounds, or about $400. of our present money, the amount, of course, representing much greater value than now. In 1755 drought and short crops caused strong rise in tobacco prices and the Virginia Assembly decreed that all dues payable in tobacco might be paid in money at the rate of sixteen shillings and eight pence the one hundred pounds, or two pence the pound. This, of course, deprived the clergy of the advantage of the high tobacco prices. By the time appeals to London, Governor Dinwiddie and the Council had been made and had failed and the four professors and seven other clergymen had issued the call for the Convention, tobacco prices had returned to nearly normal and the attendance at this first Convention consisted of nine, who did nothing.

The next Convention, a year later, caused by another rise in tobacco prices, this time to six pence the pound, was attended by thirty-five clergymen and followed by disastrous and far-reaching consequences. It provided for an appeal to the king and began a bitter fight which did much toward arousing popular feeling in Virginia against England and the Church, continued fourteen years, never was definitely settled, and developed as an incident, in 1763, Patrick Henry's immortal speech in the "Parson's case", at Hanover Courthouse, defending the act of Assembly fixing the rate at which tobacco dues might be paid, declaring that the king, by his decision in favor of the appeal of the clergy, had "forfeited the allegiance of the colony" and evoking the mutterings of "treason!" from some unsympathetic auditors.

A broad and hasty outline glance at the earliest history of the Church of England in North America is necessary for clear understanding of conditions in the years immediately preceding the Revolutionary War and at the time of the little Convention at Chestertown, Kent County, Maryland, November 9, 1780, while the result of that war was yet doubtful, which gave the Protestant Episcopal Church its name and new birth.

THE FIRST CHURCH SERVICES.

Casual readers of American history recall that the first services of the Church of England on this continent of which we have definite knowledge were the prayers and thanksgiving offered by Sir Francis Drake when he put into what now is San Francisco Bay in 1579. The next were on Roanoke Island, part of what now is North Carolina, August 13, 1587. That day Manateo, first Indian convert to Christianity, was publicly baptized. Seven days later Virginia Dare, first white child born in this Western world and then two days old, also was baptized. The disappearance of the English colony for and by which these services were conducted is one of the unsolved mysteries.

Twenty years later, May 14, 1607, the Rev. Robert Hunt, Church of England clergyman, officiated on Jamestown Island, Virginia, where the English colonists had completed, the day before, a voyage of four months. The place for worship was made by spreading old sails among the branches of trees for shelter from sun and rain, the pulpit a wood bar fixed between trees, the seats fallen logs. Later a structure of hewn plank, like a barn, Captain John Smith recorded, was the church, but from the first day Mr. Hunt read the services and preached daily. Even then the Church was beset by foes and perils within its own household. Some of the most influential of the colonists, Smith says, were atheists and scoffers, but Mr. Hunt continued his work bravely and patiently, until he died. He was succeeded by devout lay readers, including Mr. Wickham, for whom ordination was asked but never obtained, and by the Rev. Mr. Whittaker, who baptized Pocahontas. Bishop White, in his "Memoirs of the Church", tells us that August 9, 1607, two months after the first services at Jamestown, passengers and crews of the "Mary and John" and "The Gift of God", English vessels, landed on an island at the mouth of the Kennebec River, off the coast of the present State of Maine, erected a cross and united in worship in the services of the Church under the Rev. Richard Seymour.

From these widely separated beginnings the Church continued one hundred and seventy years in this country, sharing the varying fortunes of colonists and colonies. It was hampered sorely by separation from the sources of apostolic and ecclesiastical authority, deprivation of local self-direction and the necessity of accepting such spiritual leadership as might be sent to it or of sending its own men desiring ordination on costly, dangerous and tedious voyages to the mother country, with decisions on their qualifications dependent on opinions of bishops ignorant of conditions here, perhaps guided in their judgments sometimes by considerations far apart from the welfare of the Church. In the interval between the first settlements in Virginia and New England and the Revolutionary War, a period of intense political animosities and intolerance, Virginia was the stronghold, sometimes the one secure home, of the Church of England on this continent, at one time the one place on earth where it was dominant. The fact that it survived the hostilities it encountered, some of which it invited and deserved, the sins and blunders of its friends and adherents and the assaults of powerful foes is taken by many as evidence of its fitness to survive because of its intrinsic virtues and value to the cause of the Almighty and for the meeting of human needs.

In New England, according to Bishop White, the Church was suppressed entirely by the Puritans until it showed a faint, brief, spark of life in New Hampshire, beginning in 1631 and demonstrating its democratic character by having as the first warden of the church, at Strawberry Bank, a blacksmith named Thomas Walford. St. John's Church, Portsmouth, now represents the original New Hampshire church, of which the Rev. Richard Gibson was rector in 1640.

Bishop White, of Pennsylvania, writing in 1820, manifests asperity toward the Pilgrim Fathers and Puritans of New England generally. He is at some pains to prove that the New England colonization was organized and financed by devout members of the Church of England and that the Puritans betrayed trust in turning against that Church. He distinctly softens the intolerance of the Virginia settlers in excluding from the colony, in course of time, Roman Catholics, Quakers and Congregationalists alike and is harsh on the Puritans for suppression of the Church of England in New Hampshire after annexation of that province to Massachusetts. However censure may be apportioned, it is the fact that in the earliest days of the settlements in North America the Church of England was nourished and sustained by all the power of the government in Virginia and repressd by the government in New England.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

EVENING III.

MOST Merciful God, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and hast promised forgiveness to all those who confess and forsake their sins; we come before Thee in an humble sense of our own unworthiness, acknowledging our manifold transgressions of Thy righteous laws. But, O Gracious Father, who desirest not the death of a sinner, look upon us, we beseech Thee, in mercy, and forgive us all our transgressions. Make us deeply sensible of the great evil of them, and work in us an hearty contrition, that we may obtain forgiveness at Thy hands, who art ever ready to receive humble and penitent sinners for the sake of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our only Saviour and Redeemer.

And lest through our own frailty or the temptations which encompass us, we be drawn again into sin, vouchsafe us, we beseech Thee, the direction and assistance of Thy Holy Spirit. Reform whatever is amiss in the temper and disposition of our souls; that no unclean thoughts, unlawful designs, or inordinate desires may rest there. Purge our hearts from envy, hatred and malice; that we may never suffer the sun to go down upon our wrath; but may always go to our rest in peace, charity, and good will, with a conscience void of offense, towards God and towards man, that so we may be preserved pure and blameless unto the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

And accept, O Lord, our intercessions for all mankind. Let the light of Thy Gospel shine upon all nations, and may as many as receive it live as becomes it. Be gracious unto Thy Church, and grant that every member of the same, in his vocation and ministry, may serve Thee faithfully. Bless all in authority over us; and so rule their hearts and strengthen their hands that they may punish wickedness and vice and maintain Thy true religion and virtue. Send down Thy blessings, temporal and spiritual, upon all our relations, friends, and neighbors. Reward all who have done us good, and pardon all those who have done or wish us evil, and give them repentance and better minds. Be merciful to all who are in trouble, and do Thou, the God of pity, administer to them according to their several necessities for His Sake who went about doing good, Thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ.

To our prayers, O Lord, we join our unfeigned thanks for all Thy mercies, for our being, our reason, and all other endowments of soul and body, for our health, friends, food and raiment, and all the other comforts and conveniences of life. Above all, we adore Thy mercy in sending Thy only Son into the world to redeem us from sin and death, and in giving us the knowledge and sense of our duty towards Thee.

We bless Thee for Thy patience with us, notwithstanding our many and great provocations; for all the directions, assistances and comforts of Thy Holy Spirit; for Thy continual care and watchful providence through the whole course of our lives, and particularly for the mercies of the past day, beseeching Thee to continue these Thy blessings to us, and to give us grace to show our thankfulness in a sincere obedience to His laws through whose merits and intercessions we receive them all, Thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ.

In particular we beseech Thee, continue Thy gracious protection to us this night. Defend us and all dear to us from all dangers and mischiefs and the fear of them; that we may enjoy such refreshing sleep as may fit us for the duties of the following day. Make us ever mindful of the time when we shall lie down in the dust, and grant us grace always to live in such a state that we may never be afraid to die: So that living and dying we may be Thine; through the merits and satisfaction of Thy Son Jesus Christ, in whose Name we offer up these our imperfect prayers.

Our Father, etc.

NUMBERS.

The Name of this book in the Hebrew is "In the wilderness (ch. 1:1).

Subject.

The Subject of Numbers is God's ways with Israel in the wilderness.

1. Ch. 1 to ch. 10:10. Preparation for Israel's journey through the wilderness into Canaan.

God ordered the arrangement of the camp for warfare (chs. 1, 2), for worship (chs. 3-6), accepted the princely offering and the Levites for the Tabernacle service (chs. 7, 8), and when the Passover was kept the Lord appointed the cloud and two silver trumpets for Israel's guidance (chs. 9 to 10:10).

II. Ch. 10:11 to ch. 12. Israel's journey of eleven days from Sinai to Kadesh-barnea (Deut. 1:2).

In God's order, and under His guidance, the Ark going before, Israel journeyed three days from Sinai and found a resting place (ch. 10:11-36).

Murmuring Moses is given seventy Spirit-filled elders to share the burden of leadership, and murmuring Israel is given the quails to eat (ch. 11).

Murmuring Miriam is plagued with leprosy, and then healed in answer to Moses' prayer (ch. 12).

III. Ch. 13 to ch. 20:13. Israel's journey in a circle for thirty-eight years from Kadesh-barnea to Kadesh-barnea.

Unbelief of Israel in spying out the promised land and in refusing to enter it (chs. 13, 14).

Free-will offerings to be offered in the land, sacrifices for the sins of ignorance and presumption, and a riband of blue (ch. 15).

Rebellion and judgment of Korah, Dathan and Abiram (ch. 16).

The budding of Aaron's rod, the priest's burden and portion, and the water of separation (chs. 17, 18, 19).

Death of Miriam, murmuring Israel, and unbelieving Moses and Aaron (ch. 20:1-13).

IV. Ch. 20:14, to ch. 25. Israel's journey from Kadesh-barnea to the plain of Moab.

Edom's refusal to give Israel passage through his border, and death of Aaron (ch. 20:14-29).

Murmuring Israel, the brazen serpent, and victory over Sihon and Og (ch. 21).

Balaam's attempted curse turned into blessing Israel (chs. 22-24).

Balaam's wiles bringing a curse upon Israel (ch. 25).

V. Chs. 26 to 36. Preparation for entering Canaan.

Re-numbering of Israel to divide the land (chs. 26, 27).

The continual burnt offerings, offerings at the feast of trumpets and feast of tabernacles, and vows not to be broken (chs. 28-30).

Victory over the Midianites, division of the prey, and inheritance of Reuben, Gad and half of Manasseh (chs. 31, 32).

Names of stations in Israel's journeys, borders of promised inheritance defined and cities of refuge appointed (chs. 33-36).

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW CONVENTION

By the Reverend Frank Cox

THE Junior and Senior Brotherhood Convention before the General Convention set a splendidly high standard of inspiration for the gathering to follow. The theme of the Convention, appropriate in view of the increased interest on the part of the General Church in Evangelism, was "Ye shall be witnesses". While it cannot be said that every speaker appeared fully to understand what Christian witnessing means or implies, the talks in general were excellent, some setting a new standard in excellency, and making the Convention all told the most inspiring Convention the writer has attended.

There was too much going on to attempt here to speak individually of every conference, but the high spots of the week were easily Bishop Darst's stirring appeal out of his heart to the members of the Convention to lift up our Saviour to a sick and suffering world, and the Rev. S. M. Shoemaker's gripping presentation of the effectiveness of personal work, especially as illustrated by men and women who had been transformed in his own parish in New York City.

On Friday evening, October 5, a splendid crowd attended the opening dinner to receive a warm welcome from the Hon. Sidney F. Taliaferro, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and from Bishop Freeman. Both Bishop Freeman and Bishop Murray who followed him echoed the call to evangelism which has been stirring in many hearts. Professor S. L. Joshi, of Dartmouth, challenged the laity, and Bishop Bennett, of Duluth, the clergy to the task of witnessing. Dr. Joshi later gave a series of lectures on comparative religion, Buddhism, Islam, and Christianity. It is our prayer that the Brotherhood Conferences will not be diverted into side issues, but will concentrate upon their main objective, Christ and His Gospel.

Saturday, the Rev. Lloyd S. Charters, of Norwich, N. Y., told how his parish had carried out the Bishops' Crusade last year. He was able to start every church of the town in a house to house canvass with decision for Christ as the objective. He told of families that had been reunited with the church through the visits of the workers from his church, the unsurrendered who had been brought to decision, and finally of a man who was bitter in his opposition to God who had been converted. In all, over one hundred and forty were confirmed. The greatest result of the canvass in one way was the building up of a body of workers upon whom Mr. Charters can depend to visit and pray if necessary with those who are outside of the church.

Sunday morning's Corporate Communion of all the Conventions is a memorable service, and Sunday afternoon's mass meeting this time was held in the great outdoor amphitheatre of the National Cathedral. Dr. Teusler and the Hon. George Wharton Pepper were the speakers. At night Bishop Juhan and Dr. B. I. Bell, President of St. Stephen's College, spoke on the witness of youth. Dr. Bell gave a stirring call to conversion, and praised the work of the Brotherhood as an organization that was given to real spiritual purposes.

Monday morning the whole Convention sat with intense interest while the Rev. S. M. Shoemaker told of actual cases of conversion in his parish in New York City. The types of those whose lives were changed are types with which we are all familiar, the unconverted church member, the self-satisfied business man. He detailed how one after another had received Christ, had surrendered to Him and then had gone out to touch and witness to others. This is real Christian work, the work that every Brotherhood man is pledged to do, and yet Mr. Shoemaker made us search our hearts to see whether we had been doing it, and whether even some of the clergy had not been remiss in their privilege to bring men definitely to Christ.

At night the mass meeting in Epiphany Church was addressed by Bishop Roots, the Rev. Frank E. Wilson and Bishop Slattery. Bishop Slattery gave some practical suggestions on family prayer and Bishop Roots told of the influence of the Christian teaching on the Chinese family and national life.

The closing day Mr. Milton gave the outline of the Program for Evangelism in the Church, he being the Executive Secretary of the Committee, and a practical discussion of men's work in a parish followed. The Rev. Gordon Reese gave a stirring account of the way in which the activities of the Brotherhood had led several young men into life service in the ministry. The Rev. Mr. Irwin then told of his work in Richmond at St. Andrew's Church.

The closing meeting of the Convention was addressed by, first, the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, who mentioned love and prayer as the working principles of a Christian, and then called upon us to hold fast to the tried and sure things of the Christian faith, our belief in heaven, and the Atonement of Christ. While some might not see their needs, yet when trouble or sin came then they turned to them for help.

Afterward Bishop Darst presented the world call to evangelism, and in ringing words that came from the heart, called upon the members of the Brotherhood to lift up Christ and to exalt Him as the only hope of the world. Thus fittingly closed a gathering in which the note of evangelism had been sounded with a strength and clearness that had not been reached in many years.

Bishop Freeman, as chairman of the mass meeting, had presented Mr. Lawrence Choate, the new President of the Brotherhood, who was unanimously elected to fill the place of the beloved President retiring, Mr. Edward H. Bonsall. In a farewell gathering of the members of the Brotherhood, the new President and others spoke.

Let us hope that the interest in evangelism here aroused may continue to spread until the whole Church is aroused to new life.

NOTES ON THE FORTY-NINTH CONVENTION

By the Reverend Frank Cox

THE keynote of the Convention was set by the sermon given at the great outdoor service by the Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop of Chicago. For the most part the Bishop's words were inspiring. Unfortunately he appeared to be under the current misapprehension as to the meaning of the defeat of the proposed English Prayer Book. He mentioned it as a case of state against Church. All who are familiar with the situation know that Parliament was the only place where the voice of the people of the Church of England could be heard. The Church Assembly is largely composed of laymen who are out of touch with the mind of the average layman.

The Bishop's address was inspiring. He brought out in a striking manner the real point at issue today, whether the Church should surrender to the world, or whether it should rise above the world. He rebuked current ideas when he said that we shall not win people to the Church by showing how like it is to the world, but by letting our lights so shine that they can see clearly the real difference.

---

At the organization of the Convention on Wednesday afternoon, the Rev. Ze. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Parish and Chaplain of the Senate, was elected to fill the post of President of the House of Deputies. This choice was undoubtedly an excellent one, and will perpetuate the high standard set by the Presidents of past years.

---

On Thursday a matter of great importance that arose was the introduction of a prayer for the departed into the Prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church in the Communion Office. It passed the House of Deputies with little opposition. One layman who himself practiced it pleaded that it be rejected for the sake of those who did not believe in such practices. We think that the real reason for rejecting them, and one not brought out in the discussion, is that they are not warranted by Scripture. The Reformers called them "the Smoke of Purgatory". They introduce an element of uncertainty into the future, and are a step down from the high faith of those who are content to say of those departed that they are "with Christ which is far better".

The matter which followed, the introduction into the Communion service of the Benedictus Qui Venit, brought out some debate. Professor St. George pleaded for its introduction on the ground of ancient usage. Professor Foley made a clinching argument against it. He made the point that the use was entirely Mediaeval as opposed to Primitive. The Roman apologists themselves admitted that it had not been introduced in its present place until after the introduction of the dogma of transubstantiation. It was admitted that certain people were now using it, and it was urged that we should free them from embarrassment by legalizing what they were now doing. Dr. Foley suggested that this is a dangerous experiment, and if those who are now using it felt no twinges of conscience, that it is a question why they should desire its legalization. The measure was defeated by the votes of the laity.

The matter of intinction was also debated strongly. The majority who spoke were in favor of it, urging feelingly the matter of the difficulty some felt because of the danger of contagion. It seemed that the opponents of the measure had the better argument. They opposed the measure because the words of institution are against it, and because the new method is inelegant in character, and the new rubric vaguely expressed.

---

The House of Bishops passed a motion setting aside a special service for the anointing of the sick. This service would recognize officially the work which is now being carried on by the Society of the Nazarene and other agencies.

---

A letter of fraternal greetings was sent to the retiring Primate of the Anglican Church, the Rt. Rev. Randall H. Davidson, by the House of Bishops, and the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, Bishop of Western New York, was appointed chairman of a committee to draft the resolution.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION DAY BY DAY

By Alfred B. Williams

FIRST DAY, OCTOBER 10.

NEWSPAPER estimates of the number of Episcopalians attending the Forty-ninth Triennial General Convention of the Church increased daily. On the second day, October 11, they placed the number well beyond 20,000. Following the impressive services on the Cathedral Close, October 10, the sermon by Bishop Anderson and the address by President Coolidge, the first sessions of the two houses were opened, at 3 P. M. The House of Bishops met on the tenth floor of the Willard Hotel, the House of Deputies in the D. A. R. Hall, Seventeenth and C Streets, N. W.

Officers of the House of Bishops elected were the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, Secretary; the Rev. John F. Plumb, and the Rev. John H. Fitzgerald, Assistant Secretaries.

In the House of Deputies the Rev. Ze. B. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, was elected President on the third ballot. His election is regarded as a compromise between the different schools of theology. He is classed as a liberal evangelical leader. His competitors were the Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, of Evanston, Illnois; the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, of Baltimore; the Rev. H. H. Powell, of San Francisco, and the Rev. A. C. Coddington, of Syracuse. The vote on the third ballot showed 299 for Dr. Phillips of the total of 530.

Important work began immediately in both Houses, the bishops clearing the way for beginning consideration of revision of the Prayer Book. They adopted unanimously resolutions regarding registration of Church Schools in China, which are said to be satisfactory to both Bishop Graves, of Shanghai, and Bishop Roots, of Hankow, who had differed in opinion on the policy to be adopted.

The resolutions say the Church will not register schools if they are required by the Chinese Government to be secular strictly, if control of them by Church authorities is prevented, or if titles to the school property are impaired. If the Chinese authorities consent to open declarations of the Christian character and purposes of the schools, to the teaching in them of the Christian religion and the conduct of Christian services registrations will be accepted.

A communication was received from the Primate of Canada bringing greetings to the Convention. A committee will be appointed to frame a suitable reply.

Bishop McKim, of Tokyo, introduced a resolution to erect a new missionary jurisdiction in Japan. Referred to the committee on Foreign Missions.

The report of the Episcopal Joint Commission of Faith and Order was presented to the House. It is sponsored by Bishop Brent, of Western New York, who presided at the Lausanne Conference. Bishop William T. Manning, of New York, President of the Commission; Bishop James De Wolf Perry, of Rhode Island, its Executive Secretary; George Zabriskie, of New York, its Treasurer; Bishop Thomas F. Gailor, of Tennessee, former President of the Episcopal National Council, and other noted leaders of the Church recommend that the continuation committee, composed of representatives of one hundred participating communions, "be informed that in the judgment of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church the World Conference should be continued, care being taken to preserve its educational nature by excluding schematic action, and that when the opportune time arrives this Church will gladly participate in another meeting of the conference".

The Convention is also requested to continue the commission with instructions "to appoint in the near future a special committee of theologians and scholars, not confined to the members of the commission, for the purpose of assisting the commission to consider and report to the next General Convention on the Lausanne report, and to confer as opportunity occurs on questions of faith and order with other Christian communions".

Bishop Philip M. Rhinelander, retired, of Pennsylvania, presented the report of the Commission on Deaconesses, which was placed on the calendar.

SECOND DAY—OCTOBER 11.

Both houses of the Triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church resumed promptly on the second day of the session definite work, as begun the afternoon of the day before; beginning, of course, with the usual brief, solemn services and prayer for Divine guidance.

In the House of Bishops Bishop Leonard, of Ohio, presided, and read the Prayer, Bishop Murray, the presiding officer, being absent attending the great Communion service for women—never before approached in number or fervor of communicants—and the wonderful offering of the women, unprecedented in this country or any other in all history, at the Cathedral. Bishop Slattery, of Massachusetts, read the Lesson.

A committee from the House of Deputies reported to the House of Bishops that the deputies were organized and ready to function. Bishop Reese, of Georgia, chairman of the committee on the dispatch of business, reported, recommending that time for discussion and consideration of business be, each day, from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2:30 to 5 o'clock P. M., and that the revision of the Book of Common Prayer, already three-fourths completed at the Convention at New Orleans in 1925, begin immediately. This report was accepted without objection. Bishop Webb, of Milwaukee, presented a petition for a new diocese in Wisconsin, which was referred to the standing committee on new dioceses, and Bishop Reese offered a resolution for electing of a suffragan to the presiding bishop, which was referred to a special committee to be appointed.

The first item the Bishops rejected was that for a new prayer of blessing of the wedding ring to replace one adopted by the General Convention of 1925. In the office for the visitation of the sick it was provided that when the sick person wanted the ministry of healing by anointing or the laying on of hands, a prayer to be inserted in the office be used. It is the first time that a service has been provided by the Church for the anointing of the sick since the first Prayer Book of Edward Sixth.

The bishops adopted a provision for the office of administration of the Communion to a sick person that none other than the sick person be required to participate. The bishops voted, also, to omit from the Book of Common Prayer the prayers to be used at sea and for visitation of the sick.

Earnest discussion was caused by a resolution that clergymen be allowed to ignore, at their discretion, the passages of the Holy Scriptures appointed to be read on certain days. This was opposed vigorously by Bishop Mikell, of Atlanta, and, by close vote, was postponed. Bishop Slattery urged the need for reading of selections from the New Testament to offset passages in the Old Testament, such as Deborah's Song, a triumphant paean of war.

A prayer "for those in mental darkness", the first distinctly for the insane, was approved. The recommendation for consolidation of the baptismal services and omission of the words "conceived and born in sin" was approved.

Bishop Parsons, of California, offered a resolution against compulsory military training in schools and colleges, which was referred to committee. Bishop Brent, of Western New York, speaking by special permission, urged that all Episcopalians contribute to a fund for the Archbishop of Canterbury, now eighty years old and whose resignation will take effect on the fiftieth anniversary of his wedding.

The bishops approved slight revisions in the family prayers, the services for institution of pastors and consecration of churches and the burial service.

One of the first acts of the House of Deputies was unanimous adoption of resolutions to accord official recognition to the Woman's Auxiliary by setting aside a special section of the hall for its use, giving members, the first time in the history of the Church, full right to the floor at all times, including joint session of the two houses, and reserving the center section of the gallery for woman visitors.

Very angry and energetic protests were uttered against exclusion of lay deputies from certain missionary jurisdictions from voting on revisions of the Book of Common Prayer. T. S. Taliaferro, Jr., of Wyoming, said that if he could not vote on an issue so vital as that, his coming had been waste of time. The Very Rev. H. E. Powell, of San Francisco, chairman of the committee on amendments to the constitution, made peace by explaining that the provision of exclusion was more than twenty years old and that it had been adopted twenty-odd years ago for protection of the Book from dangers then feared.

The House of Deputies made good progress in considering and acting on the several hundred changes, of varying import, in the Book of Common Prayer, transmitted for action by this Convention from the forty-eighth Convention at New Orleans in 1925. It was agreed to drop "militant" from the call to prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church. The house voted for addition to the prayer for the President "that it may please Thee to rule the heart of Thy servant, the President of the United States, that he may, above all things, seek Thy honor and glory". A new prayer, beseeching the Almighty to lead all nations of the earth into the ways of justice and truth was adopted. To the prayer for deliverance from lightning and tempest the words "earthquake, fire and flood" were added. The words "or air" were added to the prayer for protection of those who travel by land or sea.

In the Litany the four repetitions of the words "miserable sinners" were stricken out.

Warm debate was caused by the proposal to insert at the end of the Communion service a rubric authorizing any bishop, "under proper circumstances", to allow administration of the Communion "by intinction, in which case both sentences of the administration shall be said". It was explained that "intinction" meant administration of both Elements at once by dipping the bread into the wine. Several deputies favored this for health reasons, dwelling on possible communication of infections, but the proposition was defeated. Canon H. B. St. George, of Milwaukee, argued against it that it assumed to give instructions to bishops on their duties and was an attempt to legalize that which is already being unlawfully done. He pointed out that one of the results of the Reformation in England was the restoration of the chalice to the laity, and that article thirty specifically states that the cup must not be denied to the laity.

The vote was close, clergy 30 yes, and 32 no; laity, 36 yes, and 25 no, with 16 delegations equally divided, which were added to the "no" vote. This was regarded as a defeat for the High Church School, although the sanitary argument seems to have weighed with some Low Churchmen. On the other hand, Dr. Stewart, of Evanston, considered a High Churchman, fought the suggestion on the ground that it would give bishops authority to forbid parish priests the right to use their common sense.

By another close vote the house decided to exclude from the order for just before administration of the Holy Communion "Blessed be He that cometh in the Name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest". Canon St. George, of Milwaukee, brought out that the sentence has been adopted by both the Lutheran and Presbyterian Churches. Dr. Foley, of Philadelphia, said it had not been adopted by the Roman Church until after it adopted the Doctrine of Transubstantiation and that the reason given by the Presbyterians and Lutherans was that it was pretty and gave opportunity for delightful music. The vote was 61 yes, and 59 no, with 19 delegations divided. The suggested new form of blessing for the wedding ring received but 57 votes.

From the House of Bishops it was reported that the anointing service, for healing the sick, was supported by eighty-eight bishops.

It is hoped that the work of revision of the Book of Common prayer, begun in 1913, will be completed by this Convention, that hope explaining the promptness of both houses in beginning consideration, taking up first the questions most likely to cause divisions and debates. J. P. Morgan has authorized the Prayer Book Commission to have prepared the new Book, with the replicas, one for each of the seventy-two dioceses and thirty missionary districts, he to pay the entire cost. He directs that no expense be spared in making the new Book of Common Prayer perfect and beautiful in printing, arrangement and binding, models to be followed in all editions for reading desks, pews, families and individual use.

THIRD DAY—FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12.

Full payment of a deficit of $1,534,303 which had accumlated in 1925 was announced at the joint meeting of the two houses at Memorial Continental Hall the morning of the twelfth, by Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer. Mr. Franklin described, also, the budget system adopted for the financial affairs of the Church, which has brought three successive surplusses in the three years just past. All members of the Convention rose and sang together, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow", led by Bishop Murray.

The Bishop, in his annual report for the National Council, said it had decided against the proposition to remove its headquarters from New York to Washington. In a simple ceremony, preceding the business session of the joint convention, Bishop Murray was presented with a gavel made by orphans in care of the Near East Relief at Nazareth in a carpenter shop said by tradition to be directly opposite that of the foster father of the Saviour.

Invitations for holding the Convention of 1931 in Denver and in Minneapolis were presented by the delegations from those dioceses and referred to a committee of three bishops, three clergymen and three laymen.

Detailed reports of the treasurer showed that the pledges for $1,417,650 given at the 1925 Convention to cancel the then fast growing deficit had been honored so faithfully that the National Council now has in hand $1,432,000 with which to meet all claims. It has been necessary, however, in each of the three years to curtail some both foreign and domestic missionary work and cut $20,000 from the estimated minimums.

Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler, director of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan, made an urgent appeal for continuance of the work of the Church in that institution and elsewhere in Japan. He said Japan was the strong standing bulwark for the Western world against the anarchy, communism and war on religion in Russia and China. Secular newspapers in Washington and elsewhere, commenting editorially on this appeal, say St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital is probably the strongest force for winning for the United States and Christianity the good will and respect of the Japanese people, its work in improving general health conditions, introducing the latest discoveries of medical science, instructing native doctors and nurses and caring for sick and injured regardless of race and creed having made powerful impression on all classes. Bishops Murray and McKim, the latter of the Diocese of Tokyo, and former Senator Pepper, of Pennsylvania, earnestly supported the call of Dr. Teusler. The Convention voted to raise $1,000,000 for St. Luke's by 1929, and endorsed a campaign for $2,256,000.

The general administrative report, reading of which, before the joint convention, took an hour and a half, calls for expenditures of $12,000,000 by 1929.

Reports from the missions in Mexico said the Episcopalians had not been hampered there, having cooperated cordially in observing the laws and the restrictions of the government.

Bishop Reese, of Georgia, commented with good-humored irony on the complaint of Bishop Manning, of New York, on the heavy burdens put upon his diocese. Bishop Reese said nobody begrudged the vast amounts given by Episcopalians the last three years, and before, for magnificent places of worship and many educational and charitable causes, but the lavishness of these gifts proved that the members of the Communion were amply able to give far more generously than they did to missions.

While there was general atmosphere of kindliness and good nature, plain speaking was frequent. At the meeting of the Department of Religious Education Bishop Matthews, of New Jersey, Dr. Rollings, professor of Church History at the Virginia Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Leslie Glenn, National Secretary for College Work, bluntly attacked what they called the "recruiting system" for the Church ministry. Mr. Glenn said fifty per cent of the ministers now at work were victims of "mild melancholia", and Dr. Rollins said some bishops had accepted men discharged from seminaries for intellectual and moral defects and actually ordained them in advance of classmates who had met all requirements. Mr. Glenn said but six per cent of the men in the ministry came from the Episcopal secondary schools, the best in the country, the majority of the students changing their vocations in their college years. One third of the present Episcopal theological students are from other denominations, he said. Bishop Matthews denounced vigorously the methods of some theological schools which, he charged, were more concerned with the intellectual development than with the spiritual training of their men. He asserted, further, that some bishops were so eager for recruits for the ministry that they accepted almost any type of candidates for Holy Orders.

FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13.

Perhaps the most generally interesting incident of the brief meeting of the Convention Saturday, 13, was the presentation of the petition against the exclusion of the Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer. It contained more than 33,000 signatures. The formidable document was put aside, to be taken up with the question whether the action of the Convention of 1925 favoring elimination of the Articles shall be affirmed. It was presented by Bishop Seaman, of North Texas.

Applause greeted the introduction, by Bishop Ward, of Erie, of resolutions regarding the prohibition law virtually repeating those adopted by both house at the Convention of 1925. They read:

"Resolved that facing the danger of the spirit of lawlessness in American life, we welcome the renewed efforts of the Government of the United States to enforce strictly and impartially the prohibition laws and the antinarcotic laws, which are so widely and cynically disregarded; and we call upon the people of the Church to set a good example of that obedience to law without which no democracy can endure."

They were referred to committee for report.

In the House of Bishops a standing vote of congratulation to Bishop Leonard, of Ohio, on the thirty-ninth anniversary of his consecration was given and a similar vote to Bishop Stevens, of Los Angeles, on his eighth anniversary.

In the House of Bishops the so-called "prayer for the dead" was excluded from the new Book of Common Prayer by close vote, after short but earnest debate. This proposed prayer read: "We beseech Thee to grant them continual growth in Thy Love and Service." Its rejection is regarded as another defeat for the High Church element.

The House of Bishops ratified the action of the House of Deputies in excluding the word "militant" from the invocation for prayer for "the whole state of Christ's Church".

The House of Deputies adopted, for the new Book, a special Collect for Independence Day,, reading:

"O Eternal God, through whose mighty power our fathers won their liberties of old; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we and all the people of this land may have grace to maintain those liberties in righteousness and peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord."

This went to the House of Bishops for action.

After the morning sessions both houses adjourned to join in the pilgrimage to Mount Vernon. The visitors filled the usual excursion boat to the safety limit and many others went by motorbus.

FIFTH DAY—MONDAY, OCTOBER 15.

Practical, definite, aggressive, intense crusading and persistent, patient, country wide effort for the Church and the Christian cause were stressed and urged at the joint session of the two houses of the Convention, in the D. A. R. Hall Monday morning. The hall was packed and a large crowd, unable to obtain entrance, stood outside. One speaker after another brought from dignified bishops and clergy, laymen and general audience remarkable outbursts of applause by demanding, in varying terms, united onward movement by the Church. The most stirring utterance was unstinted praise for the labor unions, contained in the report of the Department of Christian Social Service, read by the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, the Secretary. This report called on the Church to seek and cultivate cordial friendship and cooperation with the unions, to study with them the problems of relations of capital and labor and help intelligently in consideration and adjustment of such problems by application of the principles of Christianity by both sides. As one first step, it was suggested that at least once a year, just before Labor Day or at some convenient time, a capable representative of organized labor be induced to speak before each Episcopal congregation on the relations of labor and Christianity and the churches.

A program for relations of the Church with industry was submitted by Spencer Miller, Jr., Secretary for Industrial Relations of the Church. It suggests that courses in industrial problems be given at all theological seminaries; that industrial institutes be held annually for the clergy, and tutorial classes established for the laity, on current development in the field of industrial relations.

Finally, it is recommended that "the Church formulate a more specific statement of the fundamental Christian principles upon which industry and industrial relations should be based, without seeking to present the particular methods by which they shall be translated into practice".

The note of rebellion at "pseudo-scientific systems of religious education" was sounded by several speakers. The Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Ludlow declared that "despite all our efforts to educate our youth in religious matters this Church that we love is a teen age Church when it comes to the knowledge of God"

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn warned that the universities could not be trusted to give religious education, their general attitude toward religion being that of neutrality. The Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., said omission of religion from education was like an attempt to present Hamlet with-Shakespeare and yet many so-called Church schools carefully avoided religious instruction and training, holding to machine methods.

In the short separate session of the House of Deputies petitions for retention of the Thirty-nine Articles in the Book of Common Prayer were presented by George W. Wickersham, Attorney-General of the United States under the administration of President Taft, and Deputy from New York, and John N. Fitzgerald, Secretary of the Diocese of Long Island. The petition presented by Mr. Wickersham carried signatures of 34,000 laymen. That of Mr. Fitzgerald declared: "We feel that the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion should not be removed from the Prayer Book, as they have been there for centuries, and bear testimony to a noble, successful, and sacrificial struggle by our English forefathers for the truth and purity of our religion. In this respect they are a vital part of the history of our Church."

Both were referred to committee, in the usual course.

The House of Bishops, before going to the afternoon joint session with the deputies, voted congratulations to Bishop Cheshire, of North Carolina, on the thirty-sixth anniversary of his consecration, October 15.

The report of the work of the American Bible Society was presented to the house by Bishop Gilbert S. B. Darlington, the Treasurer. Bishop Matthews, of New Jersey, presented a petition asking the next General Convention to meet at Atlantic City.

At the afternoon joint sessions John W. Wood, Secretary of the Department of Missions, reported the budget of that department, calling for $3,300,000. This is seventy-five per cent of the total budget of the National Council. From this amount, he explained, help would be given fifty-four continental dioceses and mission districts and support to 3,087 American and foreign missionaries of fourteen nationalities, preaching the Gospel in 1,800 communities scattered over the world. It would keep open twenty hospitals and dispensaries, treating 500,000 patients annually and in five hundred Church schools educate 30,000 young people.

Reporting on the field work of the Church, the Rev. C. E. Snowden, Secretary, said work had been done in eighty-two dioceses and missionary jurisdictions. He reported, also, increase of sixty-four per cent in clerical salaries since 1919. Total contributions of the Church for 1927 for all purposes were $44,743,842, an increase of more than twenty million, or eighty-three per cent, over the total of 1919.

The report of fifty pages on marriage and divorce was presented, by title only, in the House of Bishops by Bishop Page, of Michigan, Chairman of the Commission appointed to study the subject.

The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, Executive Secretary of the Department of Publicity, spoke highly of the aid to Christianity given by the secular press of the country and of the improvement of relations between Church and press in the last ten years.

Bishop Creighton, of Mexico, discussing missions in that country, said the government there did not oppose Christianity nor religion absolutely, but required certain control over the teaching and direction of both, such as registration of all clergy, to which the Episcopal Church had elected to submit. On the other hand, Bishop Graves, of North China, said hate of Christianity had become so violent there that in some churches the Cross had been torn out and the picture of Sin Yat Sen put in its place. Nevertheless, he believed the Church so firmly planted there that it would survive even if every missionary was forced away. Bishop Roots, of Hankow, pictured present conditions in his diocese darkly, saying there was the wildest confusion of conflict between ancient traditions of extreme conservatism and new radicalism of the most desperate kind. Yet there were constructive forces which he thought would work out stability after a period of terror.

At a dinner meeting of the group on Ecclesiastical Relations, the evening of the fifteenth, Bishop Reese presiding, the Rev. Dr. Wm. G. Emhart said the Episcopal Church should give $1,000,000 toward the fund of $6,000,000 being raised for Near East Relief. Dr. James M. Barton, Chairman of the Near East Relief, reported that the attitude of the Russian government toward that work had become more tolerant. Twenty-five bishops and many other clergymen were present at this gathering.

Bishop Rowe, of Alaska, who went into the Yukon before the gold rush when there were but 2,000 white persons in the region, said there are now thirty mission stations there. A foundation fund of $100,000 has been placed at his disposal.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

EVEN more impressively beautiful and solemn than the great gathering of bishops, clergy, laymen and women that overflowed the vast Cathedral Close the first day of the Convention, Wednesday, October 10, was the Communion service for the Woman's Auxiliary, in the yet unfinished Cathedral, the following morning at 7:30.

Numbers of women had waited all night, in spite of heavy dews and frost-tanged breezes, at the very gates of the Cathedral to be sure of partaking of and receiving the blessings of this particular communal service.

At the General Convention at New Orleans in 1925, Bishop Freeman had promised the Woman's Auxiliary that its members should be the first to kneel at the chancel rail of the National Cathedral. And though the worshippers knelt beneath a network of temporary steel scaffolding, and though the sky looked benignly in through uncompleted steeples and unfinished gables, Bishop Freeman kept his word and approximately three thousand persons accepted the Sacrament. So great were the crowds that it was necessary to hold overflow Communion services in the three crypt chapels—Bethlehem Chapel, the Chapel of the Resurrection and the Chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea.

The first regular service ever held on the main floor of the Cathedral began with prayer and was followed by the placing on the altar of the partially completed sanctuary, the amazing sum of $1,110,405, collected for mission work, over a period of three years, by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Then followed the Communion which was administered to the three thousand persons by fifteen bishops.

It was estimated that approximately fifty persons received the Sacraments each minute, and it was almost eleven o'clock when the last communicant left the Altar.

The Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland and Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, was the Communion celebrant, assisted by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington. The Rev. G. Freeland Peter, D. D., Canon of Washington Cathedral, directed the arrangements for the service.

The offering of $1,110,405 was carried to the sanctuary and placed in the golden alms basin by sixty-five members of the B. Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. They were clad in blue academic hats and gowns, collected the United Thank Offering from the assembled delegates and placed it in the gold receptacle. This basin, which has been in use for thirty-nine years, is twenty-two inches in diameter and weighs slightly less than nineteen ounces. It has a beautifully chased border of silver gilt and a center panel of solid gold on which is depicted the offering of the Magi. It was given to the American Church in 1852 by Churchmen of Oxford University.

Since 1889 the golden alms basin has held offerings devoted to missionary purposes, and particularly to furthering women's missionary work in foreign fields. Church records show that from the first offering of $2,188, made in it in that year, the donations have grown so rapidly that at the last triennial thank offering service in New Orleans three years ago they reached an unprecedented $913,000.

Presentation of the offering was made by Miss Margaret Weed, National Chairman for the United Thank Offering, and by Miss Lucy A. Grant, Chairman of the United Thank Offering for the Diocese of Washington. They were assisted by treasurers from the more than one hundred dioceses and missionary districts in which are located four thousand branches of the Woman's Auxiliary.

When the basin was presented at the Jerusalem altar it held coins from virtually every country: Japanese yens, French francs, Chinese taels and English pounds, and tokens from women in the far corners of the earth.

Outside the Cathedral the crowd, estimated by the papers to have been from two thousand to five thousand, was led in singing by Captain Mountford and members of the Church Army. One of the young Church Army men told of the work that had been done in Oregon, and the Rev. J. J. D. Hall was called upon. He gave a stirring appeal based on Acts 1:3—"ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

In recognition of the splendid work of the Woman's Auxiliary, the House of Deputies immediately upon going into session, voted unanimously to give the Auxiliary delegates the right of the floor and set apart a special section for their accommodation. At night the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies adjourned their session to attend the mass meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at the Washington Auditorium. The Most Rev. John Gardner Murray presided and greeting was extended by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

The speaker was Dr. W. C. Sturgis. Announcement of the amount of the United Thank Offering was made by the novel means of flashing the figures in electric lighting on a large sign at the rear of the platform at the conclusion of the address, the big moment for which the women were waiting.

The interesting feature of the evening was the presentation to the congregation of the two hundred missionaries from foreign fields.

The regular session of the Woman's Auxiliary, suspended the second day of the Convention to take advantage of the privilege extended them, for the first time, of attending joint sessions of the Houses of Bishops and Deputies, were resumed on the third day with a meeting of the National Council Training Institute. This conference took place at Washington's magnificent new Y. W. C. A. building. The Very Rev. Robert S. Chambers, of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, dean of the Training Institute's faculty, is conducting the classes dealing with various phases of church, educational and mission work.

An earnest appeal by Bishop Theodore Bratton, of Mississippi, to Episcopalians to regard the work of the Church among the Negroes of the South as a national rather than diocesan problem, was made during an afternoon session of the Woman's Auxiliary. "More men and more money are the chief needs in the extension of such work," emphasized the Bishop, who further declared that because of the migration of Colored Episcopal Church workers and members there had been "a tremendous urge to the Negroes to join the Baptist faith, which has come to be regarded as the Negro's Church".

Following the sessions, the Woman's Auxiliary attended the reception given by Mrs. Frank B. Kellogg at the Pan-American Building in honor of the Presiding Bishop and Mrs. Murray; Miss Grace Lindley, Presiding Officer of the Auxiliary, and the Bishop of Washington and Mrs. Freeman.

An exhibit attracting much attention at Woman's Auxiliary is that of the Appalachian School of Penland, North Carolina. It shows the work of mountain women in the art of handloom weaving of homespun garments, a domestic art which had practically disappeared until the Appalachian and similar schools revived it. Miss Amy Burt, director of the Penland School, is in charge of the exhibit.

On the third day of the Convention the Woman's Auxiliary was notified by Bishop Murray that out of the Thank Offering of $1,110,405 presented to the General Convention, by the Auxiliary, $165,000 had been apportioned to seven Church Institutes. After careful consideration and study by a special committee, of which Mrs. Charles H. Boynton, of New York, was chairman, allotments had been made to the following:

A vocation school for Indian boys and girls at Cass Lake, Minn., $15,000.

A school building to be erected and equipped for the Appalachian School for Mountain Children at Penland, N. C., $20,000.

A little church to be reconstructed at Delray Beach, Fla., $5,000.

St. Catherine's School, San Juan, Porto Rico, to be erected one of four buildings in a church center now being formed there, $25,000.

St. Margaret's House, in connection with the Church Training School at Berkeley, Calif., a residence for Church workers in training and a home where Oriental women may be welcomed on their arrival in this country, $20,000.

A nurses' home for St. Agnes' Hospital for Negroes, at Raleigh, N. C., $30,000.

A chapel to serve St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, and the rapidly growing community in which the school has been working since the earthquake of 1923, $50,000.

One of the most important matters to come before the Auxiliary was the adoption of a by-law concerning the appointment of an executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. The Committee on Nominations is headed by Mrs. E. L. Woodward, of Richmond, Va., as Chairman. Another leading Southern woman on this committee is Mrs. W. J. Loaring Clark, of Sewanee, Tenn.

At a conference of forty-six deaconesses the newly-elected members of the executive committee proved to be: Deaconesses Helen M. Fuller, of Chicago; Mary C. West and Claudine Whitaker, of New York; Lillian M. Yeo and Henrietta Rue Goodwin, of Washington; Jean W. Colesberry and Flora V. Stuard, of Philadelphia, and Maria P. Williams, of Dante, Va.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

BULLETINS OF THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE ASSOCIATION.

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D.

(Reprinted from The Living Church.)

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE IN TWO GENERAL CONVENTIONS.

I. Bishop White on the Convention of 1808.

1. Beginnings of Degeneracy in America.

AT the commencement of the eleventh century the low pagan law of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers gave way to the Christian law, which taught that marriage, validly contracted and once consummated, was henceforth indissoluble except by death. This was ordained at Eanham about 1009 A. D., by a National Assembly summoned by King Ethelred and composed not only of bishops and abbots, but also of lay representatives of the nation (Luckock, History of Marriage, p. 203, and Johnson, English Canons, Pt. I, p. 484, A. D. 1009 [8], and p. 506, A. D. 1017 [7]). This remained the civil law of England for nearly 850 years, down to 1857.

It was this law, which had been the law of the Church from the beginning, that the colonies, from the first planting at Jamestown in 1607 and at Plymouth in 1620, inherited automatically as the Common Law of the new land, and the Canon Law of the Church. But, inasmuch as its administration in the mother country was solely within the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts of the two provinces of Canterbury and York, no corresponding courts were set up in America.

It was in this way that marriage, which is a sacred estate and not a mere contract, became subject to radical modification even before the Revolution. Loose or perverted ideas prevalent among Dissenters, and the lack of a reverent ritual of solemnization, made the descent easy, and the decline of both doctrine and discipline rapidly increased. It took more than five hundred years for pagan Rome to reach the degeneracy of the late republic. It has taken less than three hundred years for Christian America to reach the degeneracy that ranks her lower than any other nation in Christendom, with the possible exception of Russia under its present government; and it is not exceeded by non-Christian Japan.

As early as 1869, only 250 years after our first colonization, President Woolsey wrote: "Many were beginning to be alarmed at the distance to which the divorce laws in this country, and especially in New England, had departed from the command of Christ, and from the views of the early settlers." Nor was this evil influence wholly escaped by this American Church.

2. The Strange Convention of 1808.

When the number of our clergy was only 169 exclusive of those in Virginia (from which State in its exhausted condition no report was made), the General Convention met in the city of Baltimore in 1808. Only seven dioceses, or States as they were then called, were represented, namely, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland. The whole Convention consisted only of two bishops, White, of Pennsylvania, and Claggett, of Maryland, with fourteen clerical and thirteen lay deputies. Moreover, nowhere in the whole land did the Church have a school of sacred knowledge for the education of the clergy. And it was in this body of twenty-nine men, most of them of meager learning, that a resolution was adopted, and a step on the downward path was taken, which logically and inevitably leads far from "The Way" of the New Testament, and of eighteen centuries of Christian history and experience.

The character of this Convention, as well as its numbers, has a very important bearing on the question we are considering. How, let us ask, did this strange declination from the right path occur? On May 19, 1808, the deputies from Maryland, doubtless with the full approval of their Bishop, who was present, informed the House: "They had been instructed by their Diocesan Convention to call attention to the expediency of adopting the canon of the Church of England concerning marriage, and inserting the same in future editions of the Book of Common Prayer." Such a step would have been only in fulfilment of the express declaration of the revisers in the preface of the book, nineteen years before (Preface, p. 6). Its printing in the Prayer Book, moreover, was a practical measure suggested by the growing ignorance of the divine law of marriage prevalent everywhere around them, and even in the Church itself. (In this connection it is interesting to remember that at the recent revision of the Prayer Book in Canada, 1923, this very course was adopted of printing the unmutilated law of Christ, where it could be known and read of all.)

When this petition of the Diocese of Maryland was referred to the House of Bishops they gave it a whole week's consideration, and they returned it to the House of Deputies, not with a canon, but only with a resolution (by whom prepared we are not informed), and apparently without recommendation. In this they showed the same caution displayed in the treatment of another petition of Maryland, namely, for the adoption of the Table of Degrees of Consanguinity and Affinity, which they referred to another Convention.

The first part of the resolution contained this clear and strong statement: "It is inconsistent with the law of God that the ministers of this Church should unite in matrimony any person who is divorced." Here was the plain and positive teaching of Scripture. It also declared the doctrine and discipline which their ancestors had upheld for more than a thousand years, and which had been the law of the Church in America for two hundred years past. But then was added for the first time in all these centuries (by whom we are not told), the contradictory statement or proviso, "unless it be on account of the other party having been guilty of adultery". Here it is to be noted that nothing is said about an "innocent party", for neither party in any real sense might be innocent. Another example of the bishops' caution.

3. The Difficult Situation of the Bishops.

Whether or not the two bishops, whose principles, as the record seems to show, were evidently against it, gave any formal assent to this resolution, is not stated. But three notable facts bearing on this uncertainty are to be borne in mind as casting some light upon their motives. (1) Up to the time of this Convention the House of Bishops had no absolute veto on any action of the House of Deputies. Concerning this, Bishop White writes: "There was accomplished at this Convention what has been from the beginning ardently desired by many, both of the clergy and of the laity, the giving of a full negative to the House of Bishops." And then he adds this comment: "It is to be hoped that the recollection of the course of this business will show the propriety of leaving to time and mature reflection to effect what may be for a while opposed by prejudice, not to be disregarded without extreme danger. What is here said, however, is designated of those prejudices only which may be yielded to without the sacrifice of essential principle."

(2) Another notable fact is that the following addition to the Eighth (now Tenth) Article of the Constitution was now first adopted and referred to the next Convention for final decision: "No alteration or addition shall be made in the Book of Common Prayer, or other officers of the Church, unless the same be proposed in one General Convention, and by a resolve thereof made known to the Convention of every Diocese or State, and adopted at the subsequent General Convention."

(3) A third fact is also to be noted, namely, that, as the Journal records, the whole body of the canons was revised and amended, while no canon was adopted on marriage, but only this resolution, which had no force of law.

Now it is perfectly plain that the loose and unscriptural ideas prevalent all around them demanded nothing less of the Convention than the clear declaration of the former part of this resolution. But the latter part was an implied, and in effect a distinct, denial of the sanctity and permanence of the "holy estate" of matrimony, as declared in the former. At first it seems extraordinary that Bishop White especially, with his well-known conservatism and his superior knowledge of history and of human nature, should not have observed the logical implication and the inconsistency of this proviso. How shall we account for this?

4. Bishop White's Own Story.

The peculiar conditions which the bishops had to deal with in this Convention must be taken into consideration, and these we have from Bishop White's own pen in what he calls "Additional Statements", forming an appendix to his Memoirs of the Church, which had been published some sixteen years earlier. Here we find the probable clue to this difficult situation.

In Bishop White, the providential leader of the Church, as his friend, Washington, was the providential leader of the nation, there was found that rare combination of great strength and great gentleness. In him was exemplified to the full the words of the Royal Psalmist, "Thy gentleness hath made me great". In that time of the Church's weakness almost unto death, such qualities were sorely needed. In the words of Bishop Henry Potter, in 1892, "His position was one of pre-eminent difficulty and isolation".

In his comments on the character of this peculiar Convention, Bishop White has much to say of his difficulties and of the troublesome men he had to deal with. Looking back from within a year of his death (1836) he tells us he found such discouragement as he had not found in any other period of his long episcopate of more than fifty years. Writing concerning a discussion in regard to candidates for Holy Orders, he does so, he says, "under the mortifying reflection that there has been an interference in the counsels of this Church of the wild and pernicious opinion manifested in this argument", concerning examining men as to 'an experimental knowledge of religion". Again: "Should such reasoners obtain the sway in this Church, her system would be overturned."

Another of the Bishop's troubles in this Convention, he tells us, was that "ideas were prevalent in many places of dismissing ministers at pleasure". Again, he writes, "There had been displayed, more than in any other Convention, the influence of some notions leading far wide of that rational devotion, which this Church inherited from the Church of England". Then, after saying, "There is no foreseeing to what lengths the spirit here complained of may extend in future, when combined with schemes of personal consequence", the Bishop, now in his eighty-eighth year, closes his comment on the Convention in these solemn words of warning: "The proper preservative—and God grant that it may be applied—is the cultivating of an enlightened zeal in favor of the doctrines of our holy religion, as revealed in Scripture, and hitherto maintained in their integrity by this Church" (Memoirs of the Church, pp. 230, 231, 246, 247, Dutton, 1880).

It was under such conditions that the petition for adoption of the English canon on marriage was introduced to the Convention by the Diocese of Maryland. With all his well-known conservatism, his courageous defense of the Catholic inheritance of the Church in "the divine institution of the episcopacy, not accommodating in the least degree to contrary opinions" (his Fifteenth Diocesan Address), her liturgic worship and reverent ritual; her system of Christian nurture and discipline; it may well be that in these final words, written in extreme old age, Bishop White had in mind a special reference to the refusal of the other House of the formal adoption of the canon on marriage, which had been for more than 1,200 years, and is still, the inherited law of every branch of the Anglican communion.

It was only after a full week's consideration that the two bishops gave their answer to the other House. One of them was the head of the Diocese that presented the petition for the formal adoption of the law, under which they had been living for two hundred years: the other, as he expresses it in the almost dying testimony of these "Statements", was the loyal defender of "the doctrines of our holy religion, as revealed in Scripture, and hitherto maintained in their integrity by this Church".

What took place, concerning this matter in the House of Deputies, during this week, is scarcely therefore a matter of surmise. It is evident that the ignorance and disaffection which the Bishop found in regard to other matters, such as he says he had never known before or after "in any other Convention", had resulted in a proposed compromise. The deputies were willing to accept an interpretation of the law of marriage which allowed one exception for the remarriage of divorced persons. This they thought they had found in St. Matthew's version of our Lord's words about the lawfulness of "putting away", while they overlooked His repeated and unqualified condemnation in the same sentence and elsewhere of remarriage as "adultery".

It was to this seemingly small compromise, first of a resolution instead of a canon, and second, of an exception, which at the time appeared to be of minor consequence, that the two bishops at length yielded, in view of the alarming increase of lawlessness concerning marriage all around them. It was done also in the evident hope, to quote Bishop White's own words, that "the cultivation of an enlightened zeal in favor of our holy religion" would remedy "in time" the present errors. The refusal of the bishops to put this in the form of a canon, as asked for by Maryland, but only in a resolution which they knew had no force of law, as being a mere expression of opinion and a temporary measure to meet a critical situation, corroborates this assumption.

Considering the extreme weakness of the Church as represented by only twenty-seven deputies and two bishops, most of the former being ignorant to a large extent, and also quarrelsome, we can neither wonder at nor greatly blame the bishops for acting as they did, in the hope of doing good by a slight yielding to expediency. But, as in all compromises where principle is involved, the hope of the bishops was in vain. For the next sixty years the leaven kept doing its evil work both within the Church and without. It was overlooked that in that word "unless" was involved the whole question of the Seventh Commandment, just as a similar exception would undermine every other Commandment.

5. The Destructive Power of Adultery a Falsehood.

For it cannot be too strongly affirmed that this single exception which, without a particle of authority in Scripture, is assumed to possess the satanic power of destroying a union "God had joined together", affords one of the easiest of all ways for getting rid of husband or wife, as our courts can testify. But to suppose that our Lord could sanction such a method of release, which provided constant incitement to unsatisfied desires, is simply inconceivable.

The only ground alleged for adopting this theory (for it is only a theory without a shadow of foundation in Scripture) has been that adultery is the direct violation of one essential of a true marriage, namely, the promise of faithfulness "till death". An essential indeed it is, as expressing freedom of choice, but the promise does not create marriage, and neither can its violation annul it. Promise is only one of several prerequisites of a valid marriage, which civil law equally with divine law demands. But these conditions are only requirements for the contract of marriage, and marriage is much more than a contract. To be true marriage civil law as well as divine law demands the fulfilment of this contract in the actual union of the parties, which is called "consummation".

"Those who have contracted and consummated marriage enter upon a new state [status] of life determined by nature. The state of marriage is not [merely] a contractual state. The contract is only the instrument by which the state [status] of marriage is brought about" (Marriage in Church and State, by T. M. Lacey, M. A., p. 32, London, 1912, Robert Scott).

"If this theory of the effect of adultery were true it would put into the hands of every unscrupulous man and woman, by means of a single act, the power to snap asunder the bond that alone creates the family, and knits all society into a brotherhood. When this single act is once committed, though in secret, the irrevocable deed of destruction is done. There is no longer any bond, and the judgment of a civil court merely proclaims and records a fact which already exists. Moreover, if this is true, tens of thousands of men and women are ignorant that their bond is broken, and they are living together in adultery! . . .

"Now the remarkable thing about all this is, that if one should search the Bible through he could not find the faintest hint of such a thought. Neither adultery nor any other sin, however grievous, is anywhere named by our Lord, or by any Scripture writer, as having such satanic power of destruction. . . . So far, indeed, is our Lord from asserting, or implying, that the bond of marriage can be broken, He actually assumes the very opposite. For in every one of His utterances, in St. Matthew as in St. Mark or St. Luke, He distinctly declares that a divorced woman commits adultery if she marries another; and that 'whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery'. Could language be more explicit? And the only possible reason for this is that the original bond continues. It is not broken, and it is only because it is not broken that another union can be adultery" (Divorce in America Under State and Church, p. 89).

[See Dollinger, The First Age of Christianity; Vol. II, App. III, p. 366. "On this theory either party can at any moment destroy the marriage." See also St. Augustine, A. D. 429, on Adulterous Marriages XVII, 18].

Adultery only profanes the marriage status; it cannot destroy it. "One can no more disown a spouse than he can disown a child," writes a clear-headed non-Christian layman. . . . "The mutual surrender in marriage takes the place of the natural tie, otherwise it were unutterably base. . . . True, it is very hard sometimes to bear the burden of this law," he adds. "If I were a praying parson, I should pray for sympathy not to become unfeeling to the complex secret agony herein involved. But the law is inexorable. The father must bear his trouble if the burden of a prodigal son is laid upon him. And the wife and husband together must bear their trouble if trouble is laid upon them' (Marriage and Divorce; by Professor Felix Adler, Appleton & Co., 1915, p. 58).

6. The Logical Effect of This Falsehood.

The far-reaching effect of this assumption is a fact which our civil legislatures, with one solitary and most honorable exception, did not fail to see, and were quick to act upon. For, beginning with that single departure from the straight path of the law of nature and of God, our forty-eight codes on marriage have now provided no less than fifty-two causes for breaking apart what nature and God have joined. And this they have done with undeniable logic, for measured by "the rule of reason" alone, thinking men have seen, and experience proves, that where one cause for remarriage is allowed, and that the one offense easiest to allege or to commit, there is no resting place between union till death and the right of perpetual change of partner. Any proviso turns the solemn contract "till death" into a mere bargain based on an "IF", which "man may sunder" at will.

Dean Inge may not be accounted a safe guide on all subjects, but in the matter of divorce for adultery he is only following the dictates of common sense, and the judgment of experienced judges, when he writes: "In the interests of morality, it might be safer to grant divorce for crime, contagious diseases, incurable drunkenness, and brutal cruelty, than for adultery.' In fact, the Dean was only adoping the opinion of the first judge of the new divorce court in England, who was formerly a pronounced advocate of the statute of 1857, which created it. These are the words of Sir Cresswell Cresswell: "I have been taught a lesson of experience. I have come to the conclusion that it is better for society to treat marriage as indissoluble, considering it merely as a social question."

Unreasoning sympathy keeps asking, "Is it not cruel to deprive the innocent party of the possible happiness of a new marriage, it may be for a whole sad lifetime"? But this argument applies, often with stronger force, to other causes than adultery, such as those mentioned by Dean Inge, for which Christ's law allows only separation or "putting away". Here there is often greater reason to charge cruelty against our Lord than in a case of infidelity. If His law is cruel in the one case, it is still more cruel in others. But in Him who so loved the world that He gave His life for it, justice for all is only a sign of His love for all. The innocent must suffer as did He, if thousands of innocent persons are to be saved from suffering. That is why it can be said of Him: "Mercy and truth have met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.'

II. THE MARRIAGE CANON OF 1868—A FIRST INDICTMENT.

1. The Little Leak and the Great Flood.

When we look forward sixty years from that little troublesome Convention in Baltimore to the Convention of 1868 in New York, we see the fatal effects of this early compromise, this apparently slight departure from the truth, with its mistaken idea of mercy for the few, while opening the floodgates of eventual ruin for family and nation. After two generations—which included the opening of the great West, the finding of gold in California, the vast increase of population and of wealth, and the great Civil War—that insidious, unscriptural and unconstitutional "resolution" of 1808 had done much to undermine the inherited convictions of both clergy and laity. Something must be said in extenuation of the fault of the two bishops and the twenty-seven deputies who composed that earlier Convention; the smallness and weakness of a Church having less than two hundred clergy, with their little flocks scattered over a vast territory, in the midst of overwhelming numbers of Dissenters of many kinds, and the total lack of any school of sacred learning until twelve years later, when the General Theological Seminary had its small beginning.

But there was little excuse for the General Convention of two generations later which met in 1868. In 1857 and before, this whole question had been thoroughly examined by eminent scholars, both lay and clerical, in England, notably by Mr. Gladstone, and to some extent also on the Continent of Europe and in the United States. Moreover, the inevitable result of the false resolution of 1808 had already showed itself. The little leak, oh, so very small, then opened in the dam ordained by God to hold back the mighty flood of the greatest of all human passions, was already widened by our legislatures, and by the opinions of untrained and non-Christian multitudes. With perfect logic a single cause for divorce was multiplied to practically "every cause", as had been done under the law of degenerate Israel. And today America stands disgraced before the world.

Far the most important matter for consideration by the General Convention to assemble in Washington in 1928 after another sixty years will be the report of the new Joint Commission on Canon 43 as appointed in 1925. The fundamental question to be settled then is that of the revolutionary Proviso and Exception concerning the "innocent party", which was introduced into the Canon of 1868 for the first time in more than a thousand years of Anglican Church history.

2. The Strange Story in Official Verbatim Reports.

Here again it happens most providentially that we possess a complete record of the hasty and blundering manner in which this fundamental question of morals was treated in the House of Deputies. A verbatim report of the debates of the House of Deputies was ordered by that body, which shows conclusively the inadequate consideration, the haste and the almost total absence of scholarship which this vital question received.

This was the first canon on marriage which, it is to be remembered, the American Church adopted as its own. For 261 years she had been under the canon law of the Church of England, which always had, and still has, no canonical allowance for remarriage after divorce for innocent or guilty, and recognizes no possible divorce from the bond, a vinculo. Strange to say, the proviso was looked upon as a very minor matter in the Convention, and received no serious attention until the sixteenth day of the session.

The story of the adoption of this canon in 1868 (at which I was present as a youthful student) is an amazing one. It would be incredible but that the House itself provided the verbatim indictment of its own shame. For in spite of the utter lack of a realization of the importance of the question, of the total absence of critical and historical preparation by the speakers (thirteen clerical and eight lay), and of the refusal to appoint a Joint Commission to study and report to the next Convention, or even to refer to any committee of the House other than the crowded and technical Committee on Canons; nevertheless, this radical error was inflicted on the American Church with all its poisonous results to both Church and nation, after only a brief discussion on the sixteenth and seventeenth days of the session. Out of 208 pages of the verbatim report less than seven are all that are required to tell this tale.

Only two men of learning made brief objections to the novel proposal. These were Dr. Christopher Wyatt, of California, and that robust Evangelical, the venerable Dr. Daniel R. Goodwin, of Pennsylvania, who made the most strenuous protest against it, with the prophetic voice of a seer who foresaw the present outcome from this seemingly small beginning. Without further consideration the novel and false exception was adopted by both Houses, and so it remains to this day.

3. Our Fivefold Indictment.

Our indictment is based on the following facts: The action was (1) Contrary to the spirit and plain intent of Article X of the Constitution, which requires the joint approval of two successive General Conventions for any "alteration' of the Prayer Book, with whose doctrine and discipline this "exception" is in direct conflict; (2) contrary to the solemn promise and declaration of the Preface to our Prayer Book, that "this Church is far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine or discipline" (p. 6); (3) contrary to the doctrine and discipline, not only of our own Prayer Book, but of every other Prayer Book in the Anglican communion; (4) contrary to the doctrine and discipline of the whole Western Church from the beginning; (5) contrary also to the doctrine and discipline of the undivided Church of the first three centuries, to which the English reformers always appealed for the final interpretation of any disputed question in the New Testament as to "the mind of Christ". It was of this "exception" to a moral law of the first magnitude that the learned Old Catholic historian and theologian, Dr. Dollinger, wrote that it "goes against language, history and logic".

To continue to reject such cumulative testimony involves tremendous responsibility. The historical and logical result of the blunder is seen today in the action of our forty-eight legislatures in permitting, besides our single exception of adultery (which is the easiest of all causes to commit, or, as our courts show, to prove), fifty-one other causes; many of them perhaps of even greater gravity, and possessing greater justification, than a sin of passion such as adultery. And the verdict of this American experiment is simply the verdict of all previous history, namely, the eventual destruction of the unit of civilized society, the family.

Divorce with remarriage 250 years ago was practically unknown in America, but the census showed there was one divorce to every 17.30 marriages in 1887. In 1925 this had risen to the enormous proportion of one divorce to 6.74 marriages; or, if we leave out the twenty million Roman Catholics among whom (though very questionable cases of nullification are not uncommon) there is only a negligible number of divorces with remarriage, the proportion is as high as one divorce to every 5.50 marriages. In several of our greatest States in 1924 the record was as high as one to 4.21, and even to a still lower number. Yet the official report for Canada in this same year showed only one to every 121 marriages! At this rate of degradation in the United States it is easy to calculate what it will be in the days of our children and our children's children.

4. The Most Vital Problem Today for Church and Nation.

These are some of the stern facts that the Joint Commission must face and weigh, and which the Church in General Convention must act upon, before the storm breaks or the cancer kills. There are also other matters demanding settlement, as concerning the merciful discipline to be accorded to persons married in ignorance of the law of Christ, or whose marriage is null from the beginning, yet whose only relief is by divorce. But this "exception" with its dread inevitable consequences to the nation is fatal. There are only two alternatives. As a natural state "from the beginning of the creation", and also a "holy estate" as restored by Christ, marriage is either (1) a permanent relation, or else (2) it is a mere contract subject to change at will. It cannot be both at once.

This is beyond all question the most vital and most pressing problem that faces the people of America today, and one which this American Church in its National Synod is bound to meet. To treat it lightly as in the past, or evade it, would be nothing short of treason to our Lord. Set here in this great land three hundred years ago "for the defence and confirmation of His Gospel", this otherwise pure branch of His Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church is today on its trial before the world and before Him for faithfulness to its trust.

THE MARRIAGE CANON CRITICALLY EXAMINED
A SECOND INDICTMENT

In the Convention of 1925, in New Orleans, the Sanctity of Marriage Association presented a petition urging the adoption (in substance) of the canon prepared by the Joint Commission of 1913-1916, and giving seven reasons for the same. This was not offered in either House until the thirteenth day of the Convention, when very slight consideration was given to it, and by vote of both Houses a new commission of three bishops, three presbyters and three laymen was appointed to "study the whole problem" and report in 1928 at Washington.

The Petition With Its Seven Reasons.

To the Bishops and Clerical and Lay Deputies of the General Convention of 1925, this Association respectfully presents the following:

Seven Reasons for the Elimination of the Novel and Unscriptural Exception and Proviso Concerning the Innocent Party in Canon 43, Section III.

1. Because nowhere in the New Testament is there a single word in support of remarriage of either party after "putting away" during the lifetime of the other.

On the contrary, in every case without exception, Christ's law is absolute and unqualified. It reads, "Whosoever, every one, that putteth away", etc., and "marrieth another" (Mark 10:12; Luke 16:18; Matt. 5:32; 19:12). This is equally true of His words in St. Matthew, as it is in the other two evangelists.

2. Because nowhere either in Old or New Testament is there an assumption, much less assertion, of the modern theory that adultery, or any other sin, ipso facto, dissolves a marriage, which is not a mere contract, but a state or condition.

If this theory were true, it would necessarily follow that both parties were free, and that one or the other had only to commit a single act of adultery in order to be free to remarry, which is an utterly inconceivable inference as to the mind of Christ.

3. Because nowhere in the history of the first three centuries, when the Church was suffering persecution, and was free from all entanglements with the State, can there be found a single author who interprets the exceptive clauses of St. Matthew about "putting away" as reason for remarriage during the life of the other party.

It was to this age of the Church, when the mind of Christ was fresh in the memory, that the appeal of the Church of England was made for the reform of doctrine and discipline in the sixteenth century. Shall it be our appeal also today? "It is most significant," writes Oscar Watkins in his classic treatise on Holy Matrimony, "that the testimony of the first three centuries affords no single instance of a writer who approves remarriage after divorce, in any case, during the life of the separated partner, while there are repeated and most decided assertions of the principle that such marriages are unlawful. No writer is found to advocate or admit the remarriage of the innocent husband. If the voice of the earliest Church is to be heard," he adds, "Christian marriage is altogether indissoluble" (pp. 222, 225. The Macmillan Co., 1895).

With this agrees the ripe judgment of one of the greatest Christian scholars and historians of the nineteenth century. To read into our Lord's words any allowance for the breaking of the bond of marriage, with the right to remarry during the life of the other party, Dr. Dollinger wrote, "Goes against language, history and logic" (First Age of Christianity, Vol. II, pp. 265-267, and App. III, p. 366).

4. Because nowhere since the fourth century, in the whole Western Church, down to the year 1868, was there any canonical allowance for the remarriage of the so-called "innocent party". In that year, 1868, for the first time in the history of the whole Anglican communion, a General Convention of this American Church presumed to overrule the plain teaching of the New Testament, the teaching and practice of the Church in the first three centuries, and since then of the whole Western Church, by allowing the "innocent party" under certain conditions to remarry. (See Bulletin No. 10.)

(For reasons why the great Eastern branch of the Church departed from this scriptural and primitive rule in her canon law, as she did in the fifth and following centuries, it must suffice here to say that the removal of the seat of empire from Rome to Constantinople placed this portion of the Church directly under the influence of a corrupt and half-Christian court, while the distant West remained free from such influence.)

5. Because the present proviso of Canon 43 is not only contrary to the repeated commands of our Lord, and of the doctrine and practice of the whole Primitive Church, and of this American Church up to 1868, but was enacted in a single Convention of that year, contrary to Article 10 of the Constitution. This provides that "no alteration (of the Prayer Book) or addition thereto shall be made unless the same shall be first proposed in one triennial meeting of the General Convention, and by a resolve thereof be made known to the Diocesan Convention of every Diocese, and may be adopted by the General Convention at its next succeeding triennial meeting by a majority of the clerical and lay deputies of all the dioceses entitled to representation in the House of Deputies voting by orders". Such is the history of this fatal proviso, which half a century of experience has proved to be the ever-ready wedge of collusion, fraud and falsehood, and the despair of honorable judges.

6. Because (1) as a merely practical measure, the allowance of remarriage to the "innocent party" places upon the bishops an impossible duty in view of the fact that even with "the Court's Decree and Record" before them, but without power to call and examine witnesses, it is impracticable to distinguish between the innocent party (where such really exists) and the guilty. Moreover (2), inasmuch as, in the opinion of many of our judges, at least one-half of all the divorces granted are probably fraudulent or collusive, and that 80 to 90 per cent are granted in default, without defense or rebuttal, how is it possible for bishops, unskilled in law, and without secular powers, to form a right judgment in such cases?

7. Because, in accordance with our Lord's pragmatic test, "by their fruits ye shall know them", the census reports for the United States, with their forty-eight codes and fifty-two causes for sundering the bond, show the most rapid increase of divorce of any country, pagan or Christian, in the world.

With such facts before us it should be evident that it is impossible to restrict divorce with remarriage to a single cause. "Where shall the line be drawn if divorce is granted?" asks a high-minded and able non-Christian. "If divorce is granted in the first instance, it cannot be refused in the second or the third. To relieve the misery of the few, shall the expectation of the permanence of the marriage union be destroyed, and thus misery be imported into thousands of households from which it might have been averted?" (Marriage and Divorce, by Felix Adler, p. 48, Appleton, 1915.)

It is noteworthy that, though every member of the Convention received a printed copy of this petition several weeks beforehand, so far as is reported, the only objections made were wholly irrelevant. The speakers had much to say about "changing social conditions and overcrowding"; prophecies of dire results for "immorality and religion in the punishment of the innocent" (!), and "there is no use legislating for people who do not care a snap". On the other hand, no attempt whatever appears to have been made to challenge the truth of even one of the Seven Reasons.

Arguments like those quoted are not such as one would expect in a council of intelligent and representative Christians, but are rather those of the street and the club, the "liberal" magazine and the sentimental novel, of which the one basis is "hard cases" for the innocent few, as against the well-being and the very existence of society. For, as has been well said, "The sentimentalist is kind only to be cruel, and unwittingly promotes the results which he most deprecates". It would seem in fact as if a great many members of the Convention were of the mind of one lay deputy, who wrote to the secretary on receipt of the petition, "If I have leisure time, I may read the same, but I will not be influenced in any way".

The Canon at the Bar of History.

In these days of hustle in both thinking and action, it is surely wise for us all to heed the command to ancient Israel to "stand, see and remember' and "ask for the old paths" that are as ancient as creation itself, and as straight and inflexible as the law of gravitation. For, great as may be our advance in the physical sciences, and our possession of greater wealth and power than was ever entrusted to any other nation, "the Ten Commandments will not budge", no, not even the Seventh.

It was said recently by an able historical student that it was unfortunate that the mass of Americans "did not draw on the past for present counsel". In the sixth century, the great Eastern Church, under the pressure of the worldly and corrupt court of Constantinople, departed just a little from the straight and ancient path of God's Seventh Commandment, and in five hundred years found its nemesis in the crushing onslaughts of Mohammedanism with its religion of polygamy, lust and murder. In the eleventh century her Russian daughter departed farther from the path, and today we see her nemesis in the barbaric power of the Soviet, which is a denial of all morality and all religion.

Looking back only three hundred years in our own favored land, we have seen the same inevitable process going on. An infant Church neglected by its parent, persecuted here and suspected, forbidden by the State the possession of its full apostolic ministry and freedom of government, was necessarily crippled in enforcing its godly discipline. So weak it was, even twenty-four years after it gained its freedom, that a Convention of only twenty-nine members yielded to pressure and ignorance in expressing an untrue opinion, which, sixty years later, bore fruit in a canon hastily adopted, in a few hours of a single session, ignorantly and illegally; contrary also to the pledge of the revisers of 1789, and to the doctrine of the Prayer Book itself, as well as to the traditions of 1,800 years, and to the plain teaching of the New Testament. Thus, out of all branches of the historic Church of the English-speaking race, this American Church stands alone, so far as a canon can accomplish it, in unfaithfulness to the very foundation and security of the home and family, and eventually of the nation.

And with what result? The result that always comes whenever any fundamental principle of morals is given up, even in the smallest detail. The door of exit seemed so very small ("is it not a little one"?), but lo, in less than fifty years, fifty other doors have been opened wide by our legislatures in acceptance of our logic! No less than 184,741 divorces and annulments were granted in the United States in the single year 1926, or one divorce to every 6.50 marriages, and in some States one to 4.51 (Texas), 3.83 (Missouri), 3.89 (Ohio), 2.27 (Oregon), and 1.17 (Nevada). Canada's rate in 1925 was one to 121 marriages! Here is "trial' or "companionate" marriage in reality. And what will the end be in twenty years?

The answer depends largely on what the Church of Jesus Christ in this land, and all faithful Christians, will do in the coming years. Are they to continue in blind and smug contentment with this condition, regardless of what may happen to the rest of the world? Much will depend on what study and honest thought are given to the question beforehand by the Joint Commission of the Convention, and more still on what patient consideration will be given to it by the Convention itself in 1928. The prayers of every faithful Christian and patriotic American should be offered up continually for their enlightenment and guidance.

TURNING BACK THE HANDS OF THE ORDINATION CLOCK

By the Right Reverend Walter Mitchell, D. D.

THE Rt. Rev. Prayer Book Churchman, D. D., Bishop of the Metropolitan Diocese of About the Average, was proceeding to the Diocesan House for a conference with certain deacons whose advancement to the priesthood he had set for the next day. He was not at all easy in his mind. The times, in the Church, were decidedly "out of joint". He took his vows very seriously and was inclined to be rather a "strict constructionist" of them; yet he earnestly desired to be as liberal as, in the Gospels, His Master appeared to have been. On the other hand, it did seem to him that in the Church liberty had become license and that it was time to call a halt.

Entering his office, he found awaiting him the Rev. Anglo Catholic, a member of the staff of St. Mary the Virgin's, the Very Modern, of the Christ Church staff, the Rev. Low Churchman (a relative of the Bishop's) and the Rev. Broad Churchman (not related to the Bishop at all), who nad been loaned to the cathedral of another jurisdiction—deacons all.

The Bishop greeted them very cordially and affectionately. He had known them almost from babyhood, had confirmed them and loved them.

"I have asked you to meet me here this morning," he explained, "so that we might have a heart to heart discussion of the vows which each of you is to take tomorrow. The sacredness of them is beyond all question and I am sure you realize that fully. As you see, for the most part they are two-fold. Nearly every question seems really to ask two questions, although the answer to each is one. These two questions are, as in the first one, "according to the will of our Lord Jesus Christ" and, "according to the Canons (or, as in others, the Doctrine or Discipline or Worship) of this Church". So far as I am concerned, these two are one. I find no difficulty whatever in regarding them as just two ways of saying the same thing—the one is only an amplification of the other. How do they strike you?"

There was a considerable pause. Each deacon waited for the other to reply.

"Well, Sir," finally spoke up the Rev. Anglo Catholic, "it seems to me to be all a matter of interpretation based in part upon one's training, but very much more upon his temperament. When I went to St. Mary the Virgin's, almost the first thing the rector told me was that, above all else, I was to be loyal to my Bishop and the Church; that that was what the parish stood for. Coming, as I did, from that little country parish, at first I was greatly troubled by what I saw going on. But Father —— had urged me to come to him whenever I felt like it, so I took this matter to him. He made it all very clear.

First he called my attention to the statement in the Preface of the Prayer Book to the effect that our Church here 'was far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship' and he convinced me that nothing was being done at St. Mary's that had not been done at some time or other in the Church of England. I have come to love what I found there and when I go to that little parish after my ordination tomorrow, I mean to do things as St. Mary's does them."

"Just what do you mean?" inquired the Bishop.

"Well, Sir," said the deacon, with glowing eyes, "let us take worship first. At St. Mary's, as you of course know, we never have Morning Prayer or Evening Prayer. We have Masses and Benediction and the like instead. The early masses are the times our people have been taught to make their communions, fasting, having previously made their confessions and receiving absolution from one of the priests on the staff. At the late Mass, since no one is expected to communicate, the Exhortation, Confession, Absolution, Comfortable Words and Prayer of Humble Access are omitted."

The Bishop was plainly upset. He did not want to make of this interview, just before their ordination, an argument or a dispute, and yet he felt obliged to go on.

"How do you get around the last part of that rubric in the Communion Office, which says, 'And sufficient opportunity shall be given to those present to communicate'?"

"Oh, that is easy!" replied the deacon. "Father —— says that the statement in the preface to which I have referred, covers that and all the other things we do. For example, we reserve the Sacrament both for the purpose of communicating the sick and for purposes of adoration. We make votive offerings to the Virgin Mary, and teach the people to use the rosary. We find the people like these things. Instead of Evening Prayer we have Benediction, and you know what that is."

"Now as to doctrine," the young deacon went, "we are doing our best to get rid of the 'forty stripes save one' of the Articles and to undo all the rest of the Protestant teaching so many of our people have received; that is, all that is based on the unfortunate so-called Reformation of the Church, except as to the Pope. In short, we teach the whole Catholic Position. I am sure you know what I mean, Sir. As I say, when I get to that little parish I mean to introduce all these things (they know nothing of them now), and I am going to see that my people call me Father, too, and so recognize my relation to them."

There was a silence. The Bishop seemed lost in thought for a moment. Then he looked up and smiled at the Rev. Very Modern.

"I can state my case in much less time," he said, smilingly. "At Christ Church I was taught to accept the scientific view of the Bible and of Doctrine. We have no trouble in following the rubrics, even slavishly. Where a rubric says 'shall' we obey; where it says 'may', we use our own judgment. But of course, as you know, Sir, we do not believe much in the inspiration of the Scriptures, or in miracles or the Virgin Birth or any of those things."

The further he went the more perturbed the Bishop became. Turning to his kinsman, the Rev. Low Churchman, he seemed to think he would receive some comfort.

"For my part," began that deacon, "I cannot understand how these other fellows can honorably go on and be advanced to the priesthood. It seems to me that Anglo, here, having swallowed the camel of the Doctrine and Worship of Rome, should not stickle at the gnat of Discipline and, therefore, ought at once to take the short step of obedience to the Pope and be done with it; while Very Modern should go to the Unitarians, where he so evidently belongs."

"Since you feel that way," said the Bishop, "I suppose you signed this petition that is going the rounds to General Convention to stop these things."

"No, Sir, I didn't. At first I thought I would, but our rector pointed out that while we could not abide them, still, if these things were stopped, what we were doing might be too, and, of course, we did not want that to happen."

"Are you prepared, then, to subscribe to the vows of the Service in their generally accepted sense?" asked the Bishop.

"Yes, Sir," and, after a little hesitation, he added, "on the whole."

"Just what do you mean by that," inquired the Bishop.

"Well, Sir, at St. Paul's, we have no trouble with Doctrine but, as you know, we are taught that as to Discipline our Lord did not make all the requirements that the Church does, so we admit to full membership, as regular communicants and to all the rest, all who love Jesus Christ in sincerity and mean to follow in His Steps. Then as to worship, as you know, Sir, in order to make the night services more popular (you know how hard it is to get our people out to night service), we have done away with Evening Prayer pretty much and have, instead, a popular song service, sometimes with addresses by men or women who have done some outstanding social or welfare work. It certainly brings the people, they like it."

"At our cathedral," began the Rev. Broad Churchman, "we were taught to believe about what Christ Church teaches and to do about what St. Paul's does. There is this in addition, which has not been touched upon. As you know, Sir, the sentiment of the people there is very strong for Prohibition (at least I think that is the reason). They are rampant and intolerant about it. Not so much amongst our own people, but that is the prevailing conviction of the city. For other reasons, though, lots of Protestant-reared people have left the Church of their youth and are coming to our cathedral in great numbers. But they balked at receiving the Communion. So, since the Bishop did not forbid it, the Dean uses grape juice instead of wine and the people like that very much better. It seems to me a sensible thing, too," he added; "no use repelling people for a little thing like using wine."

Let us leave the Bishop and the Deacons. I call your attention to three things: (1) In each case the deacon was the product of what he had been taught by the rector of the parish in which he had been working; (2) In each case the deacons had said, "As you know, Sir—" the teaching or practice was of general knowledge; (3) "The people like it".

I have called this recital, "Turning Back the Hands of the Ordination Clock" because, while here the Bishop in question felt that a strict interpretation of his vows made it impossible to ordain a single one of these deacons, he had to face the fact that the Church could hardly refuse ordination to them when men long in the priesthood, doctors of divinity from our best Church colleges, deputies to the General Convention—honored alike by Church and State—did and taught the same things and nothing happened. Surely these youngsters were not the ones to be dealt with!

It seems to me that certain very serious questions are raised: (1) How far, in fact, do the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of our Church (if they do at all), go beyond the "will of our Lord Jesus Christ"? (2) Should bishops, examining chaplains and standing committees accept as satisfactory, answers which are as far away from the average practice and belief of the Church as the answers of these deacons are, on the ground that the answers reflect the actual practice and belief of many, many clergy and the Church permits it?

(3) Should the Church (not permit but gladly) accept whatever would have satisfied our Lord as to doctrine, discipline and worship in those who desire to become official leaders, without regard to a strict interpretation of the "Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of this Church"? (4) In these matters, where does liberty stop and license begin? And finally (5), Is it true that we leaders of the Church are, apparently, much more concerned about Doctrine, Discipline and Worship than about saintliness?

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES IN WASHINGTON

As early as October 5, while the Daughters of the King and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were holding their conventions, Woman's Auxiliary delegates began to arrive in Washington. Things have been happening at a rapid pace since that date and Washington seems practically taken over by the Convention.

The Mayflower Hotel, headquarters of the Woman's Auxiliary, is all activity, and the women there, whether delegates, visitors or local workers, are seriously expending their efforts for the ever broadening missionary work of the Church. Five hundred and two delegates were expected by the registration committee and of this number, approximately all expected have registered. This number includes one hundred and twenty-five missionaries from all points of this country and other countries. Twelve of these are being entertained in Missionary House, of whom four are nurses from St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo. The remaining number, almost without exception, are being provided for in private homes.

Besides the dioceses in this country, other places represented by the delegates registering are Anking, Hankow, Liberia, Brazil, the Philippines, Shanghai, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Mexico and Tokyo, Alaska and Honolulu.

The Mayflower ballroom is being used for the regular Auxiliary sessions, and because of the use of amplifiers, the distance of those at the extreme end of the hall from the speakers' platform is entirely overcome. Local committees are on duty daily at desks assigned to them in the very beautiful lobby of the hotel, and literature, information and help of all kinds are being given to the many hundreds of people there, all the time. Men are not absent from this scene, either, for bishops and clergy are seen continually there, eager, perhaps, to take back to their parishes some of the inspiration and information gained here, in the midst of this truly great assembly.

Much Auxiliary activity also centers around Missionary House at 1719 Eye Etreet. This is a house set apart for the entertainment of missionaries as the guests of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington. A resident hostess is there at all times to receive visitors and tea is being served every afternoon, from 4 to 6 o'clock. Local Auxiliary branches are taking charge of the tea each afternoon during the Triennium. Missionary House is being found to be a place where women may meet, learn to know each other better as co-workers in the Church, rest and be refreshed and enjoy a hearty hospitality which comes from home-like surroundings.

The Triennium really began on October 9, with registration for all members of the Woman's Auxiliary and those desiring to enter the study classes. In the afternoon of the same day at four o'clock there was a Preparatory Hour for all women, conducted at St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street.

On October 10 the Auxiliary, in conjunction with the entire Convention, attended the opening service of the Convention at the Amphitheatre, Washington Cathedral, General Convention and all that follows in its train.

The opening business session of the Auxiliary was held the afternoon of that day, at 2:30. The outstanding event of this session was the election of Miss Elizabeth Matthews, of Glendale, Ohio, as presiding officer. This is in line with a resolution adopted in New Orleans three years ago, which provided for the election of a presiding officer at each Triennium, instead of the former custom of having the local diocesan president fill the position. This was done, to lift to some extent, the pressure of work from the local president. At this opening session, Mrs. William D. Hurd, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington, was accorded an ovation by a standing audience. She delivered a warm word of welcome. At this time she had brought to the platform for the use of the presiding officer, a chair which was used in the House of Bishops in the General Convention of 1871, in Baltimore, when the Woman's Auxiliary was created. Mrs. McBride, of New Orleans, acknowledged Mrs. Hurd's address with a tribute to the City of Washington and to the Washington Auxiliary. An important announcement was made at this first meeting by the Treasurer, who reported that "The Corporate Gift" amounted to $121,727.80. This gift is a special undertaking of the past three years which was designed to raise $100,000 for advance missionary projects.

The total amount reported during the past three years for all Auxiliary purposes, exclusive of the women's regular contributions through their parish churches, was $3,219,267.57. This includes the United Thank Offering made in New Orleans in 1925.

The Auxiliary attendance upon the joint session of the House of Bishops and the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies, which took place on October 12, in Continental Hall, was such that many delegates were unable to gain admission. This was regrettable, but perhaps not to be blamed on any one or anything other than the increasing size of a General Convention and all that follows in its train.

Business sessions were carried on regularly at the Mayflower, until Saturday noon. In the afternoon, the entire Convention made a pilgrimage to Mount Vernon and this included, of course, the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Training Institute, which has taken on a more official aspect this year, because it is being conducted under the National Council and Woman's Auxiliary together, has grown from small study classes conducted by the Auxiliary, to the present well organized series of classes known as the Training Institute. This Institute, consisting of forty-eight classes, led by instructors of experience in their several fields, is presenting a program covering a broad and varied number of subjects.

Registration for these classes reached the maximum at the very outset of the Triennium.

Closely associated with the Woman's Auxiliary is the program for the children's work in the Church, and this found expression in the Church School Service activities in connection with the Triennium. A demonstration meeting was held in the parish hall of Christ Church, Georgetown, when boys of different ages were at work upon articles to be sent to the Philippines. A number of visitors observed the work. Similar demonstrations are planned for the second week—one at St. Margaret's Church on October 15, and another at Christ Church, Georgetown, when girls will take part in a missionary study class.

The Children's Birthday Thank Offering was presented at Epiphany Church, on Sunday afternoon, October 14, at 2:30, in Epiphany Church, when the children from all the Washington Church Schools, took part in the procession and helped to make a beautiful and inspiring service.

Bishop Creighton, of Mexico, for whose work the Birthday Offering was given, delivered the address, and later the announcement, which thrilled the hearers, showed the amount of the offering to be more than $32,000. Since this is only the second Birthday Triennial offering of the Church, the promise seems to indicate a growth and development in the offering similar to the United Thank Offering made by the women.

THE LAST THINGS.

Mr. Editor:

Daniel says those who instruct others unto righteousness shall shine as the stars for all eternity, in that glory which, St. Paul adds, in degree varies according as the sun, the moon and the stars. May the rewards of the zealous editors of The Southern Churchman be accordingly!

The Southern Churchman has continually defended week after week the unfailing integrity and truthful witness of the Scriptures recording these promises, against a science false in its premises and still more in its conclusions, ever varying and contradictory.

The early Christians under such holy bishops and presbyters as ruled in the first Episcopal Church as Justin Martyr and Irenaeus following faithfully in the footsteps of St. John and St. Paul, Daniel and the long list of prophets, speak again in the Churchman the earnest longing of the first centuries for the Second Coming of Christ!

Our interest and love in Our Saviour is increased by the expectation of seeing Him return this time in Glory and Power. "If another comes in his own name, ye will receive him," said Our Lord to the Jews. "The end cannot come," says St. Paul, "until the Man of Sin is revealed," and Daniel and John at length narrate how we may expect the near approach of the Second Coming, when the Roman Empire is seen again arising out of the sea, to dominate the world. And St. John tells us it is wisdom to understand its capital is that city which sits upon seven hills—Rome. They foretell us wonderful events, the approach of which will tell us the time is at hand.

But how shall we be prepared for these things if, as the Churchman has said, we believe not the Scriptures? According to greatest scientists, the catastrophic theory of the Flood best agrees with the convulsive state of strata, fauna and flora, seen on the earth today—of the tropical animals suddenly washed up on Arctic shores in whose ice-cold storage plants their flesh is still fresh! Recent discoveries written on rocks, whose strata is ten-fold deep, have compelled learned canons to admit their sceptical doubts of the authenticity of such books as Daniel are groundless, and the canon of the books of the Bible, as Gladstone once said, is "impregnable". "My word shall never pass away."

Awake! Christian soul, Our Lord has told us we know not the exact time, but we shall know its near approach. Jerusalem and Rome are two points on which we are told to fix our attention.

The false Messiah, from whom the returned Jews learn to recoil, Daniel tells us will rebuild their Temple—will be head of one of Alexander the Great's kingdoms, King of the North, of Syria, of Babylon according to other prophets—and finally Emperor of the ancient Roman Empire, commanding ten kingdoms of Europe.

How the great Allenby, fighting against the Turks of the North, of Syria, prefigures the campaigns foretold by Daniel, to end in a Christian final victory of Armageddon in Palestine.

And behold the age-old ambition of the Mussolinis of Italy to restore that Roman Empire, the Beast of John and Daniel, scarlet (red republican, iron-clay claws), with the woman, the City of Rome, corrupt, at the helm, in the saddle.

St. John tells us the Greek letters making up the name of the Beast, antichrist, in Greek each letter stands for a number, add together to give 666, by which we may know him.

So, when he rebuilds the Jewish Temple, and his name is 666, as for instance Maometis, the Greek for Mahomet, or Apollyon, the Greek for Napoleon, interpreters instance as names fulfilling the prophecy, time alone will fulfill and the few years left for the Millennium at hand, after the Second Coming of Christ, definitely known, all of which was firmly believed by the Christians of the first three centuries, until the worldly Christian Church of Rome condemned it as Chilianism, by others also in a perverted sensual Mohammedan idea of delights.

Awake, O Christians, to enjoy the rewards, not the condemnation of Our Master! The Apostles tell us, new teachers, Modernists, will creep in denying all this, for their own—and our (?)—damnation. No, we fear a Hell, they deny—"everlasting"—where their torments ascend forever, of the Beast, of the wicked "forever", because opposed to heaven "forever" for the just.

And yet how sad for a Christian Bishop in the pulpit, to be broadcasted over the land, praising Canon Farrar's "Eternal Hope", which the writer years ago said in the preface was against "the common opinion" of ages, that of the Scriptures according to ancient and modern interpretation of the Word everlasting. Is this worthy of a Christian Bishop?

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

Attention to the need for missionary work in the new sections of the Western parts of this country was strongly urged by Bishop Barnwell, of Idaho.

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, in his report, gave much space to conditions in local jails in this country, which he described as frequently horrible beyond belief, establishing through the country breeding places of crime and vices.

A PRAYER FOR PARENTS.

F. B. Stone.

Lord, help us bring the children to Thy fold,
Thou art for them as well as for the old;
And Thou dost bid us all believe in Thee,
So help them live that they Thy face may see.

Their loving Shepherd, may they know Thy voice,
And early turn to Thee of their own choice;
And they will come without our doubts or fear,
If only they are taught Thy love made clear.

And may they know the Holy Spirit's power,
Be filled even in their early childhood's hour;
As Thou through them dost often work Thy will,
When older folk amazed, are hushed and still.

Through children's prayers men's hearts forsake their sin,
And turn to Thee so Thou canst enter in;
And through their prayers of faith the sick are healed,
Thus clearly is Thy power through them revealed.

We seek for them the best the world can give,
Yet think them still too young in Thee to live;
But, oh! the children greater joy can know,
Through serving Thee than from the world can flow.

Oh! help all parents, Lord, Thy will to see,
And bring their children early unto Thee,
And help them give themselves while young and free,
That they may know a greater life than we.

The Desire For Immortality.

Archaelogical research in Palestine is bringing some interesting facts to light, chief among which is a corrective to the prevailing view that the inhabitants of that country in Old Testament times had little or no belief in the survival of the soul after death. The spade and mattock are now revealing to us that, side by side with the religion of the prophets, there subsisted a sort of cult of the dead. It was not unattended with moral danger, for there is some evidence that necromancy was practiced with its correlative abominations; which no doubt is the reason why the great prophets discountenanced it and placed the main stress of their teaching up on ethical values in this life rather than upon the satisfying of curiosity in regard to a life to come.

But there are glimpses even in the canonical Scriptures of a longing which takes a higher form, as in King David's touching words when he dried his tears after mourning the loss of his child. "I shall go to him, but he will not return to me." If this meant no more than that the bereaved father looked forward to sharing the same grave with his little son, it is one of the saddest utterances in the Bible. But in the light of the new evidence we are not driven to this conclusion: there is an alternative, namely, that David looked forward to reunion with his beloved one somewhere and somehow. The tokens of a belief in survival which excavation is discovering are also tokens of the existence of superstition and worse in ancient Israel. But there is a pathetic side to their significance none the less. They show that the human heart three Thousand years ago like the human heart today longed for some assurance that beauty and the joy of life, the sweetness of human companionship and mutual ministry and tenderness did not end with the tomb.

The assurance was not forthcoming. Over the ancient world, as has been well said, the shadow of death hung like a pall. It was with the promulgation of the Gospel of Christ that a new and really triumphant attitude towards the great mystery became possible to faith and love. We need not here discuss all that was held to be involved in Christ's victory over death as recorded in the New Testament; it is sufficient to point out that the most conspicuous immediate fruit of that sublime event was that it changed entirely the feeling of His followers about the mystery of death. They were no longer afraid of it; they regarded it henceforth as no more than an incident in a process that had yet to be consummated. Neither the ordinary Greek nor the ordinary Jewish view of the survival of the soul after death was that of the Christian. Neither going on in a disembodied state, nor going back to a renewal of what had been, fully expressed the Christian hope.

This is a fact which we need to keep in mind at the preesnt day, for much of the talk about survival means no more than the desire for a continuation of existence as we know it in the flesh but under better conditions in some other sphere; and this is not enough. The Christian seeks eternal life and eternal life implies more than duration. It means nothing less than sharing in the life of God, and therefore in the fulfillment and glorification of all that is best in our present experience.

There are many people who can neither believe in this all-comprehensive attainment, nor in the fact of survival at all. Here and there one comes across people upon whom it has pressed so heavily that they desire no other; they are tired out and only long for rest, the rest that knows no ending, the sleep that knows no waking. They wake so often to pain and sorrow and disillusionment that to them it would be no bad news to be told on unassailable authority that they will never awaken more after life's fitful fever finally ceases and its unhappy dreams have fled. Such persons may be more numerous than we commonly assume.

But probably the majority of those who doubt or disbelieve in the immortality of the soul do so, simply because, so far as they can discern, there seems no likelihood that self-conscious life can survive the break-up of its physical organization. There are not a few fine spirits in the modern world who feel themselves compelled to the dreadful conviction that the highest leader of human character, the noblest human aspirations, and the sweetest and most beautiful of human relationships, are nothing more than a tragical development against a dark and awful background of cosmic mystery and doomed to pass away like the bloom of yester year.

Warwick Deeping gives us in "Sorrell and Son" the confession of a brave and unselfish father whose mature life has been a great struggle to give his boy a standing and work in the world better than he himself had ever had. The purpose achieved the father is smitten with cancer and thus expresses himself to his closest friend. "I don't believe in anything. I have just done a particular job—and loved it. The whole business is beyond me. Sometimes I have felt that there is a plan, but there—there is so much against the idea of a plan. Just a warring of blind forces—pushing like a lot of beasts. . . . We don't matter. Man matters only to himself. He is fighting a lone fight against a vast indifference. Man invents religion to hide the full horror of the universe's complete indifference, for it is horrible. He tries spiritism. Oh! anything to escape, to color the spectacles! I have always felt myself up against—not only the human scuffle—but against the crushing—impersonal foot of the heedless universal."

This is a sad testimony, but it is all that many men of integrity ever attain to: they will find something better awaiting them on the farther shore where all life's questions are answered. Nor is it merely with the desire to administer a spiritual anodyne to the perplexed and weary, the suffering and the solitary, that I place over against it a word of God that verifies itself infallibly in the heart of the man who dare to trust it and challenge the darkness in its power. "That I may know him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made comfortable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." We can live that resurrection life now, which is the deeper sense of this famous passage.

"Because I live," said our blessed Lord, "ye shall live also." Yes, we live in Him. He is Himself the pledge and guarantee that no spiritual possession we have ever enjoyed can perish wtih the passing of earth's little day. We cannot even think of life in Christ as subject to the vicissitudes of things temporal, nor of anything worthy of our fellowship with Christ as being at the mercy of the fortuitous and unpredictable. This world of shadows and dreams is not our home, nor do we live in it alone; we live in another and higher all the time, though it be veiled from us by our mortal part. And when the veil is rent asunder at the last we shall be no strangers in a strange land but children greeting each other in the Father's House.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, D. D.

Thoughts For The Doubtful.

Louis Deschamps.

Victims of arid philosophies are extremely unhappy. Whatever may be the satisfaction of the knowledge that they recognize no authority beyond their own free will, the fact remains that they find life void of its most enjoyable conceptions.

The test of a philosophy is whether it makes life better and happier for humanity because of the inspiration and direction it gives to the individual's outlook upon life. A blind worship of reason for reason's sake is itself unreasonable, because philosophy is for man, not man for philosophy.

If the personal experiences of religion are unknown to the individual, it does not follow that religion is merely an emotional trait possessed by some and not by others. Consider the purely philosophical aspects of religion, and compare the happy, useful lives of Christians with the deadly cynicism of purely intellectual philosophers. Purpose and incentive in life are primary, pious moods are secondary.

Granted that our little span of years seems lost in the immensity of time, and that our petty doubts or fears do not affect the universe itself, is it not the part of wisdom to think hopefully, believe reverently, and live cheerfully for the sake of human happiness if for no other reason? Religion relieves mortal minds from the dangerous strain of immortal problems. We come into being without our own consent. We leave the world in the same manner. Why not realize that we are a part of creation rather than creators, and make ourselves at home by adapting our lives to the mystic order and harmony of creation revealed by religion?

What has philosophy to offer in place of religion's conception of God with its inspiration, beauty, and ennobling idealism? There is no answer to facts of ticularly attractive to a child's mind. unless it be the potential good of ideal ism which religion cherishes in spite of every enemy.

What We Need.

In the East the wisdom has been collected without Christ, and in the West the power has been collected without Christ. So both are powerless. Him who brings a better wisdom and a better power, Him who is wiser than the East and stronger than the West both have failed to heed, and as long as this is the case the East and the West always will be hostile to each other.

In all this clamor Christ soothingly whispers through the generations, "Without Me ye can do nothing". He is wiser than the East. He is stronger than the West. Christ ought to come to the East to clean their minds and to elevate their hearts. He ought to come to the West to instill more kindness, more brotherly love.

What we need today most of all is that Christ's revealed wisdom should rectify and vivify the wisdom of the East, and that His Divine inspiration should spiritualize the power of the West.—Bishop Remington.

A man can no more take in a supply of grace for the future than he can eat enough today to last him for the next six months, or take sufficient air into his lungs at once to sustain life for a week to come. We must draw upon God's boundless stores of grace from day to day, as we need it.—D. L Moody.

THY HOME IS WITH THE HUMBLE.

"Thy Home is with the humble, Lord!
The simplest are the best;
Thy Lodging is in child-like hearts;
Thou makest there Thy rest.

Dear Comforter! Eternal Love!
If Thou wilt stay with me,
Of lowly thoughts and simple ways,
I'll build a house for Thee.

Who made this beating heart of mine
But Thou, my heavenly Guest?
Let no one have it then but Thee,
And let it be Thy rest.

Thy sweetness hath betrayed Thee, Lord!
Great Spirit, is it Thou?
Deeper and deeper in my heart
I feel Thee resting now."

The Soft Answer.

Most of the boys and girls of the sixth grade dashed excitedly back and forth across the school grounds as they waited for the cars that were coming to take them to Warton for a game of baseball with the sixth grade boys of that school.

Red-headed, alert Jane Hall, the pep leader of the grades, was off to one side coaching her squad. Saucy caps of purple and gold, streamers and pennants of the same colors, advertised the unfailing loyalty and enthusiasm of the school.

Girls, let's root and yell as we never did before. And above all things, don't let that Warton bunch get away with any rough stuff like the Smithville bullies did last week. Be just as hard-boiled as they are."

"We will!"

"Count on us, Jane!" they answered.

Margaret Snow, Jane's chum, was more emphatic in her answer.

"Just try some one to try to snatch my purple and gold cap off again! Or push me down! Won't catch me off guard this time!"

Their teacher, Miss Dee, smiled at them all as she asked, "May I say just a word, Jane, before you start practicing your yells?"

Of course she could! Didn't they all love Miss Dee? She was full of understanding and sympathy, yet as ready for fun as any of them. Her pupils thought anything she did was exactly right!

Her eyes twinkled as she paused and glanced at this girl and that one of the quiet group. Some of the boys crowded nearer and listened attentively.

"Just what did you think of Smithville folks after the way their pep squad acted here last week?" she asked.

They were all of the same opinion as Margaret, who answered forcefully, "A bunch of rough necks! Toughies! Hoodlums!"

Miss Dee laughed, but sobered immediately as she started to speak to them. "Now, think serious this afternoon while you are guests of Warton, before you do anything in a hateful, ugly spirit. Things do happen at games, I know, that make you want to fight back—answer back—but no matter what the provocation, promise me that you'll remember that 'a soft answer turneth away wrath'. You children represent Hilltop. Perhaps some of the Warton people have never visited here and don't know what lovely folks we have in Hilltop. You boys and girls that attend the ball game this afternoon are all they have to judge by. Whether we win or lose, see what good sports you can be!"

A longer speech was prevented by the arrival of the cars, but there was still time for a scattered hand-clapping of approval and whispered agreement to act as Miss Dee had suggested.

They scrambled into the cars and were off on the long ride to the neighboring town. No yelling was allowed on the way, as the teachers had asked them to save their voices.

However, the game was called almost as soon as they arrived, so the pep squad, led by Jane, with her megaphone cheered with all their might every minutes of the game.

In spite of all this backing and enthusiasm, in spite of all that every sweating, anxious boy on the team could do, they were defeated.

Jane and Margaret groaned. Great tears rolled down their cheeks. But suddenly Jane shook Margaret fiercely. Don't dare cry. Look at our poor boys —heartbroken! They played as hard as they could. Look how white Fred Stone is. Ready to cry himself!"

Margaret hastily wiped her eyes: "Start a yell for them, Jane."

The red-headed yell leader jumped up on the fender of her father's car and scream through the megaphone, "Three cheers for the Hilltop boys! All right, Let's go, squad! Rah! Rah! Rah! H-i-l-l-t-o-p!"

They responded with a roar and vim that made their team smile wanly.

"Once more. All together!"

The tired boys grinned their thanks.

Of course, all along there had been good natured raillery, and answering yells from the Warton crowd, but just then a pert Warton girl called across to her friend who stood near Jane and Margaret. "Come on there, Louise. Help me give them what's coming to them.

"Yah, yah, yah!
That's not all!
Hilltop! Hilltop!
Can't play ball!"

Just a minute before this disagreeable incident, Margaret and Jane had admired the long, blonde curls of the girl who had been called Louise by her thoughtless friend. When Jane flushed with anger and started to answer the insult of the Warton girls, Margaret pinched her warningly.

Immediately Jane remembered Miss Dee's parting advice. She saw that Louise had not been a party to the derision, so she turned to her and said heartily, "Your boys certainly can play ball. That was a keen game—even if we didn't win it."

Louise of the blonde curls and shy, sweet smile, thanked her, and praised the Hilltop boys. "But why didn't Shorty come today?"

"He hurt his knee pretty bad yesterday. It certainly was a calamity to all of us!" Jane told her, wondering how on earth she knew of their star player.

"Why, that was just a tragedy!" exclaimed Louise. "I don't know whether Warton would have won had he been playing against us. Auntie says he is a wonder."

Margaret and Jane asked breathlessly, "Oh, is your Auntie Mrs. Austin? Are you the girl who is going to move across the street from our school?"

"I am that very girl. And we are moving this week," Louise announced joyfully.

"We are just as glad as we can be. We are coming right over to see you," Jane and Margaret promised.

They were telling Miss Dee all about it on their way home.

Jane had been rather thoughtful. Suddenly she said: "Margaret, I never can thank you enough for pinching me when I started to tell that awful Warton girl what I thought of her for giving that horrid yell about Hilltop. I was so mad I probably would have disgraced us all with my red-headed temper. But the second you pinched me quick as a flash I remembered Miss Dee's talk to us. What if I had exploded! That darling Louise would have been a long, long time changing her opinion of me after she had moved in our neighborhood."

"Well, I don't blame you one tiny bit. I was as mad as a hornet myself!"

Miss Dee put her arms across Jane's shoulders and said, "I am just as proud as I can be of both you girls. Did either of you notice that Warton girl later? She was standing on a corner downtown when we passed and she waved her handkerchief and yelled at the top of her voice, Nine Rahs for Hilltop'!"

"She did?" the girls gasped at the very same time.

It was Jane who added in astonishment, "Why, Miss Dee! That is exactly what you told us would happen! And a soft answer did turn away wrath!"—Exchange.

THE FREDERICKSBURG AND SPOTSYLVANIA NATIONAL BATTLEFIELD PARK

was organized to aid the United States in building memorials to the men who proved their valor at the Wilderness, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Spotsylvania and Salem Church. In this area 113,000 men fell. Here is to be America's Greatest Memorial and her most beautiful park. This association asks the aid of survivors to those who died or gained honor. Mounments must be built, small parks made, memorials established.

We want to encourage others to consider erecting memorials here. We want them to know that a park is being built here superior in its beauty, and memorializing more of those who suffered in war than does any other park in the world.

Your interest will help us. Your membership at Two Dollars Fifty Cents a year will help. Memberships can be sent to John Goolrick, Fredericksburg, Va., or Miss Belle Downing, Secrectary, Fredericksburg.

We want to keep green the memory of those great folks who fought and died in the fire of battle within this park.

THE PIPER.

Piping down the valleys wild,
Piping songs of pleasant glee,
On a cloud I saw a child,
And he laughing said to me:

"Pipe a song about a lamb";
So I piped with merry cheer.
"Piper, pipe that song again";
So I piped and he wept to hear.

"Drop thy pipe, thy happy pipe,
Sing thy songs of happy cheer";
So I sang the same again,
While he wept with joy to hear.

"Piper, sit thee down and write
In a book that all may read."
So he vanished from my sight;
And I plucked a hollow reed;

And I make a rural pen,
And I stained the water clear,
And I wrote my happy songs
And every child may joy to hear.
—William Blake.

"God rules in all things, all obey
His swift propulsion from the night,
Wake thou and watch, the world is gray
With morning light."

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM
with an Examination of Modern Dispensationalism
by PHILIP MAURO

Mr. Philip Mauro, well-known Bible teacher and member of bar of the United States Supreme Court, has made caretul study of questions that are confusing many Christians.

Can You Answer These Questions?

1. Was it any part of the work of Christ:
   a. To revive and reconstitute the Jewish Nation?
   b. To re-establish that people in the land that was once theirs?
   c. To revive their system of worship, etc.?
2. When the times of the Gentiles are ended, what then?
   a. Will the "day of the Lord" then come?
3. Will Christ appear suddenly as a thief in the night; as the lightning that lighteth from one part to another under heaven?
   a. Will the door of salvation then be shut?

You need this book. It will help you "to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you."

The Church's Program is not epitomized in methods for raising money, but in motives for giving money.

The methods suggested from year to year have always demonstrated their worth when rightly used.

If, then, the methods for raising money are commendable, and still there is a lack of funds to carry on the full Program of the Church, it follows that the motives for giving money for the extension of the Kingdom of God must come under indictment.

It might be said that it would be "good business" for the people of the Church to support the Missionary Program. But the Church is not in business; she has no religion to sell. She has a glorious Lord to proclaim and a new civilization to institute.

It is true that her Program is written large in human needs, but it is even more truly portrayed in scarred brow, wounded, outstretched hands and pierced side.

The Church's Program is a program of "love constraining." It is the Program of those who see now "through a glass darkly," but following faithfully they see more clearly step by step.

The giving of money is the articulation of the motive.

The method suggested for expressing the motive is

Death

MARY KEMPER MILLER.

Entered into Life Eternal at St. Luke's Hospital, Richmond, Virginia, in the dawn of July 4, 1928, MARY KEMPER MILLER, daughter of Fontaine Llewellyn Kemper and Sarah Belle Brown, of Whitehall, Albemarle County, Virginia. The charm and graciousness of her manner endeared her to all those who came in contact with her, and though we can no longer see, we feel her presence ever near us, and her memory will linger always as the fragrance of flowers we love. Her last resting place is in the quiet burying ground of her old home, Whitehall, sleeping quietly with those who knew and loved her through childhood and young womanhood. She was a member of Saint Alban's Church, Washington, D. C.

"And there shall be no more death—
Neither shall there be any more pain."

MRS. NORA DOYLE HUDSON LEVY.

Resolutions.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in His wisdom to remove from our midst our beloved friend and co-worker, NORA DOYLE HUDSON (beloved wife of Leon Levy), be it:

Resolved, That although to us her passing seems an irreparable loss to St. James Church, the Ladies' Aid Society and the whole community, we humbly submit to the will of God. By her kindness and generosity she had won the love and respect of all. By her life all men knew that she must indeed be one of our Blessed Lord's beloved disciples. She had served faithfully for nearly fifty years in the building up of St. James' Church, and in the Ladies' Aid Society. Her home was the minister's haven of rest in years past.

The funeral took place on the eighteenth of September from St. James' Church, the Rev. W. J. Page, her rector, conducting the services. The little church was filled to overflowing with sorrowing friends.

"In life, in death, O Lord, Abide with me."

To her husband the other members of her family we tender our deepest sympathy.

Be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy published in the Central Virginian (our local paper), the Virginia Churchman and The Southern Churchman, and that they be spread on the Minutes of this Society.

EDWARD COLSTON.

EDWARD COLSTON, of Cincinnati, died suddenly and painlessly on Thursday, September 20, at Hot Springs, Virginia, where he had spent happily most of the summers of his later life. He was in his eighty-fifth year, having been born April 22, 1844, at "Honeywood," Berkeley County, now West Virginia. He received his preparatory education at the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, and volunteered in the Confederate Calvary, Wickham's brigade, when seventeen years old. He lost his left arm in one of the last fights of the war, in 1865, and was captured and held prisoner until peace was declared. He studied law and began practice in Cincinnati in 1870, rising quickly to a foremost place at the bar. He became in 1874 a member of the firm of Hoadly, Johnston and Colston, which in 1877 was changed to Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith and Hoadly, general counsel for the Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific Railway and other important corporations.

In 1875 Mr. Colston married Sally Coles Stevenson, of Covington, Kentucky, daughter of former Governor and United States Senator John W. Stevenson and granddaughter of Andrew Stevenson, United States minister to England and speaker of the House of Representatives. She was the mother of four daughters, of whom two died in infancy, those surviving being Judith Braxton Colston and Mrs. Mark Lincoln Mitchell, both of Cincinnati. Mrs. Colston died in 1890 and in 1896 Mr. Colston married her sister, Mary White Stevenson, who died childless in 1917. Mr. Colston gallantly met and overcame the obstacles of a lost arm, interrupted education and the impoverishment of his family by war, boldly entered a new field and in it made his way upward steadily and rapidly by power of character, talent and faithful labor. In peace he was loyal to all his duties as Churchman and citizen and in war loyal to his State. Like his ancestors for many generations he was vestryman, holding that relation to Christ Church, Cincinnati, twenty-eight years, always true to his inherited devotion to the time-honored doctrine and usages. He was buried from Christ Church, in his family lot in Spring Grove Cemetery, Cincinnati, the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, L. T. D., the rector, conducting the services. The American Legion asked to be allowed, as a last demonstration of honor for a brave soldier and loved citizen, to send a sailor, a soldier and a marine, in uniform, following the casket with the flag, and the request was granted gratefully by the two daughters. It was a very beautiful illustration of the restoration of national unity and of American respect and love for valor and fidelity.

Mr. Colston was of a typical household of Old Virginia. His grandfather, Raleigh Colston, was of the family of Edward Colston, famous founder of philanthropies in the seventeenth century, whose marble statue stands in Bristol, England, and in whose honor "Colston Day" is annually celebrated there. Raleigh Colston raised a company for the American army in the Revolutionary war. He married the oldest and favorite sister of Chief Justice Marshall, was closely associated with the Chief Justice in the development of Northern Virginia and built "Honeywood", overlooking the Potomac river, in 1801. His son, Edward Colston, inherited "Honeywood" and large adjoining estates. He married Sarah Jane Brockenbrough, daughter of Judge William Brockenbrough, of Richmond, and was the father of three sons, Raleigh, William and Edward, of whom Edward was the youngest.

"Cowards die daily; the valiant taste of death but once."

"The life of a loved one does not end. It simply goes on. Its work is done here only to take up its work in the 'other room'."

One only needs to lose a good father to know and learn this truth; to learn it so deeply and truly that no ism or cult or creed can shake that belief. It is then that clarity of vision comes; when the eye sees clearly and the mind and heart and soul unite in but one fixed truth—that we go on. The western gates close only to let the eastern gates open.

"It was a noble end certainly. Men lose their love and trust and hope as they grow old. Here was a man who kept them all fresh to the last. Men cease to have strong convictions, and grow cynical or careless. Here was a man who believed more asd not less, as he knew more of God, and of himself and of the World. His old age did not come creeping into port, a wreck, with broken masts and rudder gone, but full-sailed still and strong for other voyages in other seas.

"We are sure that his was the old age that God loves to see. To such men alone is God's promise to David fulfilled: 'With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation.'"

Personal Notes

The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, D. D., Bishop of Spokane, elected October 2 as Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania, has declined this election. He told the official notification committee which met him at the Willard Hotel October 10, that his present work and duties in his missionary diocese in the West were his reasons for declining.

The Rev. Theodore Nott Barth, for the last three years rector of All Saints' Church, Reisterstown, Md., and St. John's Church, Worthington Valley, has accepted a call to the new St. Bartholomew's Church, Ten Hills, Md. Mr. Barth will succeed the Rev. Edmund H. Gibson, who has taken charge of Trinity Church, Galveston, Texas. Mr. Barth will move to Ten Hills about November 12 next.

The vestry of Upper Truro Parish, Virginia, have declined to accept the resignation of their rector, the Rev. Alexander Galt, but have granted him a three months' leave of absence, to begin on the first of December.

The Rev. Josiah R. Ellis is with his son, at 3828 Marshall Road, Drexel Hill, Penn.

ORDINATIONS.

By REV. FRANK N. RIALE, Ph. D., D. D.
Williams Fellow, Harvard

REV. JOSEPH FORT NEWTON, D. D. so well known both as preacher and author, the world over, writes:

"I have just read your book with absorbing interest and inspiration. It is a great book of Faith and makes my heart leap like a drum beat. One trouble—perhaps the trouble—with us is that we are preaching a truncated Christianity, bereft of its real and rightful power. Yet that power is always with us when we are brave enough to lay hold of it—"lay hold of eternal life," and it will make us masters of life and time and death. You strike the great note, and I hope it will echo afar, recalling a bewildered church to its high privilege and opportunity. Thank you for what you have done."

REV. E. STANLEY JONES, D. D. author of Christ of the Indian Road, which the British Weekly says "has taken Christendom by storm," writes as follows:

"I want to thank you sincerely for your books. You have struck a note which has been beating feebly in my own soul. I feel we have been too tentative and too timid in the name of Christ. You go to the center of the problem, and sweep the universe in His Name. In this you are deeply right.

I shall be writing another book soon, and the note you have struck, will be one of the notes of that book."

In Dr. Jones' last book, Christ of the Round Table, he makes several pages of excerpts from Dr. Riale's books, and stresses with great power the death-conquered life, as the divine design for all.

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part: "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes. "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes. "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work."

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part: ". . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

"OUR BIBLE"

"Thy Word is Truth"

Dr. Alfred Noyes says very solemnly:

"There is an intellectual Bolshevism which is most vicious and is responsible for many faults which are to-day upon us; this type of Bolshevism has been more responsible, both for the Great War and the present peril of civilization, than has as yet been properly realized. I am not speaking merely of moral standards, but of all intellectual and esthetic standards. Also, their downfall has led us to the brink and to greater danger than our practical men seemed to realize, until they were confronted by its incomprehensible spectre which they called Bolshevism."

"Let us not deceive ourselves about the present position. The intellectual world of to-day is almost completely in the dark with regard to fundamental principles of any kind. The nations that won the war were saved from the intellectual ruin of Germany partly because of their instruction, cleaving to certain codes of honor; but in the almost complete egotism of intellectual Europe, how long can we trust to customs and conventions to prevent the process of rapid disintegration?"

Again, let me quote Sir Robert Anderson:

"The abolishment of the Bible on the continent is responsible for this condition of the intellectual world."

FOR ALL THY MISSIONARY SAINTS.

For all Thy saints who labor on, we pray—
Thy patient, toiling saints, who still are here,
Climbing and faltering up life's rugged way.
Forget them not, O Lord, to them be near.

For all Thy saints in far-flung lines, who still Gallantly raise Thy standard 'gainst the foe,
We plead—O show them perfectly Thy will,
Give them the succors of Thy hand to know.

Help them, with lifted heads, to stem the tide
Of hostile forces menacing their lives;
Aid each true saint, on fields of battle wide,
As with the ranks of sin he sternly strives.

These are Thy saints, O God—as truly Thine
As those that rest before the great white throne.
May they, at last, in that same radiance shine;
May they, like them, be numbered as Thine own.

May they, when life's long fight is fully o'er,
Join in that hallelujah chorus grand
Among the victors gathered on heaven's shore,
Who, crowned and robed in white, triumphant stand!

—Elizabeth Strang Baird.

Mr. Philip Mauro, well-known Bible teacher and member of bar of the United States Supreme Court, has made careful study of questions that are confusing many Christians.

Can You Answer These Questions?

1. Was it any part of the work of Christ:
   a. To revive and reconstitute the Jewish Nation?
   b. To re-establish that people in the land that was once theirs?
   c. To revive their system of worship, etc.?
2. When the times of the Gentiles are ended, what then?
   a. Will the "day of the Lord" then come?
3. Will Christ appear suddenly as a thief in the night; as the lightning that lighteth from one part to another under heaven?
   a. Will the door of salvation then be shut?

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Whoever would fully understand the words of Christ, must endeavor to conform his life to the life of Christ."

"I know Thee, who hast kept my path, and made Light for me in the darkness, tempering sorrow
So that it reached me like a solemn joy."

Obedience is the great organ of understanding Christ. When we do His will we shall understand Him, and when we understand Him we shall become like Him.—Exchange.

True freedom knows only good; false freedom knows both good and evil, and believes itself free because it can choose between the two.

He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it. But he that loseth his time for communion with God shall find it in a life of multiplied blessings.

No Christian's walk is so perfect that he needs not every day of his life have a sense of his imperfection and plead, "God be merciful to me, a sinner."

Never fear when the Lord bids you go down to the way "which is desert". The moment you set your foot in the wilderness you are the Lord's guest, and He ever keeps His table right royally furnished.—Guy Mark Pearse.

It is but common sense that a man, longing to be freed from suffering, or made able to bear it, should betake himself to the Power by which he is. Equally is it common sense that, if a man would be delivered from the evil in him, he must himself begin to cast it out, begin himself to disobey it and work righteousness. As much as either is it common sense that a man should look for and expect the help of his Father in the endeavor. Alone he might labor to all eternity and not succeed. He who has not made himself cannot put himself right without him who made him. But his Maker is in him, and is his strength.—George Macdonald.

What can never be accomplished by the most convincing argument or the keenest sense of duty can be wrought by the impulse of love. . . . Christianity obtained her martyrs, and won her victories, not because men reasoned that Christ was the Son of God, or concluded that his law was the most perfect righteousness, but because multitudes of ordinary pople loved Him with all their heart and were prepared to die for Him. —John Watson.

Many of us continually miss our opportunities of gladness and beauty. We nurse our sorrows, and turn our faces away from the comfort of God. We live in the mists and fogs of the valley, when we might be dwelling on the mountain-tops. We neglect our opportunities of receiving divine revealings and then say we cannot believe. Let us open our hearts to the beauty and grace of Christ. Then we shall have no more doubts and fears.—J. R. Miller.

HOME

Flying far above us, the wild geese, each flock in orderly triangular formation, have passed Southward. The other migratory birds, less ostentatious and spectacular, have gone, or are going, quietly away from impending cold and snow and scarcity of food to warmth and sunshine and evergreen foliage.

Most civilized countries are afflicted now with professional professors, more intent on cramming themselves with what they believe to be knowledge and displaying their own stores of acquisition than on the teaching and training of youth. These mistake knowledge for wisdom, suffocate thought in dusty clouds of dry facts and fogs of speculation, chain it to barren theories and useless deductions. We have, also, the shallow and loud scientists, rejecting as unbelievable and impossible all they can not prove by analysis, demonstration, formula, reference and precedent, but eager to proclaim startling discoveries of their own. The past summer we have had in this country three convocations of these. Each poured on us, through newspapers and magazines, multitudes of words which impressed nobody, floods of portentous argument which proved nothing and taught nothing. They delivered opinions on the vital fears and doubts and hopes and problems that beset humanity—opinions turned out by mental machinery driven by force of large vanity and small ambitions. They discussed psychology, archeology, sociology, political economy, geology, behaviorism, ancient lore and modern fads. If they produced one constructive or useful or helpful thought or suggestion memory fails to recall it.

The Christian religion unquestionably is the strongest influence and force in the world today. It lives on faith and belief in what we call the human soul, the impalpable, controlling thing which none ever saw, the birth and departure of which are unknown, which we cannot find in the body, the existence of which we may but feel. The faith and belief realize a Creator of Infinite Power and Justice and Mercy, unseen and unheard, whose habitation none of us knows, whose presence is felt everywhere and always. Whether this religion was regarded as too dangerous or too trivial to be considered in the discussions of the august assemblages or to be taken as a factor in human life, it was ignored, alluded to rarely, or not at all, by the learned professors and weighty scientists.

Let us imagine one of these repositories of knowledge and promulgators of profundities so completely absorbed in idealistic intricacies, philosophical fogs, metaphysics, microscopic and telescopic investigations, as to be uninformed on ordinary incidents of nature—and there may be some such. We may judge of the scorn with which he would reject the assertion that a thing of intelligence obviously so limited as that of a migratory bird can make its way surely through trackless air, in daylight and blackest night, and amid fiercest storm, many hundreds of miles over land and sea direct to the very tree or field it had left months before. He would demonstrate conclusively that he, man of science and learning, could not go from one town to another without the help of somebody or of sign posts and at sea could go nowhere lacking compass and charts. Therefore, it would be a scientific impossibility and absurdity to assume that a homing pigeon, with no instruction and a brain that barely would fill a thimble, could find, unaided, from a strange place and over territory it never had seen a path straight as an arrow's flight across states and cities and rivers to its own loft. The elaborately enlightened explorer of heights would tell us that after careful dissection and inspection he could find no trace of such power of instinct nor evidence of birth or death of it. By such processes of investigation, consideration and deduction the existence of the human soul, a future life and a Creator and Ruling Power are questioned or mocked at.

For these self-worshipping, diligently self-advertising purveyors of machine-made wisdom, Shakespeare exposes himself as an intellectual weakling when he says there are more things in Heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our philosophy. For them Pope stamped himself as a raw and coarse ignoramus when he wrote:

"Blest common sense, which only is the gift of Heaven,
And tho' no science, fairly worth the seven."

In which there is vast, deep, meaning. Common sense, indeed, is the beneficent gift of Heaven to the common people—the great mass of us who must earn our livings by ordinary work amid and with ordinary and real things, who make and rule countries and nations, achieve the big practical results in carrying humanity onward, increasing, generation after generation, its opportunities for happiness, raising its standards, promoting its brotherhood. It is this common sense that may be defined as the capacity for directing human intelligence by known and realized facts.

This kind of sense accepts as facts the existence of souls within us, of an Almighty and All Merciful Creating Power. We know that we hope and love and fear. We are proud of the kinship with divinity that inspires us to overcome fear with noble emotions and purposes. We are not so blinded by cheap vanity or erudition or imagined intellectual eminence that we refuse to confess our weakness and limitations or to understand that much is hidden from us by Eternal Wisdom. We realize our own living, potent impulses and aspirations for higher, purer, better and sweeter life than we may know here. The professors and scientists, assuming to soar in regions beyond our reach, conclude that there is nothing beyond or above the material, the flesh, with its passions and appetites, the grossness of this world. We with but the common sense know that this life is not worth the living if it gives and promises us no more than the little that the most of us can do or be and taste in it. Applying that sense, we understand and strive to obey the faith calling us ever onward, surely as the instinct of the bird calls its homeward. That faith leads and guides us through struggle and toil and battle, through darkness and deep waters and fiery trials, toward light and home. It gives us assurance too strong to be shaken by any laborious logic, too clear to be beclouded by any mists of fallacy. It tells us that the redeemed soul, released from the body, shall rise surely as the free bird rises, shall fly beyond moor and fen and crag and torrent through the illimitable, immeasurable, undiscovered mysteries of space, past sun and moon and stars, to the supreme beauty, the everlasting peace and rest and happiness, of an everlasting home.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

ESTABLISHED AS THE STATE CHURCH.

Obviously the Virginia colony included a large proportion of really devout and earnest members of the Church of England before women began to come over. In 1616 this colony, then nine years old, contained five ordained clergymen of the Church, including Mr. Whittaker, who was the first volunteer missionary to the Indians and tireless and dauntless worker for the spiritual and moral welfare of his fellow colonists. By 1619 the barn used for a church at Jamestown had been so far improved and furnished that it was used as the meeting place for the House of Burgesses, the first meeting of that memorable legislative body being opened with the Prayers of the Church by the Rev. Mr. Burke. One of the first acts established the Church of England as the official Church and provided for the support of the clergy and the building of churches and rectories at public cost and for division of the colony into parishes as the political units. The population then was estimated at from six hundred to one thoustant accessions from England and Scotland. By 1622 the population had increased to 2,000, despite the fearful ravages among the newcomers of malarial fever. In 1622 a cunningly planned uprising and massacre by Indians cost four hundred white lives and caused demoralization and distress through all Virginia, but did not seriously retard immigration. In 1628 Lord Baltimore arrived with forty men, having abandoned an attempt to colonize in Newfoundland, and was given the cold shoulder promptly and practically required to move on to what became Maryland.

The quarrels and intrigues of the English court under James I. and Charles I. made havoc with the Church in Virginia. Piteous and constant appeals for clergymen were disregarded or answered by the sending of men who had failed at home. When Archbishop Laud became the ruling ecclesiastical and political power he threatened to send a bishop to abolish the religion of the Puritans, but gave no attention to the needs of the Church in Virginia. The secular authorities there were compelled to assume control of the clergy and enacted laws directing the number of services they should conduct and sermons they should preach in a month and otherwise regulating their conduct. This regulation was supplemented by the vestries of the parishes, most of whom elected the rectors for term of one year, giving vestries and parishioners direct control not only of management of the business of the Church but of the tenure of the rectors.

BEGGED SPIRITUAL HELP OF PURITANS.

By 1642, when the colony was spreading and gaining rapidly, religious conditions had become so bad that seventy-one men, all of the Church of England, petitioned the general court of Massachusetts to send three ministers, that the Virginia people might be "privileged with the preaching and ordinances of Jesus Christ". In response to this call, three Congregationalist ministers were sent from Massachusetts to Virginia. This was the year of the battle of Edgehill and the beginning of the overthrow of King Charles. Sir Walter Scott probably studied the intimate life of this period more closely than any other writer. In one of his novels he gives the picture of a profane, drunken, roystering Cavalier who fought a desperate duel to avenge an affront to a clergyman. The same inherited theoretical loyalty to the Church and practical repudiation of its teachings seems to have prevailed in Virginia. The house of Burgesses enacted laws to forbid the public preaching of the Puritans as promptly as fourteen years before it had excluded the Roman Catholics. The three ministers conducted services and preached in private houses and in that were not molested.

Then came the revolution in England, the refusal of the Virginians to acknowledge the government there of Cromwell and preparations for armed resistance, leading to compromise under the terms of which the Church of England was tolerated in the colony and by the practical working of which the Church was undisturbed through the fifteen years of the Commonwealth, although a Commonwealth governor had succeeded Sir William Berkeley. There was a large influx of Cavaliers, Royalists and Churchmen and in 1661, after the restoration, the population was estimated at 30,000 and the settlements had spread far up the rivers and along the coasts of sea and bay. A generation had grown up in the colony and it contained natives fifty years old. Yet not one Virginian had taken orders. What clergy remained were English or Scotch, the latter very few, and some of them were nominally in charge of parishes seventy miles long by forty wide. A number of parishes depended on chosen lay readers. Notwithstanding neglect by the authorities of the Church at home, the fifteen years of hostility by the home government and the unworthiness of some of the clergy, the great body of the people stood staunchly to the Church and kept it alive.

SLOW GROWTH IN OTHER COLONIES.

In the adjoining colony of Maryland the Church from 1632, when the first faint traces of it appeared in the records, held feeble and intermittent existence. From that year it is mentioned occasionally and incidentally, not as a living or considerable force. Religious tolerance there varied with political and commercial conditions on both sides of the ocean. Regardless of the laws, however, the people of varying faiths lived together peacefully. Quakers, Puritans and Roman Catholics expelled from Virginia perhaps united in dislike of the Church of England if in nothing else, having common cause of offense against it. In 1676 Maryland with population of 20,000 and twelve counties had four clergymen of the Church, according to a report to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Lord Baltimore, replying to an appeal from the Archbishop, said all religions were tolerated under his government and that the four clergymen had plantations which supported them comfortably. After the collapse of Lord Baltimore before the "Protestant rebellion" of 1688, when the Church of England became the official Church, the number of clergymen was reported as varying from three to sixteen.

Official sanction and support of the Church of England in New York began in 1663, when the Dutch surrendered to the English and chaplains of the English army read services at the fort at New York City. It was thirty years later that the government provided for the building of Trinity Church, first Church of England place of worship in the colony, except the chapel at the fort. The Rev. Mr. Vesey, whose name is borne by a street near the present church, was sent to England and ordained there as the first rector.

In Pennsylvania congregations and clergy of the Church of England were few, scattered and obscure until 1695, when Christ Church, Philadelphia, was built and slow growth began. In North Carolina the Church was formally taken as part of the government in 1702, in face of very energetic and passionate opposition, and the first building for its worship was erected. In New Jersey the Church was officially recognized and nominally organized at Perth Amboy in 1698, but it lingered long between life and death. In Delaware there is barely a trace of Church life until 1703. In Rhode Island an occasional service and sermon at Providence by the Rev. William Blackstone—who had left Boston in 1635 and become a somewhat whimsical recluse—was the only evidence of the existence there of a Church of England through more than fifty years. In Connecticut the Church practically was banned by law and public sentiment, the Congregationalists being supreme. In Massachusetts conditions were likewise. Actual or ostensible members of the Church of England failing to attend Congregational services were fined. It was not until 1677 that the Book of Common Prayer was allowed to be used in Massachusetts. Under James II. the Old South Meeting House was seized for use of the Church of England, but on the accession of William and Mary and a revolution in the colony, the Meeting House was restored to its rightful owners and, in 1694, there was but one Church of England edifice in this colony, in Boston and without pews.

In South Carolina the first Church of England church was built of black cypress on the site now occupied by St. Michael's, Charleston, and services were conducted there regularly by an ordained clergyman.

From this summary it is seen that at the end of the first century of English occupation the English Church was the official, established Church, dominant in Virginia, strong in Maryland, just beginning its life in the Carolinas, barely gasping in New England, gathering a little strength in the middle colonies. Very likely the Church was much more hurt than helped by its official connection and the injury increased as feeling against Great Britain grew. At the beginning of the Revolutionary War there were but eighty ordained clergymen of the Church in all the populous and prosperous territory North of Maryland and of these all except the rectors in New York City, Philadelphia, Newport and Boston were supported chiefly by the English Society for Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, which under the Hanoverian rulers had roused to vigorous and useful life.

The North American colonies were under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Bishop of London. Efforts to obtain a bishop for this country, continued more than a century, continued to fail, meeting fierce opposition on both sides. English prelates resented the suggestion of an American Church independent of themselves and the great majority in this country outside the Church objected strenuously to a bishop here.

NUMBERS.

Purpose.

The Book of Numbers was written for our admonition to teach us God's purpose and ways with us in the place of trial (1 Cor. 10:1-13; 1 Peter 1:7).

I. Ch. 1 to Ch. 10:10. God has prepared us for wilderness warfare by giving us full assurance as to our relation to Him, and thus to every member of the body of Christ, so that without hesitation we can take our place with Christ as our Standard Bearer (Rom. 8:16; Eph. 2:8, 9; 1 John 5:13; 1 Cor. 12:12-31; Eph. 4:11-16; 6:10-18; Rom. 8:37-39; 2 Cor. 2:14; Heb. 2:10).

In and through Christ God has separated us unto and opened the way for us to come near to Him in priestly worship, in order to obtain help in time of need (1 Peter 2:5, 9; Heb. 4:14-16; 10:19-22).

As kings, when we present the princely offering of our bodies, holy and acceptable unto the Lord, then He uses us like the Levites, in a life of service which praises His name (Rev. 1:5, 6; Rom. 12:1, 2; 1 Chron. 25:1-7; 2 Chron. 20:21; Heb. 13:15; Rev. 5:8, 9; John 15:8).

Remembering what Christ did for us on the cross, as the Passover Lamb, we press on toward the realization of God's blessings in Christ, guided by the Holy Spirit, as figured by the cloud, and by the Old and New Testaments, the antitype of the two silver trumpets, which give no uncertain sound (1 Cor. 5:7, 8; Ex. 12:1-13; Phil. 3:14; Eph. 1:3-14; John 16:13-15; Rom. 8:14; 1 Cor. 14:8; 2 Tim. 3:16, 17).

II. Ch. 10:11 to Ch. 12. The journey of faith through the place of trial into the place of blessing would be very short if taken by God's help in His way, but unbelief in His promises lengthens the journey, until it is crucified and buried (Heb. 12:1, 2).

Christ, as the Ark, has gone before us three days' journey to search out a resting place. Three days from Calvary, where the claims of Sinai were satisfied, raised Him, and us in Him, to the place of rest (Rom. 6:6, 11; Eph. 2:5, 6; Heb. 4:9, 10).

Stubborn and blind unbelief murmurs at the difficult task and at God's way of choosing weak vessels through which to do His service. Rewards are lost, the sin of our murmuring hearts breaks out like leprosy, and must be judged before we can move on toward the place of blessing (1 Cor. 10:10; Heb. 3:7-19; Rev. 3:11; 1 Cor. 1:26-29; 2 Cor. 4:7; John 21:21, 22).

III. Ch. 13 to Ch. 20:13. Kadesh-barnea to Kadesh-barnea, thirty-one burial grounds filled during thirty-eight years with the unbelieving ones of Israel. Ah, how these things tell us of God's ways in judging and putting to death the unbelief of our hearts which is revealed in the thirty-one personal pronouns of Rom. 7:7-24.

God permits us in unbelief to spy out the land by trying to do His service in the energy of the flesh, with a false report to discourage others as the result.

How wonderful is His grace which freely, for Christ's sake forgives the sins of ignorance and presumption, gives us a ribband of blue, an experience to always remind us of His Word as a lamp unto our feet (1 John 1:9; Rom. 3:24; Eph. 4:32; Ps. 119:105; Heb. 12:5-13; Ps. 119:67).

Ambition to have place and power not given of Him is counted rebellion and frustrates the fulfillment of His purpose for service in the life of His child, but grace has provided an ever-living High Priest to save us unto the uttermost, in spite of the unbelief that hinders our enjoying and witnessing of His blessings now (John 8:29; Ps. 40:8; Rom. 14:23; Heb. 7:25; 1 John 2:28).

IV. Ch. 20:14 to Ch. 25. When unbelief is buried and faith begins to be manifest, we may move on toward the place of blessing. Even then the way is narrow and hard, causing us to murmur and be bitten by the fiery "doubts" of the evil one, but there is healing and victory in a look at Heb. 2:14 (Matt. 7:13, 14; Eph. 6:16).

Satan cannot curse us because God has blessed us in Christ, but by his wiles he may lead us in ways that seem good to us, the end of which is death (Eph. 1:3; Heb. 6:14-18; Prov. 16:25).

V. Chs. 26-36. Reassured by His Grace and faithful ness, on the basis of the cross of Christ, we learn to know victory over the Midianites, the lusts of the flesh, and looking over the tombstones which mark our acts of unbelief, we flee for refuge into the presence of our Father in the most holy place (1 Peter 2:24; 2 Cor. 5:7; 1 Peter 2:11; Heb. 6:17-20).

THE GENERAL CONVENTION DAY BY DAY

By Alfred B. Williams

SIXTH DAY—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16.

THIS Convention may do nothing more than start the rank and file of the Episcopal Church to definite thinking along broadly progressive lines, or it may begin action which will make an epoch in the history of Christianity. Monday came the suggestion of a working co-partnership of the Church and the nearly four million members of the labor unions, becoming recognized now as among the great conservative and stabilizing forces of the country. Apparently it had the unanimous and enthusiastic support of both houses. The fact that a very large proportion of the Episcopalians are of the employing and capitalistic class gives this manifestation tremendous significance. Tuesday the House of Bishops by overwhelming majority voted to invite chosen representatives of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches to conference with Episcopalians with the avowed purpose of considering organic union of the three. The language of the resolution invites the two other Churches to confer, through commissions, "to consider matters of Christian morality".

Bishop Brent, of Western New York, urged in an impassioned speech, his voice tremulous with emotion, "That we hold out the olive branch to our great sister churches". By the blunders and errors of the Church of England the many thousands of devout Methodists, eager to be loyal to it, had been driven from it a century and a half ago, he said. The Church of England had not repented, but the time had come for the Episcopal Church in this country to "get down to earth" and do all it can to repair the old wrong. The resolutions include all the important branches of the other two denominations.

Surprising opposition developed to the introduction in the Book of Common Prayer of the special Collect for Independence Day and it was accepted in the House of Bishops by sixty-eight votes, just one more than the required two-thirds. Speeches for and against were fiery. Opponents contended that it tended to keep alive old national animosities and was an unnecessary offense to the British people and that it glorified war. Bishop Gailor said he did not like to repeat a prayer of thanksgiving for separation from the English-speaking people. His study of conditions attending the Revolution, made him very doubtful which side he would have taken if he had been alive then. His ancestors had fought in the war—

"On which side?" challenged the voice of a brother bishop.

"That question is brighter than it is proper," responded Bishop Gailor, tartly. "They fought on the American side."

The House of Bishops voted to create the new Diocese of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, comprising Northwest Wisconsin. A somewhat unusual incident of this change is the voluntary surrender by the Dioceses of Milwaukee and Fond du Lac of certain of their parishes for the formation of the new diocese.

With expressions of much regret resignations were received and accepted from Bishops Brewster, Connecticut; Burton, Lexington; Nelson, Albany, and Kinsolving, Southern Brazil.

The House of Bishop took a recess to visit the White House and be photographed in a body with President Coolidge, although Bishop Brewster made an energetic protest against the interruption as a waste of time.

News was received that St. Paul's Church, Nanking, China, built fifteen years ago by the Diocese of Washington, had been returned to the mission by the revolutionists.

Letters of greeting from the Federal Council of Churches in America, expressed hope for closer relations with the Episcopal Church.

An attempt to reopen the question of permitting the dipping of the bread in the wine at administration of the Holy Communion was defeated by decisive vote of the House of Bishops and finally disposed of for this session.

In course of discussion it was developed incidentally that the proposition for removal from the Book of Common Prayer of the Thirty-nine Articles virtually has been determined adversely by informal agreement between the two houses and will not be seriously pressed.

The House of Bishops concurred in the Collects, Epistles and Gospels formerly agreed upon in the burial service.

Tuesday evening Bishop William Fraser McDowell, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, told the newspapers that the Convention of his Church, at Kansas City in May, had been notified of the probability of a movement for union—or reunion—of Methodists and Episcopalians at the present Convention in Washington and had anticipated it by appointing a special commission of thirty-seven on Church unity. The bishop has called this commission to meet for organization at Philadelphia November 21. One group of seven members of the commission will be assigned to consult with the Episcopalians, whose commission will consist of three each, bishops, priests and laymen.

The House of Deputies ratified the action of the House of Bishops providing a new rubric for the visitation of the sick. It was opposed with vigor as too near an approach to the Roman Catholic Extreme Unction, but was accepted by a substantial majority. The rubric reads:

"When any sick person shall in humble faith desire the ministry of healing through anointing or laying on of hands, the minister may use such portion of the foregoing office as he shall think fit and the following forms:

"I anoint thee with oil (lay my hand upon thee) in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, beseeching the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all pain and sickness of body being put to flight, the blessing of health may be restored to thee. Amen."

One of the not strictly official acts of the House of Bishops was to send a unanimous message of affection, sympathy and prayer to Bishop LaMothe, of Honolulu, taken suddenly and seriously ill at Baltimore while on his way to the Convention. He formerly was rector of a Baltimore parish.

SEVENTH DAY—WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17.

Wednesday's chief event was one of general interest and importance ,being the presentation of a remarkable report from the joint commission of the two houses on marriage and divorce and the position of the Church on divorces. A multitude of rumors regarding this report has been in circulation. Sensational and vulgar newspapers have looked for it eagerly and printed all kinds of predictions regarding it, all of which are proved to be false.

The gist of the report, presented by Bishop Page, of Michigan, and a document of eighty-seven pages, is that before the Church can act intelligently and for the best interests of Christianity and morality and the betterment of the race on the question whether its rigid rules should be retained or modified, it must study and understand more clearly the conditions as they are and the changes brought by modern life. A ten years' study by cooperating social agencies, with which the Church shall work, is recommended. Definite action for the present suggested is more earnest instruction on the sanctity and responsibilities of marriage, for both sexes, from the pulpits and in the schools.

It is pointed out that divorce conditions even in Roman Catholic countries are deplorable. Husbands and wives everywhere find separations by the easy method, known as "poor folks' divorce", of deserting their families and removing to distant places. The divorce rate is increasing everywhere in the world and no general reason has been found. It has been ascertained, however, by enquiry of eight hundred Episcopalian clergymen and a like number of Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational clergy, that among couples regularly attending services there practically had been no divorces. From this conclusion was drawn that the great majority of persons obtaining divorces are outside Church membership and indifferent to moral and religious obligations. Most clergymen, of all the denominations consulted, agreed that they are consulted rarely on serious domestic affairs likely to lead to separation or divorce, most of those considering such matters being outside the churches.

Indications are that the report will be received and action taken for deeper and further study of the divorce subject. While the question was being considered, however, the bishops were attacked by the Association for the Sanctity of Marriage, which demands absolute abrogation of all recognition of divorce on any ground by the Church and which is said to have the backing of a number of influential Churchmen. This organization demands restoration of the marriage laws "as taught by our Lord". This law was observed, the petition of the Association say, until 1868, in which "fatal year" the General Convention of the Church, "forgetful of its pledge in 1789 of adherence to the 'essential doctrine and principles' of the Mother Church, and of the requirement of its own constitution, in a few hours' debate, hastily, ignorantly and illegally adopted the proviso of our present canon, which allows, under certain conditions, remarriage after divorce during the life of the guilty party".

The House of Bishop received and referred a petition from the Daughters of the King beseeching more evangelism and greater emphasis on the necessity of the Sacraments.

A report from the Rev. Robert Patton, Director of the Institute for Negroes, showed that more than $500,000 has been spent by the Church for the Institute in the last three years.

In discussion of the divorce report in House of Bishops, Bishop Freeman, Washington, suggested that the British custom of publishing banns in advance might tend to check hasty marriage. Another suggestion was a solemn ceremony of betrothal. The subject was dropped, however, and the Commission instructed to continue study of conditions and report to next Convention, being allowed fifty thousand dollars for expenses.

Bishop Burleson, South Dakota, was elected Assessor of the House of Bishops to succeed Bishop Brown of Virginia. Bishop Anderson, of Chicago, was elected Vice-Chairman of the House. Bishop Reifsnider, of North Tokyo, Japan, resigned. The Rev. Norman Binsted, Treasurer of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, formerly of Washington, will succeed him.

Bishop Freeman offered resolution for a memorial in the Washington Cathedral to Bishop Clagett, first Bishop of Maryland and first Bishop consecrated in America. He also asked for a special committee to cooperate in restoration of Wakefield, birthplace of Washington, work to be completed by 1932.

The House of Deputies received report of the Bishop Brown heretic trial, New Orleans 1925, showing that it cost over $18,000.

The House decided to go in a body to lay a wreath on the grave of the Unknown Soldier. Both Houses adjourned at 4:30 to attend an open-air reception by Bishop and Mrs. Freeman in the Bishop's Garden.

Mt. St. Alban's mass meeting Tuesday night at Continental Memorial Hall, was attended by most of the members of General Convention, and was addressed by William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, and Spencer Miller, Jr., social investigator of General Convention.

The House of Deputies unanimously adopted resolutions commending the Kellogg Peace Treaty.

EIGHTH DAY—THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18.

Complying with informal general agreement, the House of Bishops this day, by unanimous vote, indefinitely postponed action on the resolutions of the Convention of 1925, ordering removal of the Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer. These resolutions, under the constitution of the Church, could not be effective until sanctioned at a second General Convention. They were adopted three years ago by large majorities and with little debate and this year practically rescinded unanimously and with no debate. This result is variously explained. Some regard it as surrender by the High Church element in face of a ground swell of revolt by the mass of Church membership. Others view it as wise avoidance of strife over a matter not of sufficient importance to quarrel over, yet others as kindly deference to the prejudices and attachments of those who cling to tradition. The secular newspapers interpret the significance according to the sources from which the reporters gather their information.

The Bishops received with almost riotous enthusiasm a resolution offered by Bishop Freeman, of Washington, repudiating connection with the Church Temperance Society, an old organization with headquarters in New York, with which many clergymen and laymen of the Church are connected and which has consistently opposed prohibition. It attained prominence recently by publishing results of a poll taken among the Episcopal clergy of the country showing a large proportion favoring repeal or modification of the prohibition law as it is. Bishop Freeman's resolution indicates no opinion on prohibition and no criticism of the society, but merely declares that the organization has no official connection with the Church and no official sanction. Obviously this expresses practically the unanimous judgment of the bishops. Under the rules the resolution went to the Social Service Committee.

In both houses resolutions offered and signed by 1,050 communicants in fifty dioceses declaring participation by the Church in politics were presented. These declare: "It is the sense of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church that the accepted principle of the separation of Church and State should be maintained and that this Church, while creating and upholding the highest moral standards through its clergy and laity, should not as a corporate body enter into the political arena to promote by legislative actions, specific economic or partisan measures."

They endorse also the "wise provision of the Constitution and traditions of the United States" that from the first have divorced religion from politics. The House of Deputies tabled the resolutions, apparently influenced by a speech of the Rev. Henry Hobson, Worcester, Mass., saying the Episcopal Church seemed in little danger of going into politics and that the proposed declaration might be taken as attempt to rebuke some other religious denominations and a discourtesy and unnecessary offense to them. In the House of Bishops the resolutions were referred to the Social Service Committee, after somewhat animated discussion, during which it developed that the movement had come from an organization against introduction of socialism in the Church. Bishop Parsons, of California, President of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, said the effect of the resolutions would be to curb free speech among the clergy "on industrial, social and economic matter". In this connection W. F. Robertson, lay delegate from South Carolina, evidently deeply stirred and persisting in speaking, in the House of Deputies, asserted that "a streak of red" was creeping into the Convention. He held up a blue sheet of printed matter which he said was pacifist and socialist propaganda advertising a peace meeting under auspices of the Church League for Industrial Democracy at the rooms of the Young Woman's Christian Association, with Jane Addams, Bishop Parsons and John Navin Sayre the speakers, and William F. Cochran, multi-millionaire Socialist, presiding. A number of deputies clamored for more discussion and information on this matter, but others said the Church was not involved in it and the regular order of business was resumed.

The House of Bishops designated November 18 next as Porto Rico-South Florida rebuilding day in all Episcopal churches, when offerings will be applied for rebuilding churches costing $200,000, destroyed in the hurricane of last month in the West Indies and others costing $84,000 destroyed by the same calamity in Florida.

Bishops Fiske, Central New York; Parsons, California, and Stearly, Newark, were announced as the commissioners for the bishops to confer with the commissions from the Northern and Southern Methodist and Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches, the consultation the preliminary step toward effort for uniting the three denominations.

The House of Deputies, after earnest discussion, adopted an amendment to the canons providing for physical, mental and nervous examination of deacons three months before ordination as priests. It was objected that such examination might have excluded St. Paul from the ministry, but the rule was declared to have been made necessary by the large number of men becoming invalids soon after ordination.

The House of Deputies, in executive session, confirmed the election of the Rev. Albert S. Thomas, rector of St. Michael's Church, Charleston, as Bishop of South Carolina, and adopted the report of the joint commission on marriage and divorce, recommending further study of the subject, already accepted by the upper house.

Lay Deputy W. B. Overson, of North Dakota, introduced a resolution to ask enactment of State and Federal laws forbidding marriage of physical and mental defectives, which was referred.

Thursday night a banquet to start the drive for $2,600,000 for the Church International Hospital at Tokyo, Japan, was given at the Mayflower Hotel and a mass meeting on domestic missions was held at D. A. R. Hall. Bishop Sanford presided at the meeting and among the speakers were Bishops Campbell of Liberia and Nichols of Kyoto. At the banquet Gen. J. J. Pershing vigorously supported the proposed drive. Charles Warren Beecher, former ambassador to Japan, took occasion to warn against trouble between the two countries because of exclusion from the United States of Japanese on racial grounds. Consul General Hiroshi Saito expressed belief and hope that the exclusion would be adjusted to the honor and satisfaction of both nations.

Another mass meeting of Thursday night was that of the Society of the Nazarene, at Trinity Diocesan Church. A startling incident of this, much featured by some daily newspapers, was the prediction of former Bishop Thomas, of Wyoming, that Christian healing, for which the society is organized, presently may reach the point where the dead may be recalled to life. He contended that the words of Christ, "Thy faith hath made thee whole", indicated that the healing power was in the individual rather than in an outside source. He thought the time for such achievement far in the future, but could not believe it always would be an impossibility. Dr. Sinclair Bowen, practicing physician of Washington and director of the society, urged more intimate contacts of clergy and doctors and especially more of the old-time intimacy of clergymen in the homes of the people. He also urged action by the Church to restore the old practice of chaperons for assemblages of young people. This meeting was preceded by a demonstration of healing at Trinity Church, conducted by the Rev. Fathers Bell and Colwell, described as very simple, dignified and beautiful. A number of persons submitting to the treatment asserted that they had been cured of partial blindness and deafness. Father Bell told reporters afterwards that much of the healing really was relief of hysteria and cure, by faith and effort and calming influences, of mental and nervous and psychological maladies, such as ill-temper, excessive nervousness and morbid hates and fears.

NINTH DAY—FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19.

In executive session at the Church of the Epiphany the House of Bishops elected four missionary bishops—William Merrick Thomas, Southern Brazil, advanced from suffragan bishop of the diocese; Norman S. Binstead, Bishop of Tokhu District, Japan; Frederick Deane Goodwin (who has since declined the election), Bishop of Nevada, and George H. Thomas, Bishop of Wyoming.

Dr. Goodwin is rector of St. John's Church, Warsaw, Virginia. Dr. Thomas is a native of St. Mary's County, Maryland, a brother of Tazewell Thomas and Miss Louise Ogle Thomas, of Baltimore. Dr. Binstead is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Binstead, of Washington City, and now is rector of the Episcopal Cathedral at Tokyo, Japan. Dr. George H. Thomas is rector of St. Paul's Parish, Chicago. There was no contest for the bishopric of Southern Brazil. For the other three places nineteen clergymen were nominated, and it is reported that forty were "mentioned". The advancement of Dr. W. M. Thomas was understood far in advance of the Convention. He is a graduate of the University of Virginia, 1901, and the Virginia Theological Seminary, 1904. He succeeds Bishop Lucian Lee Kinsolving resigned because of ill health, who is the brother of the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of Old St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, and member of a family long and honorably identified with the Episcopal ministry.

Denver, Colorado, was chosen by the House of Bishops as the next place for the meeting of the Triennial Convention.

It was announced in both Houses that the new Book of Common Prayer will be ready for distribution early in 1929. It will not be copyrighted by the Church.

The House of Deputies concurred with the bishops in an amendment to the Constitution giving clerical and lay delegates equal rights with the bishops in election of the Presiding Bishop of the Church. This change goes over to the next Convention for confirmation. The House confirmed the report of the commission of the lectionary providing a new table of Scripture lessons for morning and evening service. It approved a resolution by Arthur S. Browne, of Washington, providing for a joint commission to investigate three Negro theological schools—the King School of Washington, now dormant; Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, and St. Augustine's School at Raleigh, N. C. The commission will include representatives from the American Church Institute for Negroes and from each of the three schools.

The bishops voted favorably on a resolution for abbreviated Prayer Books for use in missions and where the people are unfamiliar with the service. They also reached and concurred in the last item in the fifth report of the Commission on Revision and Enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer. This provides for a liturgical commission of eight bishops, eight presbyters and eight laymen to consider such matters as are not fully determined by the Convention. It also provides for discharge of the joint commission on the Prayer Book. Bishop Lawrence, Massachusetts, and Brent, Western New York, presented a joint letter to the two Houses regarding the testimonial to be presented the Archbishop of Canterbury on his retirement from office. A purse is to be made up by the American Church and presented to the Archbishop for his personal use. This already amounts to over $5,000, and is likely to be increased largely.

Bishop Hall, of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee on Canons, reported with a printed document of twenty-seven pages urging provision for a court of appeals for accused priests or deacons. He urged that it was unjust and illogical for three bishops to have the power to depose a clergyman, especially on any question of doctrine, faith or worship. Referred.

One of the notable speeches attending the general amity gesture of retention of the Thirty-nine Articles was by Rosewell Page, of Virginia, classed as a Broad Churchman. He followed several High Churchmen, including Dr. Morehouse, of Milwaukee, editor of The Living Church. "Nothing this Convention has done, or any other Convention ever will do, will add as much to the satisfaction and peace of our beloved Church," said Mr. Page.

A very interesting and warm debate developed in the House of Deputies in the afternoon, George W. Wickersham, former United States Attorney General, and former Senator Pepper, of Pennsylvania, the opposing participants. The question was on a resolution to have the Episcopal Commission of Evangelism cooperate with a Commission of the Federal Council of Churches. Mr. Wickersham urged that the Church should be a constituent member of the Federal Council. Mr. Pepper opposed any affiliation of the Church with that body, asserting that the latter was assuming too much authority to speak for all the Protestant churches. Mr. Wickersham lost his temper and taunted the former senator with being incited by prejudices against the Council acquired in his political experience. The discussion took a wide range and the whole question of evangelistic work and methods was brought in. The debate resulted in a compromise permitting limited cooperation by the Church with the Council.

A resolution to put the Episcopal Church on record against capital punishment was tabled by a shout of disapproval, following murmurs which greeted its reading by its sponsor, a Pennsylvania deputy.

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collated by the Late John L. Williams

MORNING IV.

O LORD GOD, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our Law-giver and Governor and King; We pray Thee, Accept our thanks for Thy watchful care and tender mercy during the past night. Thou art He that didst form us in our mother's womb, and by Thee we have been holden up ever since we were born. Let Thy loving kindness always preserve us. Sustain us by Thy good Spirit, and guide us by Thy counsel. We beseech Thee search and prove the ground of our hearts. Sanctify us wholly. And keep us in the ways of Thy laws, and in the works of Thy commandments. Cleanse us from all impurity. Quicken us in Thy righteousness, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy Holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Deliver us, we pray Thee, O Father, from all fears and doubts, and vain regrets; And give us perfect confidence in Thy power and wisdom and ever watchful love.

Put away from us all malice and guile and hypocrisy and envy and jealousy. Deliver us from all prejudice, injustice and unkindness. Make us honest and just, sincere and faithful: heartily to rejoice in every one's welfare, and tenderly to sympathize with all who are in trouble.

Pity our weakness and helplessness; Deliver us from bad habits and evil influences and from the burdens of past offences; Save us from the consequences of our sin and folly for Christ's sake.

We humbly pray Thee, help our poor efforts to do Thy will. Deliver us from ambition and vainglory; from luxuriousness and pride, from intemperance and self-indulgence, and from foolish and hurtful lusts and desires.

Put it into our hearts to approve things that are excellent, to covet earnestly the best gifts, and study to lead pure and blameless and useful lives to Thy honor and glory.

Give us seeing eyes and hearing ears, and wise and thoughtful hearts. Grant us Thy Light and Truth and Heavenly comfort abundantly. Fill our hearts with Thy love. Let us seek all our wealth and honor and happiness in Thy favor and approval, and fear our misery only in Thy displeasure. Let it be the joy of our hearts to understand and know Thee, who exercisest loving kindness and righteousness and judgment in the earth and let us wait on Thee.

Let us not faint in the day of adversity. Let us never be put to confusion nor made a reproach to the foolish. Let none that love Thy name be ashamed for our sake. Be Thou our constant worship: our sun and shield: our ever present refuge and ready deliverer. Let us seek Thy face in humble and prayerful service, and let all our walk and conversation bespeak Thy presence and guidance and control.

Have pity on all who are in trouble, and comfort and relieve them. Strengthen the hearts and hands of our rulers and magistrates, that they may execute justice and maintain truth. Bless Thy ministers and servants everywhere. Incline the hearts of good and faithful men to labor for Thee and hasten the coming of Thy kingdom.

We ask all for Jesus Christ's sake.

Help For Work Among the Jews

Mr. B. A. M. Shapiro, who, on Monday, October 15, appeared in a preliminary hearing before about fifty members of the House of Bishops in the General Convention, was introduced by Bishop Manning, of New York. Among the bishops rising to testify of Mr. Shapiro's work on the Christianizing of the Jew in the United States were Bishops Rhinelander, Slattery, Tucker, Remington and Darlington. So impressed were the fifty bishops by Mr. Shapiro's appeal for funds to go forward with his mission that he was invited to address the entire House of Bishops the following day, Tuesday.

On both occasions Mr. Shapiro, a Jew who had embraced Christianity twenty years ago, gave detailed accounts of what he had been able to accomplish in bringing Jewry to an acknowledgment of the Christ. Questions from the bishops elicited the answer that there were more Jews in one ward of the City of New York than in the whole of Jerusalem and that many of them were fast turning to other religions and especially to Christian Science. Several of the bishops suggested that as sums of money for missionary work were being sent directly to Jerusalem, a part of this might well be applied to the missionary work among the Jews in the United States and especially in New York. The bishops seemed much interested and affected by the statement that more Jews commit suicide today than members of any other race or religion. After some discussion it was unanimously voted that Mr. Shapiro should receive $5,000 a year from the Good Friday offerings.

Mr. Shapiro is the translator of the well-known book, "The Shepherd Prince", and although he knew no English until less than twenty years ago, this book is now used in many public schools as example of pure English. Mr. Shapiro is rather well known to the readers of The Southern Churchman by his excellent articles appearing at intervals in this publication as well as by his pulpit appearances in many Southern churches.

Book Reviews

REINSPECTING VICTORIAN RELIGION: By Dr. Gaius Glenn Atkins. Cloth. Pp. 151. Price, $1.75. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City.

The supercilious attitude of the present generation to the Victorian age is a grief to those of us who passed through many of its most significant years. It was an era of faith, unquestioning; the inroads of an almost impudent psychological arrogance had not been then dreamed of. Things were taken for granted that are now taboo. Culture was of the gentle kind; manners becoming and courtly; learning refined and leisurely; religion whole-hearted. Self-expression, the slogan of our day, could not have been expected, when every instinct of the highest minds led to grace of manners and the commendable self-effacement, which was the quintessence of good breeding. Would that we might have it back! And no doubt we shall, when this giddy, self-opinionated generation has exhausted itself in the novelty of its present pursuits.

Our author with true artistic grace, chooses the poetical of the Victorian age as the basis of his plea for the recognition of its value and praiseworthiness. Browning and Tennyson, who exerted such influence in that period of our history, are freely analyzed in the pursuit of the religious spirit then dominant. The author has found the best in these men to vindicate the contention that the religion of that day was sincere and devout. We drag poor Queen Victoria into our contemptuous estimate of her reign, as to manners and faith; we have linked her name with the cynicism which marks our disdain. But would that the spirit in her heart were ours in all earnestness. When once discussing the coming of our Lord, she said: "I wish I might be here when He comes; that I might lay my crown at His feet."

We thank Dr. Atkins for this effort to restore the spirit of that generation. He has done his work with delicacy and seriousness, withal, infusing a method which holds the reader in deep interest from start to finish.

VOICES OF ASSURANCE: By Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D. Morehouse Publishing Company.

This is a volume of the Washington Cathedral Series prepared by the College of Preachers at Washington, D. C., to assist the spoken word by means of the printed word. This book contains brief messages from the Bishop of Washington that are intended to give guidance and encouragement to those perplexed by the unrest of the world. There is no uncertain sound from its pages. Almost every message has its central thought related directly to the Master, or to some central theme of the religious life.

Bishop LeMothe Ill in Baltimore

It is a great distress to many people that the Rt. Rev. John D. LaMothe, D. D., Bishop of Honolulu, has been too ill to attend the General Convention.

Bishop LaMothe had planned to leave Honolulu for the United States last June. He was greatly in need of relief from the overwhelming responsibilities of his work in the Hawaiian Islands, and was to have joined Mrs. LaMothe, who has been spending the last year in this country trying to regain her health. However, his unselfish and conscientious devotion to his work would not allow him to leave when he should have done so on account of his health. He arrived in this country about the middle of September, and went at once to the home of his daughter in Blacksburg, where Mrs. LaMothe has been spending the last year. Soon after arriving there he and Mrs. LaMothe had influenza, and before he was completely well and just about a week before the General Convention, they went to Baltimore where, in a few days, he became very ill and was taken to the Church Home and Infirmary, where he is now.

The women of his missionary district contributed over $1,500 to the United Thank Offering. It was the greatest grief to him that he was not able to be present when the great offering was made.

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES AND INTERESTS IN WASHINGTON

THE second week of the Convention in Washington was characterized by a variety of activities and interests, as the first week emphasized great mass meetings and services and general organization. Woman's Auxiliary sessions continued daily at the Mayflower Hotel, and were conducted in a splendid, business-like fashion. Much important business was accomplished in the second week, some of the resolutions effecting drastic changes. The entire amount of the United Thank Offering, which amounted to more than one million dollars, was apportioned to the various fields of service, for schools, hospitals and other missionary needs. A resolution to merge the corporate gift of the Woman's Auxiliary with the three million dollar budget of the General Church was lost. The addition of the Social Service Work to the present program of the Auxiliary was accomplished at the rquest of the National Council. This action is believed by many to be unfortunate; more and more, they believe dividing the loyalties of the Woman's Auxiliary. Others feel that it is in harmony with the enlarging of the scope and purpose of the Auxiliary, and is only a broader, more liberal interpretation of the Mission of the Church.

Elections of members of the National Executive Board, revision of by-laws, resolutions of appreciation were taken care of during the week. Miss Grace Lindley was elected Executive Secretary by unanimous choice. Greetings from far places were brought to the Auxiliary by personal representatives. Sometimes in the Indian, Chinese, Japanese tongue, and later interpreted into English. Miss Grace Crosby, of England, brought greetings from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. All sessions of the Auxiliary were notable for their splendid spirit of unity and harmony. Washington Auxiliary workers, true to their promises, have been untiringly at their several posts of duty, under the direction of their Diocesan President, Mrs. Wm. D. Hurd. Perhaps because of this, the machinery of the Triennium has run well and at maximum capacity.

A more intimate and understanding knowledge of the mission work of the Church has been combined with the social aspect, by means of missionary teas, which have been given continually throughout the period of the Convention, in the afternoons, from four to six o'clock.

Some of the most charming and beautiful homes in Washington have been thrown open for the hospitality of the Auxiliary delegates. Among the hostesses on these occasions were Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Parmelee, Mrs. Gibson Fahnstoeck, Mrs. Cary Grayson, Mrs. Wm. C. Rives, Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl and others.

At each of these teas, two addresses delivered by missionary bishops, priests or laymen and women, were followed by a delightful social hour and refreshments. The Washington Club, Chevy Chase Club and the Bishop's Garden have also been the scenes of teas on different occasions.

Daily bulletins have been printed for distribution at the Mayflower, each day, and on this sheet is found notices of varied kinds for the comfort and convenience of guests.

The National Council Training Institute Classes, which have been conducted daily at the Y. W. C. A. building, have been largely and enthusiastically attended. The purpose of this school was to afford an opportunity to those attending the classes to familiarize themselves with the aims and objectives of the Church, its world-wide program, the methods of financing a great missionary enterprise and how the funds are collected and applied.

The Church School Service League, during the second week of the Convention, held demonstration classes in St. Margaret's Church and Christ Church, Georgetown. Those in St. Margaret's Church consisted of plays, illustrating the two fields of service, the community and the diocese, and the meeting at Christ Church took the form of a missionary study hour with a group of girls from the Church School. For Church School Service League leaders there was a conference with Sunday-school teachers in St. Margaret's Church, to which all Sunday-school workers were invited. The League also had an exhibit in the parish hall of St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street. This church was also the headquarters of the National Department of Religious Education, of which the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., is executive secretary. He, with ten of his associates, have been available to help persons desiring information and inspiration in the field of education. Small groups of interested and devoted people have met several times each day for the furtherance of the work of religious education.

The National Student Council held its triennial assembly on October 16 and 17, in the Y. W. C. A. building. It is difficult to appreciate the wide number of things happening in Washington during the Convention and most of these activities making a strong appeal to the women of the Church. Some of them will be of interest here:

The Church Mission of eHatlh held sessions each morning in the Y. W. C. A. building. This mission is established in a number of cities and has for its purpose better cooperation for the good health of the people, especially in the rural communities through preventive work, rather than curative agencies. One evening meeting of the mission was held in St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street, when the Presiding Bishop of the Church presided and the speakers were: Mrs. John M. Glenn, of New York, National President of the Society; the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, Bishop Coadjutor of Albany, and the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, of Baltimore.

The Conferences of Church Workers Among the Deaf was held in St. Mark's Church from October 19 to 21. Addresses, interpreted for non-hearing people, were delivered by Bishop Freeman, Bishop Darlington, the Rev. Arthur Chilton Powell, D. D., Dr. Percival Hall, President of Gallaudet College, and others, including special workers among the deaf. Headquarters were at Congress Hall Hotel. The entire conference while in session made a pilgrimage to Washington Cathedral and were also given an opportunity to meet each other socially at a reception in St. Mark's Parish Hall, when the Rev. and Mrs. H. Lorraine Tracey were host and hostess.

The Girls' Friendly Society in America with headquarters on the second floor of the D. A. R. building, had a list of activities covering the period from October 10 to October 17. Three luncheons, with addresses and discussions combined the friendly social aspect with the purpose in hand. The subjects considered at these luncheons were: 1. The Girls' Friendly Society on Far Horizons. 2. Cooperation for Character Development. 3. Work in Urban and Rural Communities. The Washington National Center was the scene of some of the meetings and, on October 19, was dedicated to use of the society. This dedication was followed by a reception. Other meetings were held especially for the business work of the Society. Study classes were also held in the Y. W. C. A. building by the following leaders and on the following subjects: Leadership in the Girls' Friendly Society in America, Ruth E. Butler, Florence Lukens Newbold; Mutual Problems of Experience and Youth, Bertha Conde; Problems in Everyday Living, Mrs. Harrison Elliott; The New Africa, Ruth E Butler; The Girls' Friendly Society in America—An Interpretation, Florence Lukens Newbold. Tea was served every afternoon in the Washington National Center, 1533 New Hampshire Avenue.

The National Conference of Deaconesses was held on Monday, October 15, having first started its meeting by a Corporate Communion, with the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., as celebrant, assisted by the Rev. George Fiske Dudley, D. D., in the Chapel of the House of Mercy. By invitation of Deaconess Yeo, the House of Mercy was the headquarters of the conference. In addition to forty-six deaconesses, the conference was attended by Bishop Darlington, Mr. Davis, Dean Robbins of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and Mrs. Augustus Hand. The heads of the four training schools for deaconesses were in attendance. These schools are located at Philadelphia, New York, Berkeley, California, and Chicago, Ill.

The Church Periodical Club Triennial was held at Epiphany Church from October 16 to 19, inclusive. Conferences were held with diocesan officers and delegates of the C. P. C. on the first two days of the Triennial. On October 18, at 7:30 A. M., there was a Corporate Communion for all C. P. C. delegates and workers and this was followed by a breakfast at the City Club. On this occasion, the delegates were guests of the C. P. C. officers of the Diocese of Washington. Officers and delegates were also guests of honor at a reception given at the residence of the Commandant General of the Marine Corps and Mrs. LeJeune on Friday afternoon, October 19. The C. P. C. Triennial was small in number and, therefore, the members were able to feel a closer fellowship, both socially and otherwise. Perhaps the high point of the C. P. C. Triennial, however, was the evening meeting in Epiphany Church on October 17, when the large Epiphany Parish Hall was filled to overflowing.

In the absence of Bishop Freeman, Canon Anson Phelps Stokes presided and introduced the speaker of the evening, the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia.

Bishop Tucker told particularly of the great work of the C. P. C. in Japan, where he had worked so long, and showed how it meets a great need, both educationally, religiously and socially. A series of scenes followed, entitled, "The Church Periodical Club in Action". The scenes were taken by players of five Washington parishes as follows: Brookland Parish, St. Margaret's, Epiphany Parish, St. James' and Christ Church, Georgetown. The scenes were laid in "The Central Office", "In the Southern Mountains", "In the Far North", "On a Western Ranch" and "In a Japanese School".

They made a very strong appeal and will perhaps serve to stimulate a greater interest in the C. P. C. work than anything else which might have been substituted here. The C. P. C. is now organized in eighty-five dioceses, with more than 2,000 branches in parishes. Each diocese has a director appointed by the bishop.

The Church Women's League for Patriotic Service, conducted its conferences at the Y. W. C. A., with Mrs. Wm. Sturgis as Director. A splendid illustrated lecture to stimulate interest in this League was given by Mrs. Sturgis at the Washington Club.

During the Convention the National Church Club for Women maintained headquarters in a room in the Arlington Hotel, for the convenience of the members and those desiring to become club members.

The Society of the Nazarene sat in Convention in Trinity Diocesan Church during the second Convention week, with services daily at ten A. M. and eight P. M. Addresses were made by ministers who have been particularly interested in the work of the society, some of them being the Rev. Walter B. Stehl, D. D., of Hagerstown; the Rev. Frank N. Riale, D. D., of Wooster, Ohio, and the Rt. Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota; the Rev. Robert B. H. Bell, of Denver, Colo., and the Very Rev. Phillips H. Gilman, Orlando, Fla. Impressive services of healing were held when hundreds of people, ill in different ways, came for the blessing of Christian healing. A great mass meeting was held Thursday night, when the speakers who addressed a large number of people were the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, formerly Bishop of Wyoming, and Dr. Sinclair Bowen, a physician-evangelist of Washington, who in the common parlance is known for his practice of "mixing his prayers with his pills". The Convention of the Society of the Nazarene will be remembered as a blessing to many people.

Religious drama and pageantry were lifted to a high place, also by the offering of "Adam", a fourteenth century mystery play, and "The Cross Triumphant". "Adam" was presented by the Episcopal Actors' Guild of America, with headquarters at "The Little Church Around the Corner", in New York. This Actors' Guild is organized to advance drama and to help actors by social intercourse, financial aid, or any other help needed. In a spirit of service, these players came to Washington, some at a sacrifice, and offered this beautiful mystery play to the Convention. Five performances were given, to accommodate some of the many who clamored for admission. Art at its best was seen here in this production. People were lifted in a spirit of worship and left the building quietly and thoughtfully. This, a picture of the struggle between good and evil, as illustrated in the Garden of Eden scene, was made complete by prophecies of a Redeemer declared by the prophets of old.

Close following this quiet and solemn mystery play of Old Testament happenings, came the "Cross Triumphant", a fulfillment of the prophecies, depicted in the struggles of the Church in England and America, and all epitomized in a world at the foot of the Cross—this world represented by one thousand men, women and children of Washington, who formed the castle of the pageant. The pageant was written by Mrs. Mavetta Minnegerode Andrews, a granddaughter of Dr. Charles Minnegerode, of Richmond, Virginia, a beloved and saintly priest of the Church. Two performances of this pageant in the auditorium, which accommodated six thousand people, made it possible for all visitors to the Convention to enjoy its rare beauty and inspiration.

A mass meeting in the interest of Ecclesiastical Art was held in the D. A. R. Hall on Saturday night, when Bishop Freeman presided. The first speaker, Dr. Milo Gates, of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York, characterized the evening's meeting as significant in the history of the Church, because he believed a great movement was being started there. Bishop Johnson, of Colorado, in his delightful way, spoke of the fundamental elements of art as simplicity, sincerity and purpose and rejoiced that the churches in our day were coming to realize more the value of the beautiful.

Hon. George Wharton Pepper told of the thrill of working for the building of a great Cathedral and showed some of the ways in which Washington Cathedral building is being carried on.

Canon Anson Phelps Stokes showed some very beautiful pictures on a screen emphasizing the relation of the art of cathedral building to the allied arts. With only a few days remaining of the Woman's Auxiliary Triennium, much will be accomplished that is yet undone. Affiliated conferences and conventions have about finished their work.

Interesting exhibits may be seen in the basement floor of the D. A. R. building. Of these some are the American Church Institute for Negroes; the Church Army in the U. S. A.; the Bishop Seabury Memorial Fund; the Church Mission of Help; the Church Papers, and the Girls' Friendly Society. These exhibits were planned to be moved away on Wednesday, October 24.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Amelia Holt, of Roland Park, Maryland:

> "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee."—Isaiah 26:3.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

ANNUAL SAILORS' DAY.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1928.

A Sailors' Day Message.

Recently when the Pacific Fleet was in San Francisco harbor I noticed a big poster, presumably advertising a movie, which read, "Why Do Sailors Go Wrong?" The answer which flashed into my mind was "Because theer are not enough Seamen's Church Institutes".

One purpose of the Institutes is to help the sailors when on shore to escape the manifold temptations which meet them on every side. A friendly gathering place, pool tables and a library, a lunch counter with meals at reasonable prices furnish a seamen's club. In some of the Insttiutes there are also rooms for lodging. In all there are chapels with regular services.

But the purpose of the Institutes goes far beyond mere protection and the provision of steadying surroundings. Its chief purpose is not to counteract bad influences; but rather to give the seaman, across the world from his home (if he has one at all) with few friends to rely on, the help of good influences and to surround him with an atmosphere which goes some way towards taking the place of friends and home. The Institute will take care of his money and his mail, give him books to read, advise him about employment and help him to it, and above all put at his command the wisdom and experience of the Superintendent, the Chaplain and other officials. In the Chapel services and the pastoral ministrations he finds the strength and comfort of his religion, or perhaps for the first time learns what real religion is. In such large ways, with fine leadership and the accumulated experience of years behind it, the Seamen's Church Institute does its work.

"But what is all that to us?" some one may ask. Again the answer may be put in a phrase, "It is our small return for the service which the seaman renders." He brings us our fish from Alaska and the Banks, our sugar from Hawaii and Cuba, our rubber from South America and the Far East. These and the thousand other necessities and luxuries which come to us from across the water, he brings. On the other hand he carries our manufactured goods and the produce of our soil over all the earth; and when the fortunate time comes that we are able to go to Europe or around the world, it is his disciplined service on the great liners that makes our voyage possible. No seamen, no ships, no present day world! Ordinarily we think little about him; but when we do stop to think we know how much of our living depends upon him. It is for our comfort and pleasures that he lives his homeless life and risks storms and shipwreck and discomfort.

It is with such facts as these to make us think, that the Institute asks us to keep Sailors' Day the fourth Sunday

With 52 causes for absolute divorce and remarriage in the United States, and one divorce to every 6.74 marriages, as compared with one to every 121 in Canada, thus placing America in this respect in the lowest rank of any civilized country in the world (with the possible exception of Russia under its present government), no sincere lover of his country can remain silent or indifferent.

The most serious question considered in the General Convention in Washington in 1928 was the report of the joint commission appointed in 1925 "to study the whole problem of divorce."

in October and to give generously to its noble work. It is a Christlike work that the Institute is doing. It calls for a response with Christlike generosity.

Faithfully yours,
Edward L. Parsons,
Bishop of California.

Fifteen Years to Build---Five Hours to Destroy

Ethel Stevens.

How true are the words, "It is easier to tear down than it is to build up". Certainly this has been very forcefully proven to us here in Porto Rico, for, as our friends in the States have read in the daily papers, on Thursday, September 13, a terrible cyclone swept across our Island. I do not think that the reports in the States are very much exaggerated. It is true that many people were killed, a great many were injured, and thousands are homeless, many of the latter have always been poor, but now, they are poorer.

As for our other missions in Porto Rico I can say very little. I only know that the lives of all of our workers have been spared, and that all have suffered loss of property in a greater or less degree.

I was unfortunate enough to be in the Presbyterian Hospital during the storm, and for several days afterwards, so that I have been unable to do the work that I should like to have done. However, I arrived at ElCoto in time to see the wreckage before the Drostes had ordered it all cleared away. As I came down the hill towards our home, the first thing that I saw was a pile of broken sticks and twisted zinc, spread over a cement platform, in the places where the Reus House and the Boys' Home had stood. Then when I reached the rectory, I beheld a barren waste, where had been beautiful trees, a fine garden, and beyond—the Parish Hall. Of the pile of debris where the Parish Hall had stood, even most of the zinc had sailed away on the high winds. The church, like the rectory, being of concrete, had suffered only water damage, for which we are all very thankful. But, across the railroad tracks and opposite the church, the storm had played havoc with one of the school buildings, and that, too, was a pile of debris. The kindergarten also suffered considerable damage. The roof was taken off, both porches were destroyed, and of course the furniture and supplies inside the building were damaged by the water.

Some of the furniture was broken by falling lumber. All together, about half of the equipment must be renewed before school can start. This is also true of the day school. Not only must we build a new school room, but some of the desks must be repaired, some new desks must be made, and many new books must be purchased.

However, we are plodding on. Mr. Villafane and I are teaching on the installment plan in the one remaining schoolroom. I teach the English subjects in the upper grades the first half of the morning session, and he teaches the Spanish subjects the second half. Then the same plan is carried out with the lower grades in the afternoon. This is not a satisfactory arrangement, for many reasons, but it is the only solution to our problem for the present.

The school buildings were the personal property of the Drostes, and they will rebuild as soon as possible, with the money that they had saved for their vacation next summer. The Barahona Church was also their property, and that, too, is a wreck. In fact, it is now lying in front of the rectory at ElCoto. The only part of that little chapel that was left intact, was the tower roof with its cross. As for the furniture, not a whole pew was left—the organ was completely destroyed, and some pieces of the altar never have been found.

Last but not lease, I wish to speak of the work that the Drostes did after the storm. Before the Red Cross, or any other organization, even "woke up", the Drostes had spent about two hundred dollars of their own money, to buy rice and beans for the poor people. They attempted to feed nearly twelve hundred people, one meal a day to keep them from starvation, and to ward off sickness if possible. When the Bishop arrived in Porto Rico he sent us some money from an anonymous friend in the States and finally the Red Cross sent out enough provisions to last two days. Now all resources are exhausted, and relief work is at a standstill, but we are hoping and praying that something will be done soon.

Notes of the Woman's Auxiliary

In many ways the executive office of the Woman's Auxiliary is better administered than the same office of the General Convention. Several pleasant and well informed young women meet the visitor when he or she enters the doors of the Mayflower Hotel and information is courteously and efficiently given. These ushers, or pages, are dressed in white and the little touch of purple they wear on their shoulders, forming the colors of the Woman's Auxiliary, are their badges of service and authority.

A beautiful and fitting memorial to all deceased members of the Woman's Auxiliary has been prepared with much effort and affection by Mrs. C. M. Wilks, of Washington. It is a book bound in blue hand-tooled leather and on its pages are written the names of members who have died. It is handsomely illuminated and the volume will be permanently placed, in a glass case, at the Washington Cathedral. Its list of deceased women will be added to as occasion requires.

The new national centre of the Girls' Friendly Society has been opened at 1533 New Hampshire Avenue, Washington. It was dedicated by the Most Rev. John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop of of the Church, assisted by the Rt. Rev.

Dr. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington. It is the first national centre to be established in Washington by any Church organization. The Girls' Friendly Society numbers about 60,000 girls and women in this country and extends its activities into England, Scotland, Australia, Porto Rico, Mexico, the Philippines and other countries throughout the world. The centre just dedicated in Washington is intended as a place of hospitality for transient members and associates visiting the Capital City and to provide proper quarters in which the activities and objects of the society may be demonstrated. In charge of this centre is a large committee of women. The only Southern woman listed as a member is Mrs. Norman Slack, Secretary of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

The Federal Government has extended its hand to the General Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary by way of an extremely interesting exhibition of rare United States Prayer Books. This notable display is at the Library of Congress and is being visited every day by interested throngs of Bishops, Deputies, Auxiliary members and visitors incidental to the great Triennial Convention now in its forty-ninth sitting.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary wondered among themselves about the amendment on the status of Deaconess which the House of Bishops changed from a canon reading, "Her office shall be vacated by marriage", to one "A Deaconess who marries shall not continue to exercise her office".

Two young Armenian girls, Vavrtoohi Hoosepian and Gulunia Kehyiaan who, with their American hostess, Miss Nancy Emhardt, are in Washington for the Episcopalian Convention, had an excellent birds-eye view of the Capital City, when friends piloted them in a short airplane ride. Miss Emhardt is the daughter of Dr. W. C. Emhardt, of the Ecclesiastical Relations Committee of the Forty-ninth Triennial Convention.

CONVENTION NOTES

One pathetic figure at the Convention is former Bishop James Montgomery Brown, of Arkansas, deposed three years ago for publishing heretical books. He is seventy-three years old, his face is benevolent and impressive and he yet wears the garb of a bishop, claiming to have been given that office in the "Old Catholic" Church, which in this country hardly has tangible existence. At the Convention at New Orleans three years ago he was more or less conspicuous and the reporter for The Southern Churchman described him as suffering from morbid craving for publicity. Evidently he has not recovered from that malady. He came to Washington provided with pictures and sketches of himself for the newspapers and told the reporters of his purpose to partake of the Holy Communion at Epiphany Church and afterward to lecture on communism in conjunction with W. Z. Foster, socialist, or communist agitator and general foe of all government. The former bishop is reported as attending the meetings of the House of Bishops, occupying a back seat and, thus far, making no demonstrations.

At the annual birthday thank offering at Epiphany Church October 14, it was announced that children of Episcopal Sunday Schools have contributed for Church work in the last three years over $1,600,000. At the service at Epiphany the offering was $32,386, which was $10,000 in excess of the offering of three years ago. This gift was begun nine years ago and the first amounted to $8,000. It is contributed by children in pennies, nickels or dimes in number equal to their years. In 1925 the offering was used for a school in Liberia. In 1922 it went for a steam launch for the Bishop of Alaska. This year it will go for mission work in Mexico and in 1931 it will build a children's ward for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan.

Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, of Washington, many years coroner of the District, who abandoned a lucrative practice to enlist in crusade and evangelizing work for the Church, is the son of Bishop Otis Glazebrook, who was in the Sunday-school class of the late John L. Williams at St. Mark's Church, Richmond. In his report, presented October 14, he said he had in seven months visited fifteen dioceses and addressed three diocesan conventions, sixty-three parish congregations and twenty-six business men's clubs, finding most cordial cooperation and sympathy with his work everywhere.

A picturesque ceremony followed the mass meeting at the Cathedral Close, Sunday, October 14, when in the Chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea in Washington Chapel, the Presiding Bishop of the Church and six other Churchmen and women were invested with special crosses of honor by the Order of the Sangrael.

These crosses were awarded for "meritorious service to God and mankind" and others besides Bishop Murray, who were given them at the hands of the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Bishop Coadjutor of North Carolina, were the Rt. Rev. C. H. Brent, Bishop of Western New York; the Rt. Rev. Peter T. Rowe, Bishop of Alaska; the Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, founder of the Order of the Holy Cross; Ralph Adams Cram, the architect; August Martyrn, founder of the House of Happiness, Scottsdale, Ala., and Edna Biller, head of the National Center for Devotion and Conference at Racine, Wis.

It is announced that gifts to the Cathedral at Washington in the last sixteen months amount to $2,300,000.

In his sermon at the great open-air service at the Cathedral Sunday afternoon, Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, sounded a warning against the extreme modernists, when he said:

"The Church must be the aggressor. When it is on the defensive it is lost. When people or preachers seek to make the Church popular by explaining away her message, then the Church is done.

"The Church must fight away every error and every wrong. Religion is largely the inspiration of our art, music and architecture. It is religion that redeems our vulgar commonplaces.

"The one without religion paints a futile picture, writes a poor poem and lives vulgar days."

Under the new provisions of the constitution it will not be necessary to elect new bishops to succeed the four whose resignations have been accepted, coadjutors automatically taking the places of those resigning or missionary bishops being transferred to fill the vacancies. Bishop Coadjutor Acheson succeeds Bishop Brewster of Connecticut; Bishop Oldham succeeds Bishop Nelson of Albany; Suffragan Bishop Thomas replaces Bishop Kinsolving; Bishop Roberts of South Dakota, Bishop Thomas of Wyoming.

Plans for a memorial cathedral in Aberdeen, Scotland, to the memory of Bishop Samuel Seabury, America's first Episcopal bishop, were announced at the Convention. The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop, and the National Council endorsed the project. It is planned to have the foundation cornerstone laid by Bishop Murray in 1930.. Bishop Seabury was elected in 1733. He was consecrated by Scotch bishops of the Church of England, who had declined to swear allegiance to the House of Hanover and, therefore, were independent of Parliament.

Chaplain to Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show is the proud boast of one of the attending bishops at this Triennial Convention. Bishop George W. Beecher was a great friend and admirer of Colonel Cody and when the Colonel took his Wild Westerners to Europe years ago Bishop Beecher proudly went along as chaplain for the outfit.

Bishop Peter Trimble Roe, of Alaska, uses an airplane in making pastoral calls, owing to the magnificent distances of his clerical territory. Dr. Grafton Burke, director of the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, lives ten miles north of the Arctic Circle at Fort Yukon, Alaska. He is alone, except for his wife, and they, too, care for their flock by traveling hither and yon by air routes.

Time was when, during General Conventions of the American Episcopal Church, the populace turned to stare at clerics togged out in gaiters, knickerbockers, shovel hats and other appurtenances affected by the English clergy. But not a bishopric pair of legs or a single flat hat has appeared in the Forty-ninth Triennial General Convention at Washington. From the stiff plainness of the English-clad bishops the American clergy have departed apparently forever. There is virtually no limit, however, to number and variety of church vestments of the High Church clergy. At the opening service of the Convention at the Washington Cathedral many bishops and priests appeared in colorful ecclesiastical garments valued at several thousands of dollars each.

An interesting figure at the Episcopal Church Convention is the Rt. Rev. T. Momolu Gardiner, Bishop of Liberia. He is the son of a Mohammedan priest and a member of the Vai tribe. At the age of ten he came out of the African jungles, joined the Episcopal Church, was educated in St. John's Industrial School at Liberia, mastered the English language, rose steadily in Church ranks and now stands as Church leader of Africa.

COLLECT FOR TWENTY-FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Grant, we beseech Thee, merciful Lord, to Thy faithful people pardon and peace, that they may be cleansed from all their sins, and serve Thee with a quiet mind; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. SIMON AND ST. JUDE'S DAY.

O Almighty God, Who hast built Thy Church upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the head cornerstone; Grant us so to be joined together in unity of spirit by their doctrine, that we may be made an holy temple acceptable unto Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ALL SAINTS' DAY.

O Almighty God, Who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship in the mystical body of Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord; Grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

ON ALL SAINTS.

Nell V. Mellichamp.

Why droop you here and mourn? Your sight is dim!
We dropped our burdens at the word of Him
Who knows our needs, but you are not alone,
We've crossed the threshold, but we are not gone.

Let worthier deeds be yours and truer faith,
A holier calm, and then—when death
With swift approach, shall challenge you to fear,
Smile bravely, for you know that we are here,

Watching to see your courage rising high;
To welcome you—when others say you die.

Some Plain Answers to Your Questions.

Like one of Helen's babies—I have forgotten which one—I have always had a perfect mania for "seeing the wheels go round." Be it the insides of a watch or the internals of an ocean liner, the unvarying precision with which well-made and beautifully kept machinery works holds for me an irresistible fascination. It was this which once prompted me to leave the cool comfort of a deck chair where ocean breezes fanned my brow and jeopardize my neck as well as my best suit of clothes by descending flight after flight of steep, slippery steel stair-cases to see just what it was that made the ship go.

It was a different world below from the world above. There was no sound of rushing water, no breeze to fan one's brow, only the interminable clanking and drumming and whirring of machinery, concentrating its full power into the thrust of two huge revolving shafts of steel; no tang of salt to the air down here—only hot and heavy and oily. My guide was one of the engineers, and he loved every screw and bolt in the works and called them all by their names. He knew nothing about the ship above the water line, but he knew everything about it below and he thought his was the best ship that ploughed the seven seas. Finally when our pilgrimage was over, I made as if to reward him for his trouble and thereby committed a terrible faux pas. "Oh, I couldn't do that," he said, "I'm on duty down here, and am glad to do whatever I can to make your trip enjoyable." From that time on I felt myself to be the guest of the engineer rather than the captain—who had never paid any attention to me anyhow.

"On duty." The words conjure up a picture. The picket on duty; the soldier in the trench; the captain on the bridge; the engineer in the hold; the Christian in the world. And it is of the latter that we speak. We are all living under orders, orders which we accepted when we promised obediently to keep God's holy will and commandments and to walk in the same all the days of our lives. Outstanding among these orders perhaps, is that great commission to carry the Gospel to every creature; to build up and strengthen the Kingdom of God on earth—here, there, and everywhere. The progress of the Kingdom should be uppermost in our minds at all times, but at this season of the year we are called upon to pledge anew of our resources, financial and spiritual. We have no new arguments to train upon you, even if that were necessary, you have heard them all a hundred times. We have no tartling and original reasons as to why the missionary work of the Church should receive your hearty support; you recognize this obligation as well as we, and have shown many times by your past actions that you not only recognize it but accept it. We only want to remind you of the fact that we are all still "on duty". Our task is not finished, our watch is not over, and it will not be until God calls us out of this world to join the great ranks of those who have gone before. And he who is on duty must be alive and alert at all times; watchful, wakeful, and vigilant; quick to see every need that arises; eager to respond to every demand that is made upon him; glad to discharge to his utmost whatever task comes to him along the line of his duty.

Especially do we need to be vigilant, for it is here that the greatest danger lies. The engineer does not go to sleep as soon as the vessel is well under way. His task has only begun; he must keep watch and see that the bearings are well oiled, adjustments properly made, and the highest possible efficiency maintained. Not for a moment can he leave his post while he is supposed to be "on duty". Our task is not over simply because we happen to have been won over to the cause of missions or the method by which this Church seeks to promote the same. But we do need to be cautioned lest we grow neglectful of our responsibilities and lax in the performance of our duties. There is that tendency which we all feel at times to grow weary of well-doing; to feel just a little bored by the steady recurrence of the same old duties; oft-repeated phrases lose their effect and we even feel something akin to impatience at the renewed pressure—which after all is the same old pressure—that is brought to bear upon us. We grow careless and pathetic while on duty and that will never do.

This is a danger to which we of the clergy are especially susceptible. We have done this thing so many times that it takes on the nature of dull routine. It has been difficult perhaps to retain that freshness of vision that was ours in those early days of re-awakening to our responsibilities for the church's missionary work. Details that were once regarded as a vital part of the program seem not so important now. We are tempted to grow careless in the matter of preparation and education—not because of any diminishing interest in the work but because of a growing feeling that it is no longer necessary to bother with the same old details year after year. The canvass is the thing. Just because our parish machinery seems to run so smoothly and just because our past canvasses have been so successful, we are too apt to feel that the whole affair is one that will get along without any special effort on our part. All that is necessary is to see that the canvassers go out Sunday afternoon at the appointed time. It has grown to be such a simple matter, we wonder why the Church continues to make such an event of it. Just routine. But the engineer on duty knows that he cannot afford to grow lax or things will begin to go wrong. It is only because he is ever watchful of the "little" things that the ship goes serenely on its way. The rector, no less than the engineer, should not allow himself to take his job too casually. Too much depends upon him.

And the people in the pews—are they not in danger of the same condemnation? "Oh, it's the same old thing," they exclaim, "why doesn't he tell us something new?" Why must they work under such preasure year after year? They've done mighty well; why can't they let up a bit? Have a little breathing spell, as it were. Need they give quite so much? There's that payment on the new car; and coal bills have a way of bearing down upon us about the first of December. Or if it isn't a car or the coal, it's something else. "Things are not going so well with me just now; possibly next year."

And the canvassers—why need they be drilled in their duties again and again, just as if they were children? And why such a bother about seeing everybody? That was all right the first few years, but everybody knows about this thing now; why not simply mail the cards out? Or possibly pass them out on Sunday. And what's the use of seeing Mr. Blank again? He's been visited every year and never gives anything; he doesn't believe in missions and he won't give anything to the parish as long as the choir sings the "Amens". "And what do you think? The rector even wants to have a supper for us again this year!"

And the vestries. We've got the finest lot of vestries in the whole Church but many of them have got some rather heavy loads to carry. There's that debt they've been trying to pay off for the last five years. And here's a new church that must be paid for somehow. A new furnace, a leaky roof—and the walls need paint. Why does everything seem to come at once? And why is Bishop Jett so interested in the Southwest anyhow? "Besides, they expect too much of us, ours is not a strong parish and conditions here are peculiar. Our rector is a nice sort but he hasn't much business sense. He keeps on pushing this Nation-Wide campaign business, insisting that we pay our quota when we can't even pay our honest debts. Just let us get on our feet again, then he can talk missions all he wants to—and we'll back him up, too."

Well, the laity are under orders, too. They also are "on duty". And when one is on duty, the King's business must come first. He trusts us; He believes that we will serve Him faithfully; and because He trusts us and believes in us, we must not fail Him. This thing of sitting at ease in Zion will not do. Human lives and souls are dependent upon our watchfulness. There are those who are waiting to know Christ, but can never know Him except as we bring Him to them. We are on duty for the Master and we must not faint nor grow weary; must not become lax, careless, indifferent. The engineer will go down with his ship rather than desert his post. Our faithfulness in the coming crisis will avert disaster and bring to the Church we love a "sufficient success upon earth".—Rev. Carleton Barnwell, In Southwestern Episcopalian.

The Profession of Christianity.

We can all remember when as small children we chose some position that we wanted to hold when we grew up. Usually it was one that called for the wearing of some sort of uniform. All positions had the same value. It was merely a matter of which one appealed to us most. When we grew up other questions had to be considered than mere attractiveness. The matter of appriateness arose. The questions of opportunity and natural ability had to be considered. The problem became what is the best that I have the opportunity to be with my particular natural abilities. In our various walks of life many are still striving for this goal.

Let us leave the purely secular field and look upon ourselves simply as creatures of God living in a world created by Him. What is the best that I can be now? Before John Baptist announced that the Christ was in the world and would soon be known, men realized through the prophets that the goal of man on earth had not been fulfilled nor would be until a Christ should come. But now that Christ would be here what could men be now? The other St. John who wrote the gospel put it this way: As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name. What a great opportunity is now offered to man. He has the power to become a son of God by receiving Him and believing in Him. Can any one think of a higher profession than that of being a son of God, not merely by creation but by having the Spirit of God within ourselves? St. Paul spoke of this great profession of sonship to Almighty God in his letter to those faithful disciples in Galatia when he said, Because ye are sons. God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts. Wherefore thou art no more a servant but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

To live any profession fully is to meet difficult problems, but one thing is certain; that any profession worth while having is worthy of a vigorous life on the part of him who follows it. A lawyer is of no practical value to his community nor to himself, therefore not worthy of his profession, if he merely knows and accepts law and never uses his knowledge and experience to the advantage of others. We also note that St. John did not say that by receiving and believing in Christ's name we become sons of God, but that we are given power to become the sons of God. We have been given the equipment to work with but we must use it ourselves and we ought to use it vigorously. A vigorous life is never closed in but is continually boiling over with enthusiasm. Does our profession of Christianity boil over with enthusiasm? One of primary qualities of Christianity (primary because it was in Christ and His disciples and with it Christianity would not live, is to share it with some one else. If we have found the Christ, if we have found the Way to eternal life in the presence and peace of God, how can we keep it to ourselves? We can't if we are living a healthy, boiling-over-with-enthusiasm Christian profession. May the vigorous life be ours and may it be our ambition to serve loyally as sons of God according to our abilities.—Exchange.

"IN OUR DAY OF THANKSGIVING ONE PSALM LET US OFFER."

In our day of thanksgiving one psalm let us offer,
For the Saints who before us have found their reward:
When the cords of our love broke asunder, we sorrowed,
But now we rejoice that they rest in the Lord.

In the morning of life, and at noon, and at even,
He called them away from our worship below;
But not till His love, at the font and the altar,
Had girt them with grace for the way they should go.

These stone that have echoed their praises are holy,
And dear is the ground where their feet have once trod;
Yet here they confessed they were strangers and pilgrims,
And still they were seeking the city of God.

Sing praise, then, for all who here sought and here found Him,
Whose journey is ended, whose perils are past;
They believed in the Light; and its glory is round them,
Where the clouds of earth's sorrow are lifted at last.
—Used by the G. F. S. of England.

The Fellowship of the Saints.

One of the greatest things that Jesus came to do, and did, was to build a fellowship based on love. He set this up in the midst of the world as an object lesson for all. This fellowship of Christians cast its rays of joy and new hope out into a dark world.

Surely, the world needed that kind of a fellowship, and Jesus set Himself to build it. He took men who had the usual selfish individualities and began to train them in His school for fellowship. Slowly they began to see and understand. After giving them frequent instruction, He said: "These things I command you, that ye love one another." One of them failed, but the eleven so caught the idea that that early Christian Fellowship was the wonder of the age.

This is what the Church of Jesus Christ should be today. The kindly spirit of Christian love should permeate its whole group. If it did, it would be invincible. Let us who are in its membership ask ourselves whether we have entered into its mystic fellowship. Have we become one of a group of real friends in Christ Jesus? Do we talk like those who love?

What a tragedy when the Church of Jesus Christ is rent by dissensions and strife, when its differences become the sport of the world! What a redemptive and healing influence it is amid the currents of hate and selfishness and evil of the world, when its people can exemplify the fellowship that is possible in our Master.—Christian Sun.

The Shame of the Church.

Can we regard the distracted and divided state of Christendom without hiding our heads in shame? When we think of the Church—which He prayed "might be one as we are one"—split into as many sects as there are days in the year, can we calmly go on as if all is well? Do not let us lull ourselves to sleep with the thought that it is no concern of ours. It does vitally concern every one of us. We shall be judged not by our membership of th s Church or that, not by the number of services we attend or the prayers we offer, not for our zeal in contending for a faith which has proved itself powerless to transform our lives. The Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard puts the matter in his own forceful way, when he declares: "The better mind of the nation cares little or nothing for the niceties of ecclesiastical order—it does not care for Christ. It is tired of the barriers that the Churches have built, not against anti-Christ, but against each other. Sometimes we do seem to bind His arms to His side with our contentions and controversies that are entirely irrelevant to the Gospel of Christ, that the Lord Himself cannot stretch out His hand to heal the wounds of His people. . . . The propaganda of Christianity is as simple as this: 'Follow me.' 'Go and do thou likewise.' "—Church of England Newspaper.

The Church and the American Farmer.

If the American farmer slowly sinks into peasantry, through national unconcern; if the rural church sinks and goes down with him; it will be due, in my estimation, to the sickness of the American Church; it will be a case of national decline due to the temporary eclipse of religion. It will not be at base a case of bad economics or bad politics. The aristocratic superiorities of a dozen righteousness cults will have brought on the doom.

I shall not live to see the new day for the rural church; but that new day will come. I do not believe the American farmer will sink into peasantry. I believe a prophet will arise who, warming all hearts and bringing to the point of ignition the dormant love of men for men, for just plain men, will build upon the facts of this generation and upon the insight of this intellectual era—and the rural church will rise to distinction. I do not expect to see with my own eyes your sects and mine—all very haughty cults indeed—joining their resources under a single battle cry against the devil; but I do not doubt for a single instant that it will one day come.—C. J. Galpin, U. S. Dept. Agriculture.

PILGRIMAGE.

I am a man on pilgrimage,
  Then stay me not,
E're even though the tempest rage,
  I must be brought
Where angel forms my dreams engage.

If I be lightly robed, forbear
  To tease my lot,
I have a tryst most holy there
  With anguish fraught,
And souls their virtues nobly wear.

If rough the road, no pity pour
  Upon my head,
The heart will find a friendly door
  Divinely led.
And never stand for long before.

Say not—it is a lonely way,
  Could you but see
I have a Comrade close each day,
  More dear to me
For that He promises to stay.

Remind me not of what I lose
  This way to go.
The heart hath better store to choose,
  Though less to show
And life is richer to refuse.

I am a man on pilgrimage
  By vale or street,
And envy none his lurid stage
  Where shadows meet
I have a tryst with saint and sage.

—Robert MacGowan.

Ida's Hallowe'en.

Ida's little face was very, very sober, as she needed raisins for the cake Aunt Martha was making. It was Ida's birthday. She was just eight years old.

Ida was to have had a birthday party—her very first party, but the measles had come next door, and mamma had sent her out in the country to Aunt Martha's, so that she might not catch them instead.

She was trying hard to be brave about losing her birthday party, and not let kind Aunt Martha know how disappointed she was, because that would make her feel badly, but she just could not smile.

"Why, if there isn't Willie Brown with a Jack o' Lantern," said Aunt Martha, as she glanced out of the window in front of which she was beating eggs. "It must be Hallowe'en."

"What is Hallowe'en," asked Ida, in a voice she tried to make sound interested.

"Long ago witches were supposed to ride out on broomsticks with black cats on their shoulders, and all sorts of creepy, spooky things were thought to happen on the night of October 31," replied Aunt Martha. "Of course, we know better now, but young people like the fun of having Hallowe'en parties and playing fortune telling games and relating ghost stories. How would you like to have one?"

"Oh, oh, I should love it," exclaimed Ida, her eyes shining.

The party, itself was not a large one. Willie and Susie and Alice Brown, who lived near, were invited. Of course, Miss Warren, the school teacher, and Uncle John and Cousin Jack, and herself.

When they sat down to supper there right in front of Ida's place at the table was the cake Aunt Martha had baked that morning, all frosted, and with eight tiny candles burning upon it.

"How did you know it was my birthday?" gasped Ida, her face all aglow with delightful surprise.

Later, when Ida had cut the cake, and Miss Warren, who sat beside her, had helped every one to a generous piece, Ida was amazed to find a lovely gold ring, such as she had wanted for ever so long, and which fitted her perfectly, in her piece of cake. It seemed very strange things could happen on Hallowe'en.

Then Aunt Martha told them to each lift up the nearest shock of corn and take what was beneath it, which proved to be a large gilded English walnut shell, inside on a slip of paper was written a Hallowe'en fortune—a good wish for every one.

After the fortunes had all been read, Uncle John took the pumpkin Jack o' Lantern, and set it before Ida, telling her to look inside and see what it contained.

Inside she found a box of paints, a pretty handkerchief and a bottle of perfume—all birthday gifts.

After that all the lights were put out except the candles in the Jack o' Lanterns, and the older people told stories of Hallowe'en parties which they had attended when they were young, and the funny pranks they had played.

"I shall never forget that Hallowe'en comes the same day as my birthday," sighed Ida in happy content, when the birthday party was over.—Effie Stevens, in The Child's Hour.

Matches Are Poor Playthings.

Jimmy liked to play with matches. Of course he knew he should not do so, and many, many times he had been forbidden by his mother. But whenever he had a chance he would sneak off alone somewhere and burn pieces of paper or sticks.

Two or three times he burned his own fingers and had dreadful blisters on them. Just as soon as they healed he seemed to forget all about the pain and would strike matches again at the first chance he got.

'Some of these days you'll set fire to the house," said his sister Dot.

"No, I won't either," said Jimmy, who thought he knew more than a girl.

One afternoon, when every one had gone out, Jimmy found some Chinese punk.

"I guess I'll light a piece!" he said to himself. Rags, his pet dog, jumped about when he saw the flame. He barked and barked, seeming to know that Jimmy was doing something he ought not to do.

The garage was the first place he saw. He and the dog entered, closing the door after them. Of course, nobody with any sense would go into a garage with a handful of blazing punk. But Jimmy never stopped to think of anything but hiding because he had disobeyed mother.

In his excitement and haste he dropped the punk to the oily floor. It did not take long for the whole building to become a mass of flames. There in the corner, too frightened to move, huddled Jimmy and Rags.

When the firemen had dragged the two culprits from their corner, they were both in a pretty bad way.

"Where's Rags? Is he hurt?" the boy asked over and over.

"Yes, he's dreadfully burned—hasn't a speck of hair left!" replied mother.

"All because of me!" wailed Jimmy. "Oh, mother, if only Rags gets better, I'll never, never touch matches to play with again." He did not seem to mind his own pain, but worried about the dog.

At last they both got well, and Rags went over to lick Jimmy's hand as though to say: "I forgive you."

"Well, Rags, I know now that fire isn't a safe playmate."

And Rags' wagging tail meant: "Yes, I know it."—Exchange.

"Mike."

He was small and black, with a white vest and four white feet. His head and ears were rather long, eyes very bright, and his strong, deep-chester little body was "coupled up like a Cadillac. Built for strength," grown folks said, but his small boy friends knew that he could "run like greased lightning."

Brother had brought him to Billy on his last visit home, and the two little boys were great friends and chums, sharing everything except their beds. Mother drew the line there.

Billy liked to play ball, and so did Mike. He was a splendid "fielder", and more fun than all the boys put together. When they failed to catch a "fly" or "grounder", Mike flew after it, seized it in his mouth and then the real fun began.

First he would lie down with the ball between his front feet, and half close his eyes, just as if he was going to take a nap, but he was watching the boys all the time, and all the muscles in his strong little body were ready for him to spring up and run as soon as the boys came near.

They would form a circle around him and try to close up gradually, so that he could not escape between them. But it was no use. He would let them get almost to him, and then dart away, right between them, and the chase was on.

Around and around, darting in and out among them, he ran with the ball in his mouth, bright eyes dancing and long ears flapping, while the boys, laughing, shouting, scolding, ran after him, until they all fell on the grass, tired, hot and happy. And then how they petted the panting little mischief-maker, as he came up, and laid the ball on the grass at his proud little master's feet.

"Billy, he sure is some runner," they all agree, as they roll on the grass, resting and cooling off before starting to play another game.

Mike loved the boys and liked to play with them, because they were kind to him and did not treat him badly. When dogs are mean somebody else has been mean first. When they are good, somebody else has been good first. —Exchange.

How Ted Became Happy.

Teddy had everything a little boy could wish—a pair of skates, a roller coaster, a play automobile and other toys, yet he wasn't happy.

Once he was even cross with Mother, dear, which made him feel unhappier than ever.

One day he was walking down the road and he came to some ants working on a hill.

"Are you happy, little ants?" he said.

"Happy! why of course we are!" said the ants. "We are too busy to be anything else."

Teddy walked on a little farther and came to a mother cat and five kittens.

"Are you happy, Mrs. Catums?" asked Teddy.

"Surely I am happy with these babies to take care of. They keep me busy all day long," she said, as she washed one kitten's face with a pink tongue.

A little squirrel ran across the road.

"Wait a minute, Mr. Squirrel! Tell me, are you happy?"

"I have only a second to talk," replied the squirrel. "I am busy putting away my winter nuts. Indeed, I am happy and busy all day long."

Teddy ran along home, and there was mother, out sweeping leaves from the walk.

"Are you happy, mother?" said Teddy.

"Certainly," said mother, smiling, "busy and happy. And if I didn't have to sweep the leaves off I'd make an apple dumpling for dinner."

"I'll sweep them off," shouted Teddy, and he seized the broom and went to work helping mother, the busiest and happiest little boy in town.—Cradle Roll Home.

HE PASSED THAT WAY.

There was a fickle wind upon the hills,
A keen blue cold, a moon with flying clouds.
The shepherd wrapped him in his padded coat,
And shivered while the wind raced round the lake.
'Twas hard to think of anything but self
And of his fingers aching with the chill.
The jostling sheep pushed up against the fold.

But that way came a man with tender face.
He stooped and lifted up the littlest lamb,
And tucked it in his coat away from wind.
He paused to talk a while of stars and sheep,
Then laid the woolly thing within the fold.

He passed and went down toward Capernaum.
The shepherd turned to tend his sheep again.
But all the wind was still upon the hill,
And sweet warmth seem to soften all the cold.

Ted's Loyalty.

A violent snowstorm which lasted all night and far into the next day had made the streets and sidewalks almost impassable, and the strong wind that had heaped the snow into drifts kept on blowing after the feathery flakes had ceased falling. From the snug warmth of the living room the outer world looked very wintry, and Ted's mother protested as he made ready to go for his papers.

"Ted! You're not going out on your route this stormy afternoon? Your customers won't be expecting you a day like this. It's not as though you were grown up, you know."

Ted turned in surprise at her protest. "Why, Mamma," he said, "of course I'll have to go! Folks will be expecting me, because, you see, this is my job."

Mrs. Crosby looked deep into her boy's earnest face, then said quietly, "Forgive me, Ted. You are right. It is your job and you must attend to it."

A few minutes later she stood at the window and watched Ted as he wallowed through the big drifts on the corner.

"I hate to see him go out into such a storm, but I'm glad that he has such a strong sense of responsibility," she thought.

Ted came home wet through, but happy.

"Just think, Mother, at the Grosvenor house, Mr. Grosvenor came to the door himself. He said he didn't think I'd get around with the paper, and that I was a plucky boy to come through such a storm. I told him I had to, because it was my job, and he laughed and looked kind of funny. And he gave me ten cents so I could take the car home when I was through. But I didn't; I walked all the way, so I have the dime for something else."

The master of the Grosvenor house did look "kind of funny" as he returned to his library after his few words with Ted. A friend sat waiting for him there, and the two had been discussing for some time the course that Mr. Grosvenor ought to take in regard to a bad tangle that had developed in the business from which he was just retiring after a presidency of several years.

"I think you would be very foolish to load that upon yourself Grosvenor," his friend argued earnestly. "It is nothing that you were personally responsible for, and if you wait to straighten it out, you will have to postpone your trip to California at least a month, and perhaps two. Let the fellows who caused the mix-up straighten it out."

Mr. Grosvenor regarded him thoughtfully. "I had almost brought myself to look at it from your point of view, Cummings. But, and I suppose you'll laugh at me when I tell you that youngster who brought my paper just now somehow gave me a new light on it. I thought he was a pretty plucky fellow to get out in such a storm and told him so, but he wasn't keen about compliments—said of course he had to, because it was 'his job'. I tell you, Cummings, the more I think about this matter, the more I feel that it is my job. I'm not to blame personally for the tangle, but it happened during my term as president, and I feel responsible. I'm better prepared to straighten it out than anybody else, and if I take hold of it, I shall feel more comfortable about certain innocent people who have accidentally got mixed up in the affair. I've been trying to dodge it, Cummings, but there's no doubt at all that it is my place to do it, and I'm going at it."

On his toilsome way home, John Cummings turned over in his mind the conversation of the afternoon.

"I guess Grosvenor was right. I tried to argue against him, because I hated to see him disappointed in his California trip, but after all, it is his job, and there will be several people who will be greatly relieved to see him take hold of it."

At home he found a letter awaiting him, over which he knit his brows.

"Another letter from the trustees of Fairoaks College," he explained to his wife. "They still urge me to accept the presidency of the college."

"It's not a question to be decided lightly, John," his wife said slowly. "It will mean hard work, for you know as well as I do how run down the college is. It will take you away from your friends, and from the advantages that we have in a city of this size. It will put you back into the harness at a time of life when you should be having more leisure for enjoyment."

Her husband looked up at her smilingly. "All very true, my dear. But I can't help feeling, somehow, it would be wrong for me to try to dodge it."

"I believe you are right, John," his wife said with kindling enthusiasm, when he had told her the story of Ted's loyalty to his job, and of how his friend Grosvenor had been influenced by it. "I am sure you can do a great work for Fairoaks College, and I'm not going to make any more objections."

John Cummings laughed softly. "Funny," he said, "how that plucky youngster this afternoon has influenced Grosvenor and me in two rather important decisions!"—Christian Observer.

THE PRINCESS AT CORNWALL.

Sir Lie Flat, Sir Sit Straight, Sir Stand Tall
Were three knights who once lived in Cornwall.
One good knight, I think it was Lie Flat,
Had "Teaching" inscribed on the door mat.
Next day, when they'd all gone but Sit Straight,
The King's carriage rolled up in great state.
"Sir Sit Straight," the King said, "do you guess
You Knights could instruct our dear Princess?"
Amazed, the good Sit Straight declared that
The Knights could not spin, sew nor yet tat.
"Her highness can shame all beholders,
With seams; but you should see her shoulders;
Her chest, too," the King said, "is hollow;
I wish she would your teaching follow."
Sir Lie Flat, Sir Sit Straight, Sir Stand Tall
Made room for Her Highness in Cornwall.
Sir Sit Straight encouraged her backbone
To stiffen as straight as the King's throne.
"Two pillows, you can't have," said Lie Flat.
"'Tis only the movies allow that.'
Sir Stand Tall had her puff her chest out,
Her shoulders push backl ike a Girl Scout.
When she was again by the King seen,
She carried herself like a real queen.
But: Children need not go to Cornwall,
To lie flat, to sit straight, to stand tall.

—Hygeia.

IN FAR JAPAN.

The boys and girls in far Japan
Live in a lovely land,
Their dress is queer, their talk I fear
You would not understand.

Small baby tied on sister's back
Goes out with her to play.
She tumbles down and hits his crown
Then loves the hurt away.

Now, boys and girls in every land
Though talk and dress and game,
May differ, yet their little hearts
Are very much the same.

Through their good schools they're growing wise;
Their games will make them strong;
But without God they'll never know
The glad redemption song.

For they know not the love of God
Nor how our Saviour said:
"Let little children come to me:
My lambs you will have fed."

So, children, you who know so well
The love of God to man,
Should work and pray and send the news
To children in Japan.

—Mary Wilson Buchanan.

Christianity is not worth the snap of your finger, brotherhood is a fiction, sonship with the Eternal is a myth, unless it makes men love men. To put the matter more concretely, unless you and I love men and do by them as we would that they should do by us, we are not the sons of God.—Alexander Lewis.

God can find a safe refuge for His servants in most unlikely circumstances; and when faith seems to fail, when most we might have expected it, God will show that He has His own where least we would look for them.—Dr. Edersheim.

LOVE---The Motive; EVANGELIZATION---The Result of the Church's Program

The Sombol of the Program Is the Cross

The Program is a schedule of endeavor. It represents, in terms of action, the acceptance by the Church of its obligation to carry the Gospel to all mankind.

The Every Member Canvass (November 25-December 9, 1928,) is the method for freeing the motive and expressing it.

The Canvass is an effort to enroll the interest, sympathy, and love of every member of the Church, and to have them express these things in gladness of service and generosity of giving.

The authority for it is St. Paul's injunction:

> "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."

There you see we have every member, the systematic plan of laying up for the work of the Church every week, and the principle to guide; not what some one else is giving, but as God hath prospered.

The Parish Canvass that presents the Cross, not the dollar mark, is the Canvass that succeeds.

By ZENOBIA BIRD

Do you sometimes long to awaken an interest in spiritual things in that thoughtless, pleasure-loving group of young people? They are so charming and delightful, but it is hard to get them to listen and to think of things spiritual and eternal.

But they will read a story every time, provided it is interesting enough to hold them. This one is! They will thank you for it, and will read it to the last word.

Death

BLACKSTONE: Entered into life eternal, September 29, 1928, THOMAS WISE BLACKSTONE, JR., son of Thos W. and Sarah P. W. Blackstone, aged thirty-three years. Funeral from St. James Church, Accomack Court House, Virginia, Monday, October 1, at 11 A. M.

MISS MARIETTA WISE.

Entered into life eternal on June 23, 1928, at her old home, "Woodbourne", Accomack, Virginia, that she loved so dearly, MARIETTA WISE, only child of Capt. George D. Wise and Marietta Atkinson.

Endowed by God with a rare intellect and a beautiful voice, she attracted to her young and old, and gave to those left in her care an unselfish devotion seldom seen. From her warm, generous heart love fell like God's sunshine.

It is therefore Resolved by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. James Chuch, that while by the death of this beloved woman our hearts sorrow, yet we rejoice in the memory of a faithful friend whose personal charm and loving kindness were bountiful and never failing.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

At the recent diocesan convention of South Carolina, at Florence, the executive departments for the current year were organized, with the Rev. A. S. Thomas, Chairman of Missions, and two clerical and two lay associates on the committee; department of Religious Education, with the Rev. H. W. Starr, Chairman, and two clerical and three lay associates, two of them women; Christian Social Service, the Rev. O. T. Porcher, Chairman, one clerical associate, one layman, one doctor and Miss Emma McCabe, of Beaufort; Finance, William Godrey, Chairman, and four laymen; Publicity, the Rev. S. Cary Beckwith, Chairman, one clerical and three women associates; Field Department, O. T. Waring Chairman, with three clerical associates, two laymen and two women.

The Council of Colored Churchmen.

The nineteenth annual council of Colored Churchmen of the Diocese of South Carolina convened at Calvary Church, Charleston, Thursday evening, September 27, at 8:15 P. M.

The opening service was a special meeting of Colored Woman's Auriliary of the diocese. The rector of the parish, Archdeacon Baskervill, assited by the Rev. C. A. Harrison and Lay Reader W. H. Sinkler, read the service. The Rev. W. B. Crittenden, D. D., General Secretary, preached the sermon.

The morning service of the twenty-eighth was a memorial service for the late Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, and celebration of the Holy Communion. The preacher and celebrant for this service was the Bishop-elect, the Rev. A. S. Thomas, rector of St. Michael's Church, who preached a beautiful and instructive sermon, and paid touching tribute to our beloved Bishop.

Present at this service were two sons of the late bishop, the Rev. Sumner Guerry and Mr. Edward Guerry. A letter was received from Mrs. Guerry regretting her inability to be present on account of illness, and also from the Rev. Moultrie Guerry expressing his regrets at not being able to be present, on account of a previous engagement.

In the afternoon, Archdeacon Baskervill in his report gave a full survey of the Colored work in the diocese, showing the substantial spiritual and material progress made in the work in recent years under the administration of the late Bishop Guerry.

The council was well attended, all things being considered, some of its members having been detained by the prevailing high water.

The discussions were very helpful and especially is this true as to the address of Dr. R. S. Wilkinson on "Bricks Without Straw".

It was to be noted that the laymen entered more largely into the discussions than formerly, a fact which is very gratifying.

Of course, the women of the Woman's Auxiliary had a splendid meeting, in which they made plans for their future activities.

The Council was splendidly entertained by the members of Calvary Church and their friends.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Another special convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of electing a bishop coadjutor, has been called for Tuesday, December 18, in Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, by Bishop Garland.

The call for this convention was made necessary by the refusal of Bishop Edward M. Cross, of Spokane, to accept the election as coadjutor, following a special convention called for that purpose, which met October 2.

ORDINATIONS.

In Holy Trinity Church, Spokane, Wash., September 26, Donald Glazebrook was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross. The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. A. Palmer. The Rev. E. R. Allman preached the sermon. Mr. Glazebrook will be in charge of Sunnyside and Prasser Missions, Washington. His address will be Sunnyside, Wash.

On the Sevententh Sunday after Trinity, September 30, 1928, the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Lyle George Kilvington, assistant at St. Paul's, presented by the Rev. Charles T. Wright, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Memphis; the Rev. Charles Boyd Romaine, in charge of St. Paul's Church, Franklin, and Grace Church, Spring Hill, presented by the Rev. Charles L. Wells, Ph. D., Dean of the Sewanee Theological School; and the Rev. Robert Wayne Jackson, in charge of St. Peter's Church, Nashville, presented by the Rev. Erle H. Merriman, D. D., professor in the DuBose Memorial School. The sermon was by the Rev. Edmund P. Dandridge, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Nashville. The Rev. James R. Sharp, Secretary of the Diocese, served as chaplain to the Bishop. The Preface to the Ordinal was read by the Rev. R. M. Kirkland, of the Sewanee Theological School, the Call to the Priesthood by the Rev. Ralph J. Kendall, of Eutaw, Ala., the Litany by the Rev. James R. Helms, vicar of Thankful Memorial Church, St. Elmo, the Epistle by the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., Dean of the DuBose Memorial School, and the Gospel by the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga. All the priests named, with the Rev. Arthur G. Wilson, rector of Christ Church, Chattanooga, united in the Imposition of Hands.

On Saturday morning, October 6, at St. John's Church, Boonton, N. J., the Rev. L. Harold Hinrichs was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Stearly. Mr. Hinrichs was presented by the Rev.

A HYMN FOR THE RURAL CHURCH.

(Written for the Rural Life Department of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, Tune "Duke Street" or "Gratitude".)

O Thou Who workest hitherto
Through sun and rain, in flock or tree,
We sow and reap and plow anew,
Rejoicing thus to work with Thee.

We meet Thee in our fertile fields.
We see Thee in the brooding sky;
Thou givest what our tillage yields;
Our happy homes reveal Thee nigh.

O Thou Whose rest is evermore,
Transcending all that Thou hast made,
We, on our day of rest, adore
And feel Thy presence, unafraid!

Our hearts respond to throbbing bell;
Our souls rise like the eager spire;
We gather in these walls to tell
Thy boundless love, our deep desire.

Like Him Who in unselfish toil
Revealed on earth the life divine,
May we revere the very soil,
And serve in love each child of Thine!

With Thee Who openest Thy hand
To satisfy all living things,
We feed the cities of our land;
Their rivers have with us their springs.

Redeem our rural life from care,
From blindness to its mission high!
May all who sow plow first with prayer!
May all who harvest know Thee nigh!

—Edward T. Root.

Through the gates of forgiveness we enter a new world, out from darkness into light, out from coldness into warmth, out from evil into good, out from indifference into Love, out from the illusion into the Real.—Richard Whitwell.

Every piece of work which is not as good as you can make it, in which you have palmed off imperfect, meagerly thought, niggardly in execution, upon mankind; every hasty or slovenly performance should rise up against you in the court of your own heart and condemn you for a thief.—R. L. Stevenson.

DOMINUS FRUSTRA ISIN 1835

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 3, 1928. No. 44.

PRAYER AND COMMON SENSE

There is much in the Bible about people who do not pray with common sense. Our Lord spoke of hypocrites and heathen, who prayed without good judgment. To pray wisely we must pray in the light of the teaching of the Word of God.

I.

It is common sense to make sure that we are true disciples of Jesus Christ. The first thing for one to do, who would prevail in prayer, is to come to Jesus, in faith, receiving Him as SAVIOUR and LORD. To be in CHRIST is the foundation of all true prayer.

II.

It is common sense to observe the conditions attached to the promises. For the strengthening of our faith we should think much on the promises and concentrate our attention on the conditions governing their fulfilment. The condition attached is a vital part of every promise. Knowing this, we must seek grace and strength from God to meet the condition.

III.

It is also common sense to depend, not upon the words of our prayers, but upon the sincere heart-desire of our prayers. Unquestionably thousands of prayers are offered that are not prayers at all. They are mere words. Those who thus "pray," if asked five minutes after what it was they prayed for, would be confused. Words, in the Bible sense, in a Christian sense, are not necessarily prayers. When George Muller prayed, as he frequently did, that the many hundreds of children in his orphanage might be clothed and have enough to eat, he knew what he was praying for. Thus definite all prayer should be. In the Scriptures emphasis is placed upon heart-desire. Jesus "answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." They offered long prayers. "Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." To His disciples Jesus said: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

It is, therefore, common sense to depend, not upon the words of our prayers, but upon the desire that is back of our words. Christian disciples who will survey their past prayer life are likely to discover that their answers have come when there was an eager heart-desire in their prayers. I do not recall any answer to prayer which I have had that has not sprung from a great desire of heart. A Kempis said, "Life touched by God turns its glance within." It does. When the Spirit of God is working, we search our own hearts and become less critical of other people. We become strong for self-examination. We judge ourselves. We scan our motives. We test our life by the One Perfect Life. We place no dependence upon prayers that are solely words. We give strict heed to the conditions which accompany God's promises.

IV.

Furthermore, it is common sense to consider beforehand what we intend to pray for. The more forethought and preparation of heart we put into our prayers, the better. George Muller took long periods of time to prepare himself for prayer. He would pray often before he would announce any contemplated plan of action. He first endeavored to make sure that the thing he intended praying for was according to the will of God. Through the Scripture he saw that he must prepare for prayer, and take time to discover the will of God. He acted upon the teaching of 1 John 5:14, "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us." Time spent in searching the Scripture and in prayerful meditation, that the will of God may be clearly known, will pay large dividends in answered prayers.
